Transferee without Notice.—One who has received accommodation paper even after it has been diverted from its contemplated purpose, without notice of the diversion, in good faith and for value, is entitled to recover thereon.²

One Taking Diverted Paper Releases Accommodation Party.—In Gilman v. New Orleans, etc., R. Co., 72 Ala. 581, Brickell, C. J., said: "Whoever takes accommodation paper with knowledge that the terms and conditions upon which the accommodation was given are being violated, whoever participates in the diversion of the paper to other objects or uses than such as were intended when the paper was made, unless fraud is imputed, must be understood to relieve the party giving the accommodation from all liability, whatever liability the party with whom he deals may incur."

Diversion of Bill Discounted at Usurious Interest.—One who discounts an accommodation bill at a usurious rate of interest is not a bona fide holder, and is chargeable with notice of a diversion of the paper. Carlisle v. Hill, 16 Ala. 398.

Washington—Purchaser with Notice.—The effect of the decision in Peters v. Gay, 9 Wash. 383, would seem to be that a purchaser for value before maturity with notice of a diversion may recover upon the instrument, in that state.

Bank Crediting Person with Proceeds of Accommodation Paper.—The formal discounting of an accommodation note by a bank, and passing the proceeds upon the books of the bank to the credit of the person presenting the instrument, does not make the bank a holder for value as against accommodation parties to diverted paper. New York Sixth Nat. Bank v. Lorillard Brick Works Co. (Super. Ct.), 18 N. Y. Supp. 861; Platt v. Chapin, 49 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 318. But see Pacific Bank v. Mitchell, 9 Met. (Mass.) 297; Buffalo First Nat. Bank v. Wood, 71 N. Y. 411.

Notice of Diversion Subsequently Obtained.—The pledgee of diverted accommodation paper for an antecedent debt, after having notice of the fraud practised upon the maker in its diversion, cannot by contract with the fraudulent indorser acquire any new rights as against the maker. Watson v. Cabot Bank, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 423.

Trover for Diverted Accommodation Paper.—It is a general rule that a person who puts in circulation negotiable paper of another and thereby renders that other liable to pay the same to a bona fide holder, is guilty of a tort and is liable in an action of trover. Metropolitan El. R. Co. v. Kneeland, 120 N. Y. 134. See also the title TROVER, in ENCYC. OF PLEADING AND PRACTICE.

So the maker of an accommodation note may maintain an action of trover against one who has fraudulently converted the same and thereby rendered him liable thereon. Decker v. Mathews, 12 N. Y. 313, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 439. See Evans v. Kymer, 1 B. & Ad. 528, 20 E. C. L. 437.

And where the accommodation party holds a note which has already served its purpose and become functus officio, upon which he may wrongfully render the accommodation party liable, the latter may maintain trover therefor. Park v. McDaniels, 37 Vt. 594.

VI. PRESENTMENT AND NOTICE—Accommodation Drawer or Indorser Entitled to Notice.

An accommodation drawer or indorser is entitled to demand the same diligence of the holder as if the instrument had been drawn or indorsed for value. He is therefore entitled to demand and notice.¹

Accommodated Party not Entitled to Notice.—But if the indorser or drawer is the party for whose accommodation the instrument was signed, he is not entitled to notice, because he is not entitled to any remedy over against the prior parties.²

Indorser Who Knows that the Drawer is not Entitled to Notice.—In Virginia it has been held that where the drawer of a bill has no funds in the hands of the drawee, and has no right to draw upon him, and no reason to suppose that he will accept the bill, and one who has full knowledge of these facts indorses for the accommodation of the drawer, there is so far an element of fraud in the transaction that the case will be taken out of the general rule and notice to the indorser will be unnecessary. Farmers' Bank v. Vanmeter, 4 Rand. (Va.) 553.

Security Held by Indorser.—The accommodation indorser is entitled to notice although he holds ample security to indemnify himself against the loss in consequence of the responsibilities he assumes. Holland v. Turner, 10 Conn. 308; Oswego v. Knowler, Hill & D. Supp. (N. Y.) 122.

The question of the effect of security taken by the indorser is, however, wider than accommodation paper, and the cases are not in accord. See the title BILLS AND NOTES.

Maker or Acceptor Insolvent.—The accommodation drawer or indorser is entitled to due notice although the acceptor or maker is known to be insolvent. Nicholson v. Gouthit, 2 H. Bl. 609; Denny v. Palmer, 5 Ired. (N. Car.) 610. But see Morris v. Gardner, 1 Cranch (C. C.) 213, and, generally, the title BILLS AND NOTES.

Accommodation Indorser Paying without Notice.

—The accommodation indorser may at maturity take up the instrument without waiting for demand and notice, and he may then sue the acceptor or maker upon the instrument as holder thereof, for the holder has a right to waive presentment and notice. Stanley v. McElrath, 86 Cal. 449; Pinney v. Gregory, 102 Mass. 186; Sleigh v. Sleigh, 5 Exch. 514. See Ellsworth v. Brewer, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 316.

But if he makes only part payment without waiting for demand and notice, his only remedy is for money paid upon the implied contract of indemnity, and as the implied contract of indemnity is that the maker or acceptor will indemnify, if the indorser is compelled to pay upon the maker's or acceptor's default, the indorser cannot recover of the maker or acceptor, since his payment has been voluntary. Sleigh v. Sleigh, 5 Exch. 514.

Indorser before Delivery.—It seems that in Connecticut a stranger who indorses an instrument before delivery, being liable as a guarantor, is not entitled to notice. Clark v. Merriam, 25 Conn. 576. So in Ohio. Castle v. Rickly, 44 Ohio St. 490, 58 Am. Rep. 839.

Waiver of Notice by Partner.—One partner cannot waive notice so as to bind his copartners in respect to an accommodation indorsement by the firm, inasmuch as in respect to the accommodation indorsement they are not copartners. Baer v. Leppert, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 516.

2. England.—Sharp v. Bailey, 9 B. & C. 44, 17 E. C. L. 329; Lafitte v. Slater, 6 Bing. 623, 19 E. C. L. 181; Fitzgerald v. Williams, 6 Bing. N. Cas. 68, 37 E. C. L. 281. See Collott v. Haigh, 3 Campb. 281.

Demand of Accommodation Drawer or Indorser.—It need hardly be said that the accommodation acceptor of a bill of exchange, or the accommodation maker of a note, cannot claim that demand should be made of the party accommodated, the drawer, or indorser, and notice of the latter's failure to pay be given to him.¹

VII. EXTINGUISHMENT—Payment, when Extinguishment Generally.—It is the general rule that payment, in order to extinguish a bill or note, must be made by the party ultimately liable thereon, and that payment by a drawer or indorser does not defeat or reduce the holder's right of recovery.² The rights of the parties are worked out under this rule by considering the holder who has thus recovered from the acceptor or maker the whole amount of the instrument as a trustee pro tanto for the drawer or indorser, from whom he has previously received payment, and who himself has his remedy over against the maker or acceptor.³ These principles are modified in the case of accommodation paper, because the real relation of the parties and their rights inter se differ from the rights and relations of parties to ordinary business paper.

Payment by Accommodated Party is Extinguishment.—Payment by the party accommodated, whether drawer or indorser, at or after maturity, is a complete discharge of accommodation paper, and extinguishes the holder's right of action against the maker or acceptor thereon, or the right of the drawer or indorser who has so paid to reissue the instrument.⁴

Special Damage—Burden of Proof.—If the drawer alleges special damage as a result of his not having received notice of the dishonor of the bill by the accommodation acceptor, the burden of proof is upon him to prove special damage. Fitzgerald v. Williams, 6 Bing. N. Cas. 68, 37 E. C. L. 281.

When Accommodated Drawer Entitled to Notice.—It is not enough to relieve the holder from the necessity of giving notice to the drawer that the acceptance was for the latter's accommodation; and if, although the bill was accepted for his accommodation, the drawer have funds in the hands of the acceptor at maturity, though insufficient to pay the whole amount of the bill, he is entitled to notice of dishonor. Lacoste v. Harper, 3 La. Ann. 385, 48 Am. Dec. 449.

Reissue.—In Lazarus v. Cowie, 3 Q. B. 459, it was held that where a bill is accepted for the accommodation of the drawer, and is by the latter negotiated before maturity, and paid by him at maturity, and afterwards reissued, such reissue is the issue of a new bill and requires a new stamp. The same point was before the Court of Common Pleas in Jewell v. Parr, 13 C. B. 909, 76 E. C. L. 909; and the case of Lazarus v. Cowie, 3 Q. B. 459, was doubted by Jervis, C.J.

Reason for Rule.—The reason for this is that payment by the accommodated party is payment by the party ultimately liable,¹ and that the theory of trust-

This case was afterwards before the Exchequer Chamber (Parr v. Jewell, 16 C. B. 684, 81 E. C. L. 684), and although the decision turned upon another point, it seems from the remarks of the judges in reply to the arguments of the counsel for the defendant in error that the court was inclined to consider a payment by the drawer, under the circumstances, as extinguishing the bill for all purposes. Thus Parke, B., said: "If the bill had been paid by the acceptor there could have been no doubt, and surely the payment by one who, as between themselves, is ultimately liable to pay the bill, must be the same thing."

In Pyper v. McKay, 16 U. C. C. P. 67, it was held that where a note had been paid at maturity by the accommodated party and re-issued thereafter, it was invalid. "Payment," said A. Wilson, J., "is one of the equities which attach to an accommodation note after it is due." See supra, this title, Transfer after Maturity.

Recovery.—A doubt was expressed by Williams, J., in Cook v. Lister, 32 L. J. C. P. 121, 13 C. B. N. S. 543, 106 E. C. L. 543, 9 Jur. N. S. 823, whether the general proposition that payment by the accommodation party extinguishes the instrument is correct unless this qualification be added to it,—supposing the holder has notice that the bill was an accommodation bill at the time of payment. He said: "My difficulty consists in seeing how, if the holder of a bill is not aware when he receives the money from the drawer that the bill is an accommodation bill, he can be regarded as having accepted the money in satisfaction of his claim as against the acceptor." But the limitation suggested, even if admitted, would leave the holder but a right to nominal damages. Further on in the same opinion, after noticing that in the case of ordinary business paper the holder may recover the whole amount of the instrument from the acceptor although he has received part payment from the drawer or indorser, it is said: "But a totally different consideration arises where, by reason of its being an accommodation bill, it is impossible to look at the holder, supposing he was allowed to recover the whole amount, as holding that difference as trustee for the drawer. Therefore it seems to me that where it appears that the bill sued on is an accommodation bill, even supposing that the holder had no notice of it at the time he received payment from the drawer, yet that payment must be taken in mitigation of damages, and that the holder can recover no more than the difference between the amount of the bill and that payment."

But it would seem that by the weight of authority payment by the party accommodated completely destroys the holder's right of action, and does not merely reduce it to a right to sue for nominal damages. Lazarus v. Cowie, 3 Q. B. 459; Pyper v. McKay, 16 U. C. C. P. 67; Blenn v. Lyford, 70 Me. 149.

And it has been held that payment by the accommodated party, the payee, extinguishes the note, although the holder had no notice of the relations of the parties. Merrill v. San Diego First Nat. Bank, 94 Cal. 59.

The English law upon this whole subject is now settled by the Bills of Exchange Act (45 and 46 Vict., c. 61), § 59 (3) of which provides that "where an accommodation bill is paid in due course by the party accommodated, the bill is discharged."

Manner of Payment.—An agreement made with the holder of a note, by one for whose accommodation it was made, to pay in a specific manner, inures, when executed, to the benefit of the holder. Farmers', etc., Bank v. Sherman, 6 Bosw. (N. Y.) 181. See Merrill v. San Diego First Nat. Bank, 94 Cal. 59.

So an agreement that the note should be considered paid if a general balance of accounts between the holder and the party accommodated turns out in the latter's favor to the amount of the note. Roche v. Kempt, 33 U. C. Q. B. 387.

Taking the note of the accommodated party in full satisfaction is a discharge of the accommodation acceptor. Sard v. Rhodes, 1 M. & W. 153.

If it is shown upon the trial of an action brought against the accommodation maker of a promissory note that the plaintiff, in consideration of the conveyance to him by the maker and the indorser of the note of other security for the indebtedness to which such note was collateral, agreed with the indorser, for whose benefit the note was made, to surrender the same (of which agreement the accommodation maker had knowledge), but failed to do so, the action is not maintainable against the accommodation maker. Flour City Nat. Bank v. McKay, 86 Hun (N. Y.) 15, 33 N. Y. Supp. 365.

Where the holder of a bill of exchange, accepted for the accommodation of the drawer, sent it to a bank for collection, and the bank, when the bill came to maturity, passed the amount thereof to the credit of the holder, it was held that this was not such a payment as would discharge the acceptor, but that the bank succeeded to the right of the holder, and might maintain an action on the bill against the acceptor. Pacific Bank v. Mitchell, 9 Met. (Mass.) 297.

Payment before Maturity.—But payment by the party accommodated, before maturity, does not extinguish the instrument. Thus an accommodation note which has once been discounted and afterward taken up by the party accommodated may be transferred to a third party before maturity, discharged of the equities existing between the original parties, notwithstanding the second indorser has, at the time of such transfer, knowledge of the fact that it is accommodation paper and has been once indorsed and taken up. Washington Bank v. Krum, 15 Iowa 53.

1. Lazarus v. Cowie, 3 Q. B. 459; Parr v. Jewell, 16 C. B. 684, 81 E. C. L. 684.

teenship upon which a recovery by the holder in the case of ordinary business paper is supported is not applicable, since when the party accommodated has paid the instrument he has no right of action against the maker or acceptor, and the recovery could not be considered as inuring to his benefit pro tanto.¹

Part Payment by Party Accommodated.—Accommodation paper is also extinguished pro tanto by a part payment made by the party accommodated.²

ACCOMPANY.—This term is not equivalent to "annexed."³

Bankruptcy.—Where the drawer or indorser, the accommodated party, becomes bankrupt, the holder who has received part payment from the accommodation acceptor or maker may prove for the full amount of his debt, but he is entitled to dividends only to the extent of the difference between what he has actually received and his debt; the surplus he holds as trustee for the accommodation maker or acceptor. Downing v. Traders' Bank, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 136. See In re Howard, 12 Fed. Cas., p. 625, No. 6750; In re Baxter, 2 Fed. Cas., p. 1045, No. 1120. Compare In re Hicks, 12 Fed. Cas., p. 113, No. 6456.

3. For example, the Massachusetts statutes relating to the extradition of fugitives from justice required that sworn evidence should accompany the demand of a governor of another state; and in Kingsbury's Case, 106 Mass. 223, it was held that this did not require that the proof should be annexed to the requisition.

I. DEFINITION.—An accomplice is strictly defined as one who is associated with others in the commission of a crime, all being principals. But the term is used frequently to include all the participants in a crime, whether as principals or accessories.¹

Misdemeanors.—It is as applicable to the participants in misdemeanors as in felonies.²

1. Bouv. L. Dict. 21; Harris v. State, 7 Lea (Tenn.) 124; House v. State, 16 Tex. App. 25.

Includes All Participants in Crime.—Principals in the second degree are sometimes termed accomplices, but this appellation will not serve as a term of definition, as it includes all the participes criminis, whether they are considered in strict legal propriety as principals in the first or second degree, or merely as accessories before or after the fact. People, 47 Ill. 152, 95 Am. Dec. 474; Johnson v. State, 2 Ind. 652; Lindsay v. People, 63 N. Y. 153; State v. Odell, 8 Oregon 33; Barrara v. State, 42 Tex. 263; House v. State, 16 Tex. App. 25; Zollicoffer v. State, 16 Tex. App. 312; Harrison v. State, 17 Tex. App. 442.

Other Definitions.—In People v. Bolanger, 71 Cal. 19, an accomplice is defined (citing Whart. Cr. Ev. 440) as "one who knowingly, voluntarily, and with common intent with the principal offender unites in the commission of a crime."

To the same effect are Clapp v. State, 94 Tenn. 186; State v. Roberts, 15 Oregon 197; State v. Light, 17 Oregon 360; State v. Umble, 115 Mo. 461.

In People v. Smith, 28 Hun (N. Y.) 626, an accomplice was defined to be "a person involved either directly or indirectly in the commission of the crime. To render him such he must in some manner aid or assist or participate in the criminal act, and by that connection he becomes equally involved in guilt with the other party by reason of the criminal transaction."

2. See People v. Smith, 28 Hun (N. Y.) 626; Davidson v. State, 33 Ala. 350; Reg. v. Farler, 8 C. & P. 106, 34 E. C. L. 314; and infra,

Use of the Term.—The word is employed principally in the law of evidence, not as denoting any special degree of guilt or any particular connection with the crime committed; but as applying generally to those participants in the crime who are admitted to give evidence against their fellow criminals.¹

II. WHO IS AN ACCOMPLICE—General Test.—The test in general to determine whether a witness is or is not an accomplice is the inquiry: Could the witness himself have been indicted for the offense either as principal or as accessory? ² If he could not be so indicted, he is not an accomplice.³

Persons Morally Guilty, but Not Indictable.—It follows that a participant in an offense, however morally guilty he may be, whose connection with the forbidden transaction does not render him liable to an indictment therefor, is not an accomplice. Thus:

Abortion.—A woman who submits to an operation or who uses means to produce an abortion, is not an accomplice of the person performing the operation or employing or furnishing the means.⁴

Purchasing Articles the Sale of Which is Forbidden.—One purchasing liquor sold in violation of law is not an accomplice of the vendor; ⁵ nor is one who buys lot-

1. In Cross v. People, 47 Ill. 152, 95 Am. Dec. 474, Breese, C.J., said: "Another definition of an accomplice is, one of many equally concerned in a felony, the term being generally applied to those who are admitted to give evidence against their fellow criminals for the furtherance of justice which might otherwise be eluded."

In the Texas Penal Code, § 79, the term "accomplice" is so defined as to make it the equivalent of accessory before the fact at common law. Cook v. State, 14 Tex. App. 101; Smith v. State, 13 Tex. App. 507.

But in the law of evidence the word is used in the ordinary accepted sense as defined in the text. Barrara v. State, 42 Tex. 260, Irvin v. State, 1 Tex. App. 301; House v. State, 16 Tex. App. 33.

2. Bass v. State, 37 Ala. 469; Dunn v. People, 29 N. Y. 523, 86 Am. Dec. 319.

The Fact that the Witness is Jointly Indicted with another does not establish that he is an accomplice with that other in the commission of the offense wherewith they stand charged, but the question is one for the jury. State v. Schlagel, 19 Iowa 169; Downard v. Com. (Ky., 1891), 17 S. W. Rep. 439. See Craft v. State, 3 Kan. 478.

The Converse of the Rule laid down in the text seems not to hold. Thus, persons present at and sanctioning a prize fight where one of the combatants is killed are guilty of manslaughter as principals in the second degree, and yet they are not such accomplices as require their evidence to be confirmed if they are called as witnesses against other parties charged with manslaughter. Rex v. Hargrave, 5 C. & P. 170, 24 E. C. L. 260.

Seduction.—An indictment for seduction under promise of marriage cannot be sustained upon the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecutrix, for the woman in such a case is a particeps criminis. Polk v. State, 40 Ark. 484. But see People v. Powell, 4 N. Y. Cr. Rep. 586.

Incest.—In a prosecution for incest the female is deemed equally guilty with the male if she knowingly and willingly unites with him in the commission of the crime, and her testimony ought to be corroborated in order to convict him. State v. Jarvis, 18 Oregon 360; Blanchette v. State, 29 Tex. App. 47; Dodson v. State, 24 Tex. App. 514; Mercer v. State, 17 Tex. App. 452; Freeman v. State, 11 Tex. App. 92; Cesar v. State (Tex. See also the title ABORTION.

One who accompanies a pregnant woman to a place in order that she may have an operation to produce an abortion performed is not an accomplice. Com. v. Drake, 124 Mass. 21.

But the patient submitting to an abortion is in a moral point of view implicated in the transaction, and this is a proper circumstance for the jury to consider in determining her credibility. Com. v. Wood, 11 Gray (Mass.) 85; Com. v. Brown, 121 Mass. 69; Watson v. State, 9 Tex. App. 237.

tery tickets an accomplice of him who sells them where their sale is forbidden.¹

Bribery.—Upon a prosecution for giving a bribe, the person bribed is not an accomplice requiring corroboration.²

Criminal Intent.—Criminal intent is a necessary ingredient of crime, and is essential to render one an accomplice.³ It follows that where this element is absent one is not an accomplice. This principle is illustrated in a variety of cases. Thus:

Mere Spectators.—One who is merely present at the commission of a crime, but in no way aids or participates therein, is not an accomplice.⁴

Duress.—A child who participates in a criminal offense under threats and coercion is not an accomplice;⁵ nor is one who, through fear, conceals the commission of a crime.⁶

Shaw, C. J., said: "It is difficult to draw any precise line of distinction between the cases in which the law holds it a misdemeanor to counsel, entice, or induce another to commit a crime, and where it does not. In general, it has been considered as applying to cases of felony, though it has been held that it does not depend upon the mere legal and technical distinction between felony and misdemeanor. One consideration, however, is manifest in all the cases, and that is, that the offense proposed to be committed by the counsel, advice, or enticement of another, is of a high and aggravated character, tending to breaches of the peace or other great disorder and violence, being what are usually considered mala in se or criminal in themselves, in contradistinction to mala prohibita, or acts otherwise indifferent than as they are restrained by positive law. All the cases cited in support of the objection of the witness are of this description. * * * A case depending upon a similar principle in our own books is that of Com. v. Harrington, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 26, in which it was held that to let a house to another, with an intent that it should be used and occupied for the purposes of prostitution, with the fact that it was so used, was a misdemeanor. The keeping of such a disorderly house has long been considered a high and aggravated offense, criminal in itself, tending to general disorder, breaches of the public peace, and of common nuisance to the community. It is in cases of this character only that the principle has been applied; but we know of no case where an act which, previously to the statute, was lawful or indifferent, is prohibited under a small specific penalty, and where the soliciting or inducing another to do the act, by which he may incur the penalty, is held to be in itself punishable. Such a case perhaps may arise, under peculiar circumstances, in which the principle of law, which in itself is a highly salutary one, will apply; but the court are all of the opinion that it does not apply to the case of one who, by purchasing spirituous liquor of an unlicensed person, does, as far as that act extends, induce that other to sell in violation of the statute."

For criminal intent generally see the title CRIMINAL LAW.

A common criminal intent with the perpetrator of the crime is necessary to render one an accessory before the fact, or an aider and abettor. See the titles ACCESSORY; AIDER AND ABETTOR.

It seems that a common criminal intent is necessary to render persons accomplices in a criminal act. See Stone v. State, 3 Tex. App. 675; Davidson v. State, 33 Ala. 350.

Breaking Jail.—Under a statute making it an offense to convey into a jail any instruments to enable one imprisoned on a charge of felony to escape, a prisoner within the jail who effected his escape by using the means conveyed into the jail by the defendant, the defendant's purpose being to facilitate the escape of his own brother who was confined therein on a criminal charge, was held not to be an accomplice of the defendant. Peeler v. State, 3 Tex. App. 533. See Ash v. State, 81 Ala. 76. Compare Hillman v. State, 50 Ark. 523.

4. Allen v. State, 74 Ga. 769; Lowery v. State, 72 Ga. 649.

On a trial for burning a jail a witness testified that on the night of the fire the defendant invited him to go and see him "upset the jail;" that he went and saw the defendant wrench the lock from the jail door and enter, and that the defendant afterwards confessed to him that he had burned the jail. It was held that such witness was not an accomplice. State v. Reader, 60 Iowa 527.

One who is a bystander while a murder is being committed, even though he mentally approves of the act, is not an accomplice. State v. Cox, 65 Mo. 29.

Innocently Concealing Stolen Property.—One is not an accomplice who innocently assists in concealing stolen property.²

Gaming.—Where persons play together at a gambling game, they have been held to have such a common criminal intent as makes them accomplices of one another;³ but one who is present where gaming is going on and occasionally aids an unskilful player is not an accomplice in the gambling.⁴ And one who plays at a game of tenpins without betting is not an accomplice of others betting at the same game.⁵

A Detective who Enters into Communication with criminals without any felonious intent, but for the purpose of discovering and making known their secret designs and crimes, and who acts throughout with this original purpose, is not to be regarded as an accomplice. The question whether he is so acting is one of fact for the jury. State v. McKean, 36 Iowa 343, 14 Am. Rep. 530.

If One Pretending by way of Artifice to be an accomplice, but believed by the accused to be a real accomplice, performs, at the instance of the owner of the goods, acts amounting to larceny, the pretended accomplice represents the owner as to such acts, and not the accused, although the accused may have concurred in such acts and thought he prompted them. Such acts cannot be imputed to the accused as legally criminal, inasmuch as they really proceed from the joint will of the owner and the accomplice, and not from the joint will of the accused and the accomplice. Williams v. State, 55 Ga. 391.

A Person Buying Lottery Tickets for the purpose of detecting and punishing the vendor where their sale is prohibited is not an accomplice. People v. Noelke, 94 N. Y. 137, 46 Am. Rep. 128, 1 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 495, 29 Hun (N. Y.) 461.

The Same is True of One Feigning Complicity in a larceny, People v. Barric, 49 Cal. 342; People v. Bolanger, 71 Cal. 17; and of one acting in concert with the police by purchasing counterfeit coin from one having such coin in his possession with intent to pass the same, People v. Farrell, 30 Cal. 316; also of one purchasing intoxicating liquors unlawfully sold, in order to obtain evidence, Com. v. Downing, 4 Gray (Mass.) 29; Com. v. Graves, 97 Mass. 114.

3. Gaming.—Davidson v. State, 33 Ala. 350; Bird v. State, 36 Ala. 279; State v. Quarles, 13 Ark. 307; State v. Light, 17 Oregon 358. But see Stone v. State, 3 Tex. App. 675.

In Davidson v. State, 33 Ala. 350, one who played with the defendant as an adversary at a certain game of cards called "poker" was held to be an accomplice of the defendant. Here Walker, J., said: "Our argument does not involve the position that adversaries in fact are accomplices in law. Antagonists in playing cards are not adversaries, as to the thing which constitutes the offense. * * * There is a perfect agreement among the players that each shall perform his part, and the strife between them is which shall do it most skilfully. If a community of purpose be necessary to constitute one an accomplice, our position is still maintainable. It would be absurd to contend that any other common object than to commit the offense was necessary to make one an accomplice with the accused. Those who play together at a game of cards have a common object to play at the game, and that is the offense. They have diverse objects to play with the greatest skill, and that does not constitute the offense. * * * They concur in the purpose to violate the law. They do not concur in the object to be accomplished by the violation. The offense is complete before it is known who will be the winner."

In Stone v. State, 3 Tex. App. 675, persons playing together at pool were held not to be accomplices. In this case Ector, P. J., said: "When several persons bet at a game of faro, pool, or monte, each is guilty of betting at a gaming-table or bank, exhibited for the purpose of gaming; not as principals and accomplices to each other, but as several, not joint, offenders. There is not that oneness of intent and oneness of offense between them to make them principals. No one of them is aiding or assisting another by acts or encouraging by words in the commission of the offense. Each acts independently for himself against the others, and without concert mediately or immediately with the other betters. An indictment charging them as joint, and not separate, offenders would be bad. The parties to the game of pool may change, and yet it not affect the defendants. Each one, as he takes part in the game and bets money on it, is guilty of a separate offense."

One who, though not actually playing, is in partnership with one of the players in his winnings or losses, and advances money to him to be used in betting, is an accomplice with those playing the game. English v. State, 35 Ala. 428.

4. Smith v. State, 37 Ala. 472.

5. Bass v. State, 37 Ala. 469.

But the dealer of a game of "stud poker" is an accomplice of those who bet money or value at such game. State v. Light, 17 Oregon 358.

Accessory after the Fact.—The authorities are not in accord as to whether an accessory after the fact is or is not an accomplice within the rule that the testimony of an accomplice should be corroborated.¹

Question for Jury.—If there is evidence tending to show that a witness is an accomplice, the question whether he is an accomplice or not must be submitted to the jury as a question of fact.² If, however, the prosecution admits that the witness is an accomplice, that admission is binding upon it and is conclusive for the purposes of the trial.³

III. ACCOMPLICE AS WITNESS—1. Competency.—Notwithstanding the common-law rule that persons interested in an inquiry were inadmissible as witnesses, an accomplice has never been regarded, as such, as incompetent; but his testimony may be received either against his associates in crime⁴ or in

1. Accessory After Fact as Accomplice.—The definition of an accomplice as given in standard text-books and generally approved by the courts includes an accessory after the fact. See supra, this title, Definition.

One who, with full knowledge that a crime has been committed, harbors the criminal, is an accomplice in his crime. Polk v. State, 36 Ark. 117. See Chitister v. State (Tex. Crim. App., 1894), 28 S. W. Rep. 683; Chumley v. State, 28 Tex. App. 87.

Contra.—Authorities are found, on the other hand, holding that an accessory after the fact is not an accomplice within the rule requiring the testimony of an accomplice to be corroborated. Lowery v. State, 72 Ga. 649; Allen v. State, 74 Ga. 769; State v. Umble, 115 Mo. 452; People v. Chadwick, 7 Utah 134.

A Receiver of Stolen Goods is an accessory of the thief who stole them. Rex v. Moores, 7 C. & P. 270, 32 E. C. L. 507; Rex v. Wells, M. & M. 326, 22 E. C. L. 324; *Reg. v. Compare, however, State v. Lee, 29 S. Car. 113.

In People v. Curlee, 53 Cal. 604, the court said: "At the trial the court, of its own motion, charged the jury that 'there is no evidence in this case tending to show that the witness Brown was an accomplice in the commission of the offense with which the defendant is charged.' This took wholly from the jury the question whether or not he was an accomplice, and the instruction was erroneous, if there was any evidence, however slight, tending to prove his complicity; and, as we have seen, there was evidence tending, in some degree at least, to establish that fact. Under section 1111 of the Penal Code the defendant could not have been convicted on the testimony of an accomplice, unless he was corroborated by other evidence, as therein provided, and the court should have submitted to the jury, under proper instructions, the question whether or not he was an accomplice. It may have been a question of vital consequence to the defendant, and we cannot say that he was not prejudiced by the ruling of the court."

Proof beyond Reasonable Doubt Not Required.

—It is error to instruct the jury that one is not to be regarded as an accomplice unless proved to be so beyond a reasonable doubt. Whether the witness is to be regarded as an accomplice requiring corroboration, is a question to be determined by the jury, and this question does not depend at all upon the strength or weight of his testimony, but solely upon its tendency, if true, to connect him with the offense of which he testifies. Com. v. Ford, 111 Mass. 394.

But the jury should be reasonably satisfied, before rejecting the evidence of a witness for want of corroboration, that he is an accomplice. Ross v. State, 74 Ala. 532; Childress v. State, 86 Ala. 77; Hines v. State, 27 Tex. App. 104.

Form of Instruction.—The court should instruct the jury that the witness is an accomplice if he did certain things, or omitted to do certain things, if the acts done or omitted in law made him an accomplice; an instruction that if the witness is an accessory he is an accomplice is not sufficient. Armstrong v. State (Tex. Crim. App., 1894), 26 S. W. Rep. 829.

Virginia.—Brown v. Com., 2 Leigh (Va.) 760; Oliver v. Com., 77 Va. 590.

Witness Guilty as Principal.—The fact that the witness is the principal, and the defendant is but an accessory, will not change the rule. Wild's Case, 1 Leach C. C. 17, note (a); Keech v. State, 15 Fla. 591; State v. Russell, 33 La. Ann. 135; Lindsay v. People, 63 N. Y. 143; Noland v. State, 19 Ohio 131.

The principal felon is a competent witness on the part of the state on the trial of an indictment for receiving stolen property. State v. Copenburg, 2 Strobb. (S. Car.) 273.

Civil Cases.—In civil cases where the commission of a crime is one of the issues of fact, a particeps criminis is a competent witness. Sinclair v. Jackson, 47 Me. 102, 74 Am. Dec. 476; Heward v. Shipley, 4 East 180. See also Bush v. Ralling, Sayer 289.

In an action for divorce a particeps criminis is a competent witness. Moulton v. Moulton, 13 Me. 110; Brown v. Brown, 5 Mass. 320.

And so in a criminal prosecution for adultery. State v. Colby, 51 Vt. 291, overruling State v. Annice, N. Chip. (Vt.) 9.

An Accomplice who is Not Indicted is a competent witness for the defendant. McKenzie v. State, 24 Ark. 636; Brown v. State, 24 Ark. 620; Casey v. State, 37 Ark. 67; Sumpter v. State, 11 Fla. 247.

Separate Indictment.—The fact that the witness is separately indicted for the same offense with which the prisoner stands charged does not render him incompetent as a witness for the prisoner, U. S. v. Henry, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 428; U. S. v. Hanway, 2 Wall. Jr. (U. S.) 139; McKenzie v. State, 24 Ark. 636; Foster v. State, 45 Ark. 328; or against the prisoner, State v. Umble, 115 Mo. 452. But compare, as to the first proposition, Anderson v. State, 27 Tex. App. 177, 11 Am. St. Rep. 189; Parker v. State (Tex. Crim. App., 1894), 24 S. W. Rep. 901; Freeman v. State (Tex. Crim. App., 1894), 28 S. W. Rep. 471.

Where two prisoners are separately indicted for the same offense and both are tried together, they are competent for each other. U. S. v. Hunter, 1 Cranch (C. C.) 446.

But compare State v. Blennerhassett, Walk. (Miss.) 7. See also infra, this section, as to defendants jointly indicted.

It is no objection to the competency of a witness that he may be entitled to a reward upon the conviction of the prisoner. U. S. v. Wilson, 1 Baldw. (U. S.) 90; Fraser's Case, 1 M'Nally 61-63.

A Contrary View was taken by Lord Hale: "If a reward be promised a prisoner for giving his evidence before he gives it, this, if proved, disables his testimony, and so, for my own part, I have always thought that if a person have a promise of pardon if he gives evidence against one of his own confederates this disables his testimony if it be proved upon him." 2 Hale P. C. 280. See also State v. Miller, 100 Mo. 606.

1. Some confusion exists among the authorities as to the competency at common law of persons jointly indicted to testify for one another or for the prosecution.

When Tried Jointly.—It is settled that where two or more persons are jointly indicted and tried together, one is not a competent witness either for or against the other. Reg. v. Lyons, 9 C. & P. 555, 38 E. C. L. 224; Reg. v. Payne, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 349; 1 Moak Rep. 396; Edgerton v. Com., 7 Bush (Ky.) 142. See Oliver v. Com., 77 Va. 590. Otherwise by statute. See Com. v. Brown, 130 Mass. 279; State v. Rose, Phil. (N. Car.) 406; Conway v. State, 118 Ind. 482; State v. Barrows, 76 Me. 401, 49 Am. Rep. 629.

When Tried Separately—Competency for State.—Where two persons are jointly indicted, the rule established by the weight of authority is that one is a competent witness against the other, though not convicted or acquitted or otherwise discharged, if they are separately tried.

Virginia.—Oliver v. Com., 77 Va. 590; Smith v. Com., 90 Va. 759.

Washington.—Edwards v. State, 2 Wash. 291.

On the Other Hand, it has been held that one jointly indicted with another is not competent as a witness against the latter, although they are not put upon trial together, until he is discharged from the indictment or is convicted. State v. Mooney, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 431; State v. Chyo Chiagk, 92 Mo. 395. See Edgerton v. Com., 7 Bush (Ky.) 142.

When two defendants were jointly indicted and tried for a felony and one was convicted and sentenced, while a mistrial was entered as to the other, the convicted defendant was held to be a competent witness against the other on a second trial. South v. State, 86 Ala. 617.

How Witnesses Rendered Admissible for State.—However the question of competency of codefendants in behalf of the state in criminal cases stands, the best practice is to insure the admissibility of the evidence of the party whom it is desired to use as a witness, in one of the following ways:

First, the accomplice whose testimony is to be used is omitted from the indictment. This was the practice in Lord Hale's time, because an indictment "doth weaken and disparage his testimony, but possibly not wholly take away his testimony." 1 Hale P. C. 305. See 1 Phill. Ev. (5th Am. ed.) *108.

Second, if the accomplice was jointly indicted, his acquittal may be procured before the trial of his confederates. This is the ordinary English practice. 3 Russ. Cr. (9th Am. ed.) *626; Rex v. Fraser, 1 M'Nally 56; Rex v. Rowland, R. & M. 401; Reg. v. Owen, 9 C. & P. 83, 38 E. C. L. 44; Reg. v. Payne, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 349, 1 Moak Rep. 396; Henderson v. State, 70 Ala. 23, 45 Am. Rep. 72; State v. Graham, 41 N. J. L. 15, 32 Am. Rep. 174. Or, if the circumstances permitted (the crime not being an infamous one), the plea of guilty was taken and sentence was passed. Reg. v. Lyons, 9 C. & P. 555, 38 E. C. L. 224; Winsor v. Reg., 6 B. & S. 178, 118 E. C. L. 178; Reg. v. Payne, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 349, 1 Moak Rep. 396; State v. Graham, 41 N. J. L. 15, 32 Am. Rep. 174. Where the disqualification for infamy no longer exists, this course is always practicable. See Woodley v. State (Ala., 1894), 15 So. Rep. 82c.

Third, a nolle prosequi is entered as to the defendant whom it is desired to examine. This is the ordinary practice in the United States. Phill. Ev. (5th Am. ed.) *64; Henderson v. State, 70 Ala. 23, 45 Am. Rep. 72; State v. Quarles, 13 Ark. 307; McKenzie v. State, 24 Ark. 636; State v. Banks, 40 La. Ann. 736; State v. Clump, 16 Mo. 385; State v. Beauchleigh, 92 Mo. 490; State v. Phipps, 76 N. Car. 203; State v. Lyon, 81 N. Car. 600, 31 Am. Rep. 518; Camron v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 180.

In California, by statute, the court may upon application of the district attorney direct any defendant to be discharged from the indictment in order that he may be a witness for the people. People v. Bruzzo, 24 Cal. 41.

Similar statutes prevail in other states. Edwards v. State, 2 Wash. 291; McGinnis v. State (Wyoming, 1893), 31 Pac. Rep. 978.

Tried Separately—Competency for One Another.—Where two persons are jointly indicted for the same offense, one is not a competent witness for the other while the indictment is pending against him, although separately tried.

Virginia.—Campbell v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 314.

In some of these cases dicta are to be found to the effect that the same rule is applicable when witnesses are called in behalf of the state. But upon this point see this note, supra. So after a plea of nolo contendere by one defendant not followed by judgment. State v. Young, 39 N. H. 283.

A Defendant who has Pleaded Guilty is admissible for his codefendant without sentence. Rex v. Fletcher, 1 Stra. 633; Reg. v. George, C. & M. 111, 41 E. C. L. 66; Reg. v. Gallagher, 13 Cox C. C. 61, 13 Moak Rep. 416; State v. Russell, 33 La. Ann. 135; State v. Jones, 51 Me. 125; Com. v. Smith, 12 Met. (Mass.) 238; Strawhern v. State, 37 Miss. 422; Lee v. State, 51 Miss. 566. But see Henderson v. State, 70 Ala. 23, 45 Am. Rep. 72; State v. Bruner, 65 N. Car. 499; Kehoe v. Com., 85 Pa. St. 127.

So after a separate trial and a verdict of guilty, but before judgment, an accomplice is an admissible witness for his confederate in crime. Delozier v. State, 1 Head (Tenn.) 45.

In Rex v. Lafone, 5 Esp. 155, on a joint indictment against several for a misdemeanor, a defendant who had suffered judgment by default was held by Lord Ellenborough not to be a competent witness for the other defendants. But this case has been doubted by leading text writers, 1 Phil. Evi. (5th Am. ed.) *65; 3 Russ. on Crimes (9th Am. ed.) *612; 1 Bennett & Heard Leading Crim. Cas. 126, note by Mr. Heard to the case of Com. v. Marsh; and is said by the court in State v. Brien, 32 N. J. L. 415, to be "now universally admitted to be erroneous."

Where the disqualification for infamy no longer exists, one jointly indicted with another for a robbery is, while under sentence for the crime, a competent witness for his associate. State v. Loney, 82 Mo. 82; State v. Minor, 117 Mo. 302; Woodley v. State (Ala., 1894), 15 So. Rep. 820. See also the title INFAMY.

Where, when all the evidence is in, it appears that there is no evidence to inculcate a defendant, or where one has been made a defendant for the express purpose of excluding his testimony, if nothing is proved against him, he may have his case separately submitted to the jury in order to be rendered competent as a witness for his codefendant, but whether his case shall be so submitted is within the discretion of the court.

But compare State v. Carr, 1 N. J. L. 1.

Statutory Changes.—In some jurisdictions one jointly indicted with another but not put upon his trial at the same time is, by statute, admissible as a witness for his codefendant. People v. Newberry, 20 Cal. 439; People v. Labra, 5 Cal. 183; Everett v. State, 6 Ind. 495; Sloan v. State, 9 Ind. 565; Hunt v. State, 10 Ind. 69; State v. Chyo Chiagk, 92 Mo. 395 (distinguishing State v. Martin, 74 Mo. 547); Poteete v. State, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 261, 40 Am. Rep. 90; Lazier v. Com., 10 Gratt. (Va.) 708; McGinnis v. State (Wyoming, 1893), 31 Pac. Rep. 978. See Benson v. U. S., 146 U. S. 325; State v. Rose, Phil. (N. Car.) 406; McGruder v. State, 71 Ga. 864.

But the accomplice must request to become a witness. People v. Van Alstine, 57 Mich. 69; Harris v. State, 78 Ala. 482. The same rule has been held to prevail in the absence of statute. Jones v. State, 1 Ga. 610. See State v. Brien, 32 N. J. L. 414; Garrett v. State, 6 Mo. 1 (overruled in State v. Roberts, 15 Mo. 28).

In other states, by statute, where defendants jointly indicted are tried together each is competent for the other. State v. Gigher, 23 Iowa 318; State v. Stewart, 51 Iowa 312; or by reason of conviction and sentence for an infamous crime.¹

2. When Admitted as Witness—Reason for Admission.—The rule allowing the admission of accomplices to testify is supported by public policy and necessity, since it is scarcely possible to detect conspiracies and many worse offenses without the information of those who are implicated in the crime.²

Discretion of Court or Prosecuting Officer.—But as the testimony of a particeps criminis is regarded as tainted, and the admission of such a witness is equitably conditioned upon the immunity of a guilty party, an accomplice will not be allowed as a matter of course to give testimony, and it is only when, in the discretion of the court or the prosecuting officer of the state,³ the testimony of a State v. Nash, 7 Iowa 347, 10 Iowa 81. See State v. Rose, Phil. (N. Car.) 406.

In Kentucky one defendant is admissible for another, unless the indictment charges a conspiracy, and even then unless there is such evidence as with reasonable certainty establishes the existence of the conspiracy. Laughlin v. Com., 13 Bush (Ky.) 261; Christian v. Com., 13 Bush (Ky.) 264; Jeffries v. Com., 84 Ky. 237; Wright v. Com., 85 Ky. 123.

2. Hawk. P. C., b. 2, c. 46, § 94; 1 Phill. Ev. (5th Am. ed.) *107; 1 Roscoe Cr. Ev. (8th Am. ed.) *130; U. S. v. Lancaster, 2 McLean (U. S.) 431; U. S. v. Troax, 3 McLean (U. S.) 224; Marler v. State, 67 Ala. 55, 68 Ala. 580; Gray v. People, 26 Ill. 344; Earll v. People, 73 Ill. 329.

In Charnock's Case, 12 How. St. Tr. 1454, Lord Holt said: "Conspiracies are deeds of darkness as well as of wickedness, the discovery whereof can properly come only from the conspirators themselves; and the evidence of accomplices has been always good proof in all ages; and they are the most proper witnesses; for, otherwise, it is hardly possible, if not altogether impossible, to have full proof of such secret contrivances."

In People v. Whipple, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 707, Duer, J., said: "The evidence of accomplices has at all times been admitted either from a principle of public policy or from judicial necessity, or from both. They are, no doubt, requisite as witnesses in particular cases, but it has been well observed that in a regular system of administrative justice they are liable to great objections. 'The law,' says one of the ablest and most useful modern writers upon criminal jurisprudence, 'confesses its weakness by calling in the assistance of those by whom it has been broken. It offers a premium to treachery, and destroys the last virtue which clings to the degraded transgressor. On the other hand, it tends to prevent any extensive agreement among atrocious criminals, makes them perpetually suspicious of each other, and prevents the hopelessness of mercy from rendering them desperate. Chitty's Cr. Law 769.'"

3. The Method of Introducing an Accomplice is, in general, as has been stated, by omission to indict, nolle prosequi, or severance of trial. As to the power of the prosecuting officer with or without the direction of the court to enter a nolle prosequi, or sever the trial of codefendants, see the titles DISTRICT ATTORNEYS; CRIMINAL PROCEDURE; NOLLE PROSEQUI.

The English Courts do not admit an accomplice as a matter of course, even though he has been admitted to testify before the committing magistrate. The usual practice is, that a motion is made to the court by the prosecuting counsel for his admission, and the court in view of all the circumstances admits or disallows the evidence as will best promote the ends of public justice. 3 Russ. on Cr. (9th Am. ed.) *598; 1 Roscoe Cr. Ev. (8th Am. ed.) *131; 1 Phill. Ev. (5th Am. ed. by Cowen and Hill) *108; Reg. v. Sparks, 1 F. & F. 388.

"This application is usually made before the bill is taken before the grand jury, and if the application is granted the accomplice is not included in the indictment; but where he has been included with his confederates in a joint indictment, he may still be used as a witness with the consent of the court." 3 Russ. Cr. (9th Am. ed.) *599.

In cases of this kind the court, if it sees no cause to the contrary, is in the habit of relying on the discretion of the counsel for the prosecution to determine whether he will have a prisoner acquitted before the trial commences, to enable him to call such prisoner as a witness against the other prisoners. Reg. v. Owen, 9 C. & P. 83, 38 E. C. L. 44. See also Rex v. Rowland, R. & M. 401.

Authorities in the United States—Discretionary with Court.—The English practice of applying to court for permission to introduce the accomplice as a witness, seems to have been followed by some of the American courts. U. S. v. Hinz, 35 Fed. Rep. 272; State v. Graham, 41 N. J. L. 15, 32 Am. Rep. 174; People v. Whipple, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 707; Wight v. Rindskopf, 43 Wis. 344. See Henderson v. State, 70 Ala. 23, 45 Am. Rep. 72; Ala. Crim. Code (1886), § 4477.

In Ray v. State, 1 Greene (Iowa) 316, the court, by Kinney, J., said: "We think the safer practice is not to permit an accomplice to be brought into court as a witness without an order from the court for that purpose, and that the application ought to show, 1. That there is no other witness by whom the offense can be proved. 2. That the witness is not more guilty than the person on trial; and, 3. That the testimony can be substantially corroborated."

But under the statutory provisions in force

particeps criminis is necessary to bring the guilty to justice, that he will be admitted as a witness for the prosecution.¹

3. Credibility—At Common Law, Question for Jury.—The credibility of an accomplice is, at common law, a question for the jury, as is that of any other witness.²

Evidence to be Received with Caution.—Such evidence, however, coming as it does from a polluted source, should be received with great caution and closely and doubtfully examined, and it is proper for the court to so instruct the jury,³ in Iowa the doctrine of this case is not now the law in that state. State v. Hudson, 50 Iowa 157.

Other authorities hold that while the permission of the court is necessary no formal order is required. Lindsay v. People, 63 N. Y. 143. In this case Allen, J., said: "Accomplices may in all cases, by permission of the court, be used by the government as witnesses in bringing their associates to punishment. * * * There is no practice in this state requiring a previous application or a formal order of the court to permit an accomplice to become a witness for the state." See also Taylor v. People, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 212; State v. Hudson, 50 Iowa 157; Fleming v. State, 28 Tex. App. 234; Camron v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 180.

Discretionary with Prosecuting Officer.—In other states the admission of accomplices lies entirely within the discretion of the prosecuting officer. Runnels v. State, 28 Ark. 121.

In the Whiskey Cases, 99 U. S. 594, Clifford, J., said: Accomplices "everywhere are competent witnesses if they see fit voluntarily to appear and testify; but the course of proceedings in the courts of many of the states is quite different from that just described, the rule being that the court will not advise the attorney-general how he shall conduct a criminal prosecution. Consequently, it is regarded as the province of the public prosecutor and not of the court to determine whether or not an accomplice, who is willing to criminate himself and his associates in guilt, shall be called and examined for the state. Of all others, the prosecutor is best qualified to determine that question, as he alone is supposed to know what other evidence can be adduced to prove the criminal charge." See also 1 Bish. New Cr. Proc. 1161, subd. 4.

1. 3 Russ. on Cr. (9th Am. ed.) *599; 1 Roscoe Cr. Ev. (8th Am. ed.) *131.

Testimony must be Essential.—The court usually considers not only whether the prisoners can be convicted without the evidence of the accomplice, but also whether they can be convicted with his evidence. If, therefore, there be sufficient evidence to convict without his testimony, the court will refuse to allow him to be admitted as a witness. So if there be no reasonable probability of a conviction even with his evidence, the court will refuse to admit him as a witness. Thus, where several prisoners were committed as principals and several as receivers, but no corroboration could be given as to the receivers against whom the evidence of the accomplice was required, Gurney, B., refused to permit one of the principals to become a witness. Rex v. Mellor, Stafford Summer Ass. 1833.

So in Reg. v. Saunders, Worcester Spring Ass. 1842, on a motion to admit an accomplice, Patterson, J., said: "I doubt whether I shall allow him to be a witness, if you want him for the purpose of identification, and there is no corroboration, that will not do."

And in Reg. v. Salt, Stafford Spring Ass. 1843, where there was no corroboration of an accomplice, Wightman, J., refused to allow him to become a witness. 3 Russ. Cr. Ev. (9th Am. ed.) *598, note (x).

Where one prisoner pleaded guilty and an application was made to admit him as a witness against the other, Hill, J., directed the witnesses who were relied upon to corroborate him to be called first, and if their evidence was sufficiently strong, then the accomplice might be examined. Reg. v. Sparks, 1 F. & F. 388.

Only One Accomplice Admitted in General—When More Admitted.—It is not customary to admit more than one accomplice. Barnesley Rioters Case, 1 Lew. 5. But under peculiar circumstances more than one may be admitted, Rex v. Noakes, 5 C. & P. 326, 24 E. C. L. 342; especially where they testify to different facts, no one of them being able to prove the whole, Scott's Case, 2 Lew. 36.

Principal Admitted against Accessory.—In proper cases a principal will be admitted to testify against an accessory. Wild's Case, 1 Leach C. C. 17, note (a); Lindsay v. People, 63 N. Y. 143, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 104; Barrara v. State, 42 Tex. 260; 3 Russ. on Cr. *597, note (t).

In People v. Whipple, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 707, the court, while admitting that if it appeared that the principal was in fact but the instrument of the accessory before the fact the former might be admitted to testify against the latter, held that it would be an abuse of the discretion vested in it to admit a principal already convicted and shown to be more guilty than the accessory to testify against the latter. except in jurisdictions where the court has no authority to give any instructions on the weight of evidence.¹

Testifying under Promise of Leniency.—The fact that an accomplice testifies under a promise of leniency makes strongly against his credibility, and may always be shown for the purpose of weakening the force of the testimony.²

Full Cross-examination should be Allowed.—A liberal and full cross-examination for the purpose of testing the truth of an accomplice's statements should be allowed.³

4. Corroboration—a. AT COMMON LAW.—Since at common law the credibility of an accomplice is a question solely for the jury, the accused may be legally convicted upon the unsupported testimony of a confederate in crime.⁴

The Court may Comment upon the Nature of Such Testimony and point out the various grounds of suspicion which attach to it; call the jury's attention to the situation and temptation under which the witness may be placed, and explain the motives by which he may be actuated, etc.; but it should not instruct the jury that they are bound to believe or disbelieve him in any particular. George v. State, 39 Miss. 570; People v. Hare, 57 Mich. 505; State v. Hing, 16 Nev. 307.

When Introduced for Defendant.—Where an accomplice is introduced as a witness by the defendant, an instruction to the jury that the testimony of an accomplice ought to be viewed with distrust is error, inasmuch as it tends to discredit a witness for the defendant, and is within a constitutional prohibition as to charging juries with respect to matters of fact. *People v. Claiming Privilege.—When an accomplice goes on the stand and testifies for the government, he cannot on cross-examination shield himself from making a full disclosure of his connection with the offense which is being investigated, on the ground that such testimony will tend to criminate him. Com. v. Price, 10 Gray (Mass.) 472, 71 Am. Dec. 668; Pitcher v. People, 16 Mich. 142; Foster v. People, 18 Mich. 266. See State v. Condry, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 418.

Exception—Perjury.—Upon an indictment for subornation of perjury it was held that it was not competent for the jury to convict the defendant upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, where it appeared that the jury must find from the accomplice's own testimony, before they could convict the defendant, that such accomplice had corruptly committed perjury; this case was held to be an exception to the general rule that a conviction upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice is valid. *People v. It is error in the court to charge the jury that the evidence of an accomplice is corroborated by the testimony of another witness.

When Corroborative Evidence may be Introduced.—Where a witness is confessedly an accomplice, his testimony may be corroborated by other evidence before his credibility is attacked.²

b. BY STATUTE.—The principle embodied in the instructions usually given to juries at common law, that the testimony of an accomplice requires corroboration, has, in many jurisdictions, been enacted into a positive rule of law, and it is provided by statute that a conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice unless that testimony is corroborated by other evidence in some material matter tending directly to connect the prisoner with the crime charged.³ Where it appears from the evidence that a witness for the prosecu-

Whether it is corroborated or not is a question for the jury. Noland v. State, 19 Ohio 131; State v. Robinson, 35 S. Car. 340. But see Burney v. State, 87 Ala. 80.

Rule of Practice which should be Observed.—In Reg. v. Farler, 8 C. & P. 106, 34 E. C. L. 314, Lord Abinger, C.B., said: "It is a practice which deserves all the reverence of law, that judges have uniformly told juries that they ought not to pay any respect to the testimony of an accomplice unless the accomplice is corroborated in some material circumstance."

In State v. Jones, 64 Mo. 391, Henry, J., after citing 1 Greenl. Ev., § 380, said: "It being the law, as Mr. Greenleaf in the above paragraph states, that one may be convicted of a felony on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, makes it the more necessary that juries should be properly cautioned by the court in regard to such testimony."

In State v. Prudhomme, 25 La. Ann. 522, the court, by Ludeling, C.J., said: "The rule requiring the judge to charge the jury that the testimony of an accomplice needs confirmation is rather a rule of practice than a rule of law." See Reg. v. Stubbs, 7 Cox C. C. 20, 33 Eng. L. & Eq. 551.

In Giving This Instruction the judge does not withdraw the case from the jury by positive direction, but only advises them not to give credit to such unsupported testimony. 1 Taylor on Ev., § 967; U. S. v. Sykes, 58 Fed. Rep. 1000.

Evidence Not Corroborative Submitted as Such.—If evidence is submitted to the jury as corroborative which is not legally such, the error may be revised by a bill of exceptions. Com. v. Larrabee, 99 Mass. 413. See Edwards v. State, 2 Wash. 291.

is discretionary with the trial court whether to direct an acquittal or not. Black v. State, 59 Wis. 471.

c. WHEN SUFFICIENT—(1) Generally—Not Necessary upon Every Fact.—It is not necessary that an accomplice be corroborated upon every fact to which he swears, for if this were required there would be no necessity for calling him as a witness.²

Need Not be Direct.—Neither is it necessary that he be corroborated by the direct testimony of other witnesses. Circumstantial evidence is sufficient if it is material and tends to connect the prisoner with the crime charged.³

United States Courts.—The courts of the United States, sitting in a state the statutes whereof forbid a conviction upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, and where the defendant is a citizen of such state, will instruct the jury that they cannot convict upon such testimony. U. S. v. Van Leuven, 65 Fed. Rep. 78.

1. Wicks v. State, 28 Tex. App. 448; Stone v. State, 22 Tex. App. 185; Hines v. State, 27 Tex. App. 104.

But where the Prosecution does Not Rely Wholly on the testimony of an accomplice to connect the accused with the offense, it is not incumbent on the court, without request, to instruct the jury touching corroboration. Robinson v. State, 84 Ga. 674.

One Testifying under Promise of Leniency.—One jointly indicted with a defendant on trial, who testifies upon a condition that all prosecutions concerning the affair of which he is called to testify be dismissed, is considered an accomplice; and although the witness in his testimony denies the fact of his guilt, the defendant in such a case is entitled to have the instruction given to the jury, that they shall not convict upon the unsupported testimony of such accomplice. Barrara v. State, 42 Tex. 260.

Accomplice Introduced for Defendant.—Where the defendant introduces an accomplice in his own behalf, it is error for the court to give an instruction that if the state relies for conviction in any measure upon the testimony of the accomplice, the jury are to discredit it to the extent of requiring its corroboration unless the court tells the jury that the same rule does not apply to such witness where his testimony is in favor of the defendant. Joseph v. State (Tex. Crim. App., 1895), 30 S. W. Rep. 1067. See People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 171.

State*, 3 Kan. 479; People v. Ogle, 104 N. Y. 511; State v. Hicks (S. Dak., 1894), 60 N. W. Rep. 66.

It is not error for the court to refuse an instruction to the effect that no conviction can be had upon the testimony of an accomplice, unless the crime and the defendant's guilt are proved by other evidence. Hudspeth v. State, 50 Ark. 544.

If the jury are satisfied that an accomplice speaks the truth in some material part of his testimony, in which they see him confirmed by unimpeachable evidence, this may be ground for their believing that he also speaks the truth in other parts as to which there may be no confirmation. *State v. Must be upon Material Point and Connect Prisoner with Crime.—It is necessary that the corroborating evidence should be upon some part of the testimony which is material to the issue.¹ It must also tend to show that the defendant committed the crime charged in the indictment; for it is not a sufficient corroboration to prove that the offense was in fact committed in the manner described by the accomplice,² unless proof of the corpus delicti necessarily involves the

Such circumstances as the constant and easy access of the defendant to the place whence goods are charged to have been stolen, his presence thereabouts when the goods are missed, the fact that he drove a single dray there, and that such a dray was seen being unloaded about the break of day where the stolen goods were found, may properly be weighed by the jury as corroborating evidence. Roberts v. State, 55 Ga. 220. See also State v. Brin, 30 Minn. 522; State v. Wart, 51 Iowa 587.

1. State v. Callahan (La., 1895), 17 So. Rep. 50; Com. v. Bosworth, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 397; Com. v. Scott, 123 Mass. 238, 25 Am. Rep. 81; Com. v. Holmes, 127 Mass. 424, 34 Am. Rep. 391; Com. v. Chase, 147 Mass. 599; Watson v. Com., 95 Pa. St. 424. See Marler v. State, 68 Ala. 580; Edwards v. State, 2 Wash. 291.

In Com. v. Scott, 123 Mass. 222, 25 Am. Rep. 81, Morton, J., said: "If it can be held that this rule of practice [to instruct the jury that the testimony of an accomplice requires corroboration], because of its uniformity, has acquired the force of a rule of law, still there is not the same uniformity in the practice as to the kind of corroboration required. * * * In Com. v. Bosworth, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 397, the court say, as to the kind of corroboration required: * * * 'We think the rule is, that the corroborative evidence must relate to some portion of the testimony which is material to the issue.' In that case the evidence, held to be corroborative, confirmed the accomplice as to a fact which did not tend to connect the defendant with the crime. Since this decision it has been usual to instruct the jury in substantial compliance with the rule stated therein, though the practice of different judges in the exercise of their discretion has varied. Com. v. Brooks, 9 Gray (Mass.) 299; Com. v. Price, 10 Gray (Mass.) 472, 71 Am. Dec. 668; Com. v. O'Brien, 12 Allen (Mass.) 183; Com. v. Larrabee, 99 Mass. 413; Com. v. Elliott, 110 Mass. 104; Com. v. Snow, 111 Mass. 411. See also Reg. v. Stubbs, Dears. C. C. 555, 7 Cox C. C. 48; State v. Wolcott, 21 Conn. 272." See also State v. Maney, 54 Conn. 178.

But in order to render it prudent to convict upon the testimony of an accomplice, the evidence should tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime. Com. v. Hayes, 140 Mass. 366. See the following note.

Corroboration as to Collateral Facts.—An accomplice having testified that, in pursuance of an agreement between himself and the accused, he killed the deceased and immediately thereafter went to the house of a sister of the deceased, corroborative testimony of the fact that he did go to the house of the deceased's sister after the commission of the homicide is inadmissible, it being a collateral fact which, apart from the accomplice's testimony, in no way tended to connect the accused with the crime. Corroboration must Affect Identity of Prisoner.

—In Reg. v. Farler, 8 C. & P. 106, 34 E. C. L. 314, Lord Abinger instructed the jury as follows: "In my opinion * * * corroboration ought to consist in some circumstance that affects the identity of the party accused. A man who has been guilty of a crime himself will always be able to relate the facts of the case, and if the confirmation be only on the truth of that history without identifying the persons, that is really no corroboration at all. If a man was to break open a house and put a knife to your throat and steal your property, it would be no corroboration that he had stated all the facts correctly, that he had described how the person did put a knife to the throat and did steal the property. It would not at all tend to show that the party accused participated in it. Here you find that the prisoner and the accomplice are seen together at the house of the landlord. Now, look at his evidence. If they were seen together under circumstances that were extraordinary and where the prisoner was not likely to be unless there were concert, it might be something; but he lives within one hundred and fifty yards, and there is nothing extraordinary in his being there, and he left when they were shutting up the house. Therefore it is perfectly natural that he should have been there and left when he did. The single circumstance is that the prisoner was seen in a house which he frequents, where he may be seen once or twice a week, and there the case ends against him. All the rest depends upon the evidence of the accomplice. The danger is that when a man is fixed and knows that his own guilt is detected, he purchases impunity by falsely accusing others. I would suggest to you that the circumstances are too slight to justify you in acting on this evidence."

There are Some Expressions to the Contrary in earlier cases; but it seems that all those cases really decide that there is no rule of law preventing the conviction of a prisoner upon the unsupported testimony of an accomplice. Rex v. Jones, 2 Campb. 132; Rex v. Dawber, 3 Stark. 34; Rex v. Hastings, 7 C. & P. 152, 32 E. C. L. 475.

Need Not Refer to Particular Statement.—If the corroboration tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, it need not refer to any statement or fact testified to by the accomplice. Malachi v. State, 89 Ala. 134, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.), p. 78; Ross v. State, 74 Ala. 532; Com. v. Holmes, 127 Mass. 424, 34 Am. Rep. 391.

A Confession by the Accused, supported by evidence of the corpus delicti, sufficiently corroborates the evidence of an accomplice.

Rep. 673.

Suspicious Lies having been Told by the Accused about the crime is not a fact sufficient to corroborate the testimony of an accomplice. People v. Koenig, 99 Cal. 574; Buchanan v. State (Tex. Crim. App., 1894), 24 S. W. Rep. 895.

Contradictory Statements made by the defendant as to his whereabouts at the time of the crime, together with evidence which shows that he tried to get his accomplice to leave the country, are sufficient corroborating evidence. People v. McLean, 84 Cal. 480.

Possession of Coat of Murdered Man.—The fact that the coat of a murdered man was found in the possession of the person accused of killing him is proper corroborating evidence, although the accomplice testified only to the killing, and not to the taking of the coat. Malachi v. State, 89 Ala. 134.

Flight.—The fact of flight by a person accused or suspected of crime is of some probative force, as tending to corroborate an accomplice. Ross v. State, 74 Ala. 532.

Prisoner Seen in Neighborhood.—The fact that the prisoner was seen in the neighborhood about the time the crime was committed is not sufficient to corroborate the testimony of an accomplice. Reg. v. Farler, 8 C. & P. 106, 34 E. C. L. 314; State v. Odell, 8 Oregon 30. But see Ross v. State, 74 Ala. 532; State v. Townsend, 19 Oregon 213. Unless the defense is an alibi. Territory v. Kinney (N. Mex.), 1 West Coast Rep. 801.

Possession of Stolen Property.—The possession of stolen goods not satisfactorily accounted for is sufficient corroborating evidence. Reg. v. Birkett, 8 C. & P. 732, 34 E. C. L. 608; People v. Grundell, 75 Cal. 301; Boswell v. State, 92 Ga. 581; Pritchett v. State, 92 Ga. 33; Roberts v. State, 80 Ga. 772; Morrow v. State (Tex. Crim. App., 1894), 26 S. W. Rep. 395; Jernigan v. State, 10 Tex. App. 546. See also Smith v. State, 59 Ala. 104; Ford v. State, 70 Ga. 722.

But it is no confirmation of a thief that stolen property was found on the premises of the person charged as receiver, for the thief may have placed the goods there himself. Reg. v. Pratt, 4 F. & F. 315; Reg. v. Robinson, 4 F. & F. 43.

When Several Prisoners are Charged, it is not sufficient that the accomplice should be confirmed as to one or more of the prisoners, to justify a conviction of those prisoners with respect to whom there is no confirmation. Reg. v. Stubbs, 7 Cox C. C. 20, 33 Eng. L. & Eq. 551; Reg. v. Jenkins, 1 Cox C. C. 177; Rex v. Moores, 7 C. & P. 270, 32 E. C. L. 507; Rex v. Wells, M. & M. 326, 22 E. C. L. 324; Rex v. Field, Dick. Q. S. 520; Hall v. State, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 561.

In Com. v. Holmes, 127 Mass. 431, 34 Am. Rep. 391, Gray, C. J., said: "In 1829,

One Accomplice Corroborating Another.—The practice requiring corroboration of the testimony of one accomplice applies when two or more are called to testify, because one accomplice cannot corroborate another.²

Whether Wife may Corroborate.—It has been held that the wife of an accomplice cannot corroborate him,³ but by the weight of authority in the United States the wife of an accomplice is a competent witness to corroborate his testimony.⁴

(2) In Trials for Misdemeanors.—It was at one time contended that the practice of requiring confirmation did not extend to cases of misdemeanors,⁵ but it has been said that there is no sound reason for such distinction, and if it ever prevailed it no longer exists,⁶ though the amount of corroboration required may depend to some extent on the nature of the circumstances of the crime and the degree of moral obliquity to be presumed from its commission.⁷

Civil Actions.—The rule, however, does not apply in civil actions growing out of conspiracies to commit fraud.⁸

where the testimony of an accomplice was confirmed as to an accessory but not as to the principal, Mr. Justice Littleale directed an acquittal of both. Rex v. Wells, M. & M. 326, 22 E. C. L. 324. And for the past fifty years it has been the usual practice of English judges at nisi prius to advise the jury that the corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice ought to be of facts going to prove the guilt of the defendant, and that corroboration as to the guilt of one defendant only would not justify the conviction of another." *Citing Vaughan, B., in Rex v. Georgia—Corroboration in Misdemeanors not Necessary.—In Georgia it is provided by statute that no conviction of a felony can be had upon the unsupported testimony of an accomplice, but it is held in that state that the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice is sufficient to convict of a misdemeanor, the statutory provision not applying to such cases. *Parsons v. recover penalties and forfeitures suffered by reason of the commission of misdemeanors,¹ though in such cases the credibility of witnesses may be seriously impaired by their known complicity with the parties from whom the forfeitures are sought to be recovered.²

5. Right to Pardon of Accomplice Testifying for Prosecution.—When an accomplice is examined in behalf of the prosecution, and fully and fairly discloses the guilt of himself and his associates, a promise is implied, as generally regarded, that he will not be punished for the offense.³ In such cases the prosecuting officer may decline to institute proceedings against him, or may discontinue them if already begun.⁴ If this course is not pursued, but the accomplice is tried and convicted, he is equitably entitled to a pardon.⁵ This practice grew up as a substitute for the ancient doctrine of approvement.⁶

In England, and it would seem generally wherever the pardoning power can act before conviction, the accomplice may become entitled to a pardon as a matter of right. Thus:

Proclamation Promising a Conditional Pardon.—The king by special proclamation sometimes promised pardon to accomplices upon condition that they would furnish evidence to convict their associates in crime. Accomplices coming within the provisions of such a proclamation were said, by Lord Mansfield, to have a right to a pardon. Rex v. Rudd, Cowp. 331.

But where a prisoner under sentence for murder pleaded, upon being asked why sentence should not be pronounced against him, such a proclamation, and that he had given such information and thereby entitled himself to a pardon, Lord Denman held that he was only entitled to have time granted to him to apply to the pardoning power, and he explained the remark of Lord Mansfield in Rex v. Rudd, Cowp. 331, as follows: "The counsel for the prisoner, Garside, has contended that by the terms of the proclamation which has been referred to he has a legal right to the benefits of a pardon, and a passage has been cited in support of this proposition from a judgment of Lord Mansfield in Rex v. Rudd, Cowp. 331. But it is clear that in that part of his judgment Lord Mansfield does not speak of legal rights in the strict sense of such rights as would constitute a defense to an indictment, or an answer to the question whether an execution should not be awarded, for, after enumerating the 'three ways in law and practice which give accomplices the right to a pardon,' he adds, 'in all these cases the court will bail them in order to give an opportunity of applying for a pardon.' The application to the court, therefore, in that case is only that the party may be bailed for the purpose of investing himself with a legal right which he did not before possess." Rex v. Garside, 2 Ad. & El. 266, 29 E. C. L. 84.

Statute Holding out Pardon.—There was another case which gave an accomplice a right to a pardon, namely, that of persons within statutes creating offenses, or regulating penalties, and holding out the promise of immunity to accomplices who should bring their associates to justice. Rex v. Rudd, Cowp. 331; 1 Chitty Cr. Law (5th Am. ed.) *766.

6. Rex v. Rudd, Cowp. 331; State v. Graham, 41 N. J. L. 15, 32 Am. Rep. 174.

Approvement.—The old law of approvement is thus explained by Beasley, C.J., in State v. Graham, 41 N. J. L. 15, 32 Am. Rep. 174: "The course in pursuing this old form was for the culprit, indicted for treason or felony, to confess the truth of the charge, and, upon being sworn, to reveal all the treasons and felonies within his knowledge, and to enter before a coroner his appeal against all his partners in crime who were within the realm. The criminal thus confessing was called the approver, or, in Latin, probator, and the person implicated was styled the appellee. By this confession and appeal the approver put it in the discretion of the court either to give judgment and award execution against him, or to respite him until the conviction of his partners in guilt; and if it was deemed advisable to admit him as an approver, and then if, upon being sworn, he made a full and true disclosure and also convicted the appellee, either by his oath or on wager of battle, the king, ex merito justitia, pardoned him 'as to his life.' This practice, with its conditions that the appellee could claim a trial by battle, and that grace to the approver should be dependent on his conviction of his associate

Right Equitable Only.—The accomplice's right not to be prosecuted, or to a pardon, is equitable only, and is conditioned upon his making a full and fair disclosure of his own guilt and that of his associates, and if he violates this condition he may be tried and convicted on his own confession.¹

Not a Bar to Indictment.—He cannot plead the facts in bar of an indictment, nor avail himself of them by motion to dismiss the prosecution.²

Immunity does not Extend to Other Crimes.—The implied promise of pardon to the accomplice does not extend to other crimes committed by him.³

in crime, was plainly at variance with modern sentiments and habits, and the consequence was that it passed out of use; but as the purpose it served was of value to juridical administration, it was inevitable in the ordinary development of the law that some equivalent should take its place."

For further details of the law of approvement see Whiskey Cases, 99 U. S. 594; Rex v. Rudd, Cowp. 331; 2 Hale P. C. 226; 4 Bl. Com. 330.

Holtham*, Stafford Spring Ass. 1843; Rex v. Stokes, Stafford Spring Ass. 1837. See Alderman v. People, 4 Mich. 423, 69 Am. Dec. 321.

The Refusal of the Accomplice to Testify before the Trial Jury, notwithstanding his having testified before the grand jury, forfeits all rights to immunity or clemency, and subjects him to trial and conviction; and he is not entitled to a continuance of the case to allow him to apply to the pardoning power for a pardon before conviction. U. S. v. Hinz, 35 Fed. Rep. 272. See Com. v. Knapp, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 477, 20 Am. Dec. 534; State v. Moran, 15 Oregon 262.

But he has a claim for a judicial recommendation for pardon, which cannot be withheld without violating an established rule of practice. See the authorities just cited.

Where the Pardoning Power can Act before Conviction, if the district attorney upon the accomplice's being indicted with the same crime should fail to enter a nolle prosequi, the court will continue the cause until a pardon can be applied for. U. S. v. Lee, 4 McLean (U. S.) 103; Whiskey Cases, 99 U. S. 594. See Rex v. Rudd, Cowp. 331. But compare Com. v. Dabney, 1 Rob. (Va.) 754.

But where the Pardoning Power cannot Act until after Conviction of the prisoner, the closest approximation to this practice is to put the accomplice on trial, and, upon his conviction, for the court to recommend him to executive clemency. State v. Graham, 41 N. J. L. 15, 32 Am. Rep. 174. See State v. Lyon, 81 N. Car. 600, 31 Am. Rep. 518.

Mr. Bishop has suggested that in such a case the prisoner be permitted to plead guilty, under an arrangement with the prosecuting officer that he may retract his plea and plead one to the merits if his application for a pardon prove unsuccessful. Bishop's Crim. Proc., § 1006, note.

But this suggestion is disapproved by the court in State v. Lyon, 81 N. Car. 600, 31 Am. Rep. 518.

The mere fact that one defendant has been examined as a witness against another defendant on trial for the same crime, and that he has disclosed his own and his associate's guilt, no promise or inducement being held out to him, gives him not even an equitable right to clemency. Long v. State, 86 Ala. 36. See Com. v. Brown, 103 Mass. 422; Com. v. Denehy, 103 Mass. 424, note; Com. v. Woodside, 105 Mass. 594; Com. v. Plummer, 147 Mass. 601.

In Texas the doctrine stated in the text does not prevail, and it is there held that an agreement to turn state's evidence is a good plea to an indictment for the same offense, and entitles the prisoner to a discharge. Hardin v. State, 12 Tex. App. 186; Bowden v. State, 1 Tex. App. 144; Camron v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 180, disapproving Holmes v. State, 20 Tex. App. 509.

Cross-examination as to Other Offenses.—In respect to such an offense, therefore, he is not bound to answer on his cross-examination. West's Case (O. B. Sessions 1821), 1 Phill. Ev. (5th Am. ed.) *108; Pitcher v. People, 16 Mich. 142.

But if an accomplice in one crime be also indicted for another crime, and the fact be within the knowledge of the court, he will not, as a rule, be admitted as a witness. Anonymous, 2 C. & P. 411, 12 E. C. L. 194.

I. DEFINITION AND GENERAL PRINCIPLES—Definition.—Accord and satisfaction is a method of discharge of a contract, or cause of action arising either in contract or tort, consisting in the substitution of an agreement between the parties in satisfaction of such contract or cause of action, and an execution of that agreement.¹

1. An attempt has been made to make the definition given in the text wide enough to embrace the recognized usages of the term "accord and satisfaction" both in the field of contract and in the field of tort. The current definitions will be found too narrow. Thus:

Defined as a Method of Discharge of Contract.—Accord and satisfaction is an agreement in the case of a contract where the creditor agrees to accept some other thing in lieu of that which is contracted or promised to be done. Way v. Russell, 33 Fed. Rep. 7.

Accord and satisfaction is the substitution of another agreement between the parties in satisfaction of a former one, and an execution of the latter agreement. Pulliam v. Taylor, 50 Miss. 257; 2 Pars. Contr. (8th ed.) 799. These definitions exclude accord and satisfaction as a defense in an action ex delicto, for in such cases it is a substitute, not for a pre-

Effect—Rescission.—The effect of accord and satisfaction so long as it stands is to extinguish the debt or claim for which it is substituted, but the accord and satisfaction may be rescinded by subsequent agreement, and the debt or claim restored to its original status.¹

Relations to Other Titles.—Accord and satisfaction, when it consists in the substitution for a former contract of another contract which, without performance, is accepted in satisfaction of the old contract, is a novation.² When one by an instrument under seal discharges a right of action which he has against another, the instrument is technically a release, and the principles of accord and satisfaction no longer in strictness apply.³ When effected by the delivery and acceptance of negotiable instruments, accord and satisfaction becomes involved with both payment and novation; the rules in regard to payment by such instruments will be appropriately treated under those titles.⁴

II. THE AGREEMENT OF ACCORD—1. Subject Matter of the Accord.—The demand or cause of action in bar of which the accord and satisfaction is pleaded must relate to rights touching the person or personal property, or chattels real, not freehold estates in land.⁵ It must not be an illegal obligation or claim.⁶ It need not be an unliquidated demand, or a claim for damages merely.⁷ So ceding agreement, but for a right arising from a tortious act.

Other Definitions.—Accord is a satisfaction agreed upon between the party injuring and the party injured, which, when performed, is a bar to all actions upon this account. 3 Bl. Com. 5; Mitchell v. Hawley, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 418, 47 Am. Dec. 260; Rorer Iron Co. v. Trout, 83 Va. 397, 5 Am. St. Rep. 285; Sieber v. Amunson, 78 Wis. 682.

An accord and satisfaction may be briefly defined as the settlement of a dispute for the satisfaction of a claim, by an executed agreement between the party injuring and the party injured; or, to give a definition indicating more definitely its peculiar nature, it is something of legal value, to which the creditor before had no right, received in full satisfaction of the debt, without regard to the magnitude of the satisfaction. Bull v. Bull, 43 Conn. 462, citing 1 Smith Lead. Cas. (10th Am. ed.) 558.

These definitions predicate a party injuring and a party injured, that is, a cause of action already existing; but where a less sum is paid before due and is accepted in satisfaction, it is a good accord and satisfaction, Pinnel's Case, 5 Coke 117a; although at the time of the transaction there is no cause of action.

2. 2 Whart. Contr., § 904. See the title NOVATION.

3. See the title RELEASE.

4. See the titles PAYMENT; NOVATION.

Payment Means Properly the full satisfaction of a debt by money, not by an exchange or compromise, or an accord and satisfaction. Manice v. Hudson River R. Co., 3 Duer (N. Y.) 426.

5. Peytoe's Case, 9 Coke 79b.

Freehold Title to Lands.—"It is a maxim in law, that a freehold title to lands can never be barred by a collateral satisfaction; a maxim originating partly in the reverend esteem in which the common law holds a freehold, and partly in the consideration that to allow a freehold to be so barred would trench upon that fundamental principle of landed property, that no freehold shall be passed from one to another save by livery of seisin." 4 Minor's Inst. (2d ed.), p. 143.

6. An agreement to pay money by way of compromise will be nudum pactum, if there is no foundation for the claim or demand compromised. Emery v. Royal, 117 Ind. 299.

Illegal Sale of Liquors.—If a purchaser of intoxicating liquors, sold in violation of law, in settling mutual accounts with the seller credits him with the price of the same and receiving from him the balance found due after the allowance gives him a receipt in full settlement, such payment and receipt will not have the effect of an accord and satisfaction to bar an action to recover the sum so credited. Walan v. Kerby, 99 Mass. 1.

7. Need Not be Unliquidated Demand or Claim for Damages Merely.—Where the plaintiff brought an action of ejectione firmæ, and the defendant pleaded accord and satisfaction, it was held upon a demurrer by the plaintiff that the accord and satisfaction was a good plea. Peytoe's Case, 9 Coke 77b.

In this case the plaintiff "did much rely upon two rules put in the case in 7 E. 6, between Andrew and Boughey, 1 Dyer 75; one, That in all cases where nothing but amends shall be recovered in damages, there a concord with execution thereof is a good plea. But in this case of ejectione firmæ, aliquid amplius et magis dignum shall be recovered than damages, sc. the term. The other rule put is, In all actions grounded upon a wrong, as trespass, conspiracy, maintenance, and the like, where nothing in certainty is demanded, nor to be recovered but damages, concord is a good plea. But in this case the action is brought for the recovery of the possession of a house and lands demised in certain." The reason for the decision that the plea was good in this action was that "in all actions which suppose the wrong to be done vi et armis, there accord is a good plea. * * * And it appeareth that this case is not like to an action of waste against a lessee for an accord and satisfaction is a good plea in an action of false imprisonment, libel, or assault.¹ Where a payment is made and accepted in full satisfaction for injuries received, it is a good accord and satisfaction, if the terms are understood fully, notwithstanding the injuries are serious and permanent, and latent and undiscovered when the settlement is made.² So a payment made and received in full satisfaction for injury done to property is valid and binding as an accord and satisfaction.³

years, nor to the writ of quare ejecit infra terminum, which is quare ei de forceat, etc., without vi et armis, and yet, forasmuch as in these also but a chattel shall be recovered, accord is a good plea. * * * And it was resolved that the said rule in 7 E. 6 was consonant to the law, sc. that where nothing but amends is to be recovered in damages, there an accord is a good plea, but the same doth not oppose that although a chattel real or personal are also to be recovered, that accord shall be no plea; for in detinue of charters concerning land in fee, or freehold, the charters themselves shall be recovered, and yet in such case accord is a good plea, as it is holden in 7 E. 4, 23: the same law of detinue of a horse or other personal goods. And the other rule is also true, but, as the first, the same implieth not the negative, for where certainty is to be recovered, accord also is a good plea, as in the case of detinue of charters. In an action of debt upon a lease for years there is a certainty demanded, and yet accord is a good plea, as it is holden in 47 E. 3, 24; 10 H. 7, 24; 2 R. 3, Debt, 100."

1. False Imprisonment—Libel—Assault.—Foster v. Trull, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 456; Vedder v. Vedder, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 257; Boosey v. Wood, 3 H. & C. 484; Cock v. Honychurch, T. 2. Rideal v. Great Western R. Co., 1 F. & F. 706.

Personal Injuries.—Where the plaintiff, after an injury sustained in his person from the tort of the defendant, agrees with the defendant, or his agents, that in satisfaction of such injury the defendant should pay the expenses incurred by the plaintiff by reason of his injury, and should furnish him with a free conveyance to his point of destination, and the defendant performs his part of the agreement, the plaintiff cannot recover further damages for the tort. Stockton v. Frey, 4 Gill (Md.) 406, 45 Am. Dec. 138; Coon v. Knap, 8 N. Y. 402, 59 Am. Dec. 502; Ludington v. Miller, 38 N. Y. Super. Ct. 478.

But where the plaintiff after being injured by a railroad accident, not supposing that he had received any serious injuries, accepted from the railroad a trifling sum in compensation for damage to his clothes, it was held that the receipt of this sum could not be set up as an accord and satisfaction for a patent and severe injury to the brain or spine. Roberts v. Eastern Counties R. Co., 1 F. & F. 460. But see Hayes v. East Tennessee, etc., R. Co., 89 Ga. 264.

Presumption.—Where there is no express agreement that the amount paid shall be in satisfaction either in whole or in part of the cause of action, the presumption is that it was intended by the parties as a full recompense for the injury, and to operate as an accord and satisfaction barring a subsequent action to recover damages for the same injury. Hinkle v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 31 Minn. 434, 15 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 391.

Accord and Satisfaction with Deceased Bars Action by the Legal Representatives.—Where, by statute, the personal representatives of a person whose death was due to injuries received by the wrongful acts of another are given a right of action to recover damages for such wrongful acts, it has been held that an accord and satisfaction between the wrongdoer and the deceased, in the lifetime of the latter, bars an action by the representatives. Read v. Great Eastern R. Co., L. R. 3 Q. B. 555; Dibble v. New York, etc., R. Co., 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 183; Littlewood v. New York, etc., R. Co., 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. 547, 89 N. Y. 24; Fowlkes v. Nashville, etc., R. Co., 5 Baxt. (Tenn.) 663. See South, etc., Alabama R. Co. v. Sullivan, 59 Ala. 272.

3. Damage to Property.—A woman accepted fifty-five dollars in full payment and satisfaction of any claim against a railroad company, for damages to certain city lots by reason of the construction of said railroad; and subsequently the grade of the lots was raised five feet, to the great damage of said lots. It was held that she could not recover any further damages. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Hicks, 30 Kan. 289. See also St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hurst, 25 Ill. App. 98, 181.

The plaintiff owned property over the coal mine of the defendant. By reason of the defendant's working the mine the plaintiff was damaged, and he commenced suit against the defendant. An agreement was reached between them by which the action was stayed by the defendant paying for all damages done, repairing the same to the satisfaction of a surveyor, and paying all costs. The plaintiff claimed that after this agreement his property became useless by the sinking of the land, which resulted from the same acts that caused the original damage. It was held that no new cause of action arose from the subsequent damage, and that the agreement and its performance created a bar to the action. Nicklin v. Williams, 10 Exch. 259.

Upon a Disputed Claim for Damages for not making repairs, one party finally paid a certain sum to the other, who thereupon said that "all his claim was settled." This was held to be a satisfaction. Neary v. Bostwick, 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 514.

Upon an asserted claim for damages, unliquidated in amount, resulting from alleged negligent destruction of property, the claim

2. Form of the Accord.—An accord and satisfaction need not in general be in writing; and since, in order to be valid, it must be executed, it is not, although it concerns some interest in lands, within the statute of frauds.¹ From purely formal considerations arose certain ancient rules with regard to the effect of accord and satisfaction when pleaded to demands arising from contracts of record or under seal. Thus:

Covenant.—An accord and satisfaction made before breach of covenant is not a bar to an action for a subsequent breach, and it is immaterial whether the agreement is to pay at a specified time or is dependent on a condition.²

being made in good faith, and upon grounds reasonably inducing the belief that it is enforceable, an agreement on the one side to pay a specified amount, less than the alleged value of the property, and an agreement on the other side to accept the same in full satisfaction, constitute a valid and binding contract. Neibles v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 37 Minn. 151.

1. Lavery v. Turley, 6 H. & N. 239; Massey v. Johnson, 1 Exch. 241. See title FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

An oral agreement if executed may be pleaded to an action on a prior written agreement. Payne v. Barnett, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 312.

But it has been stated that accord and satisfaction is not a good plea unless the accord be of as high a nature as the obligation. M'Cormick v. Oliver, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 24. See, however, infra, this section.

2. Spence v. Healey, 8 Exch. 668, 20 Eng. L. & Eq. 476; Berwick v. Oswald, 1 El. & Bl. 295, 72 E. C. L. 295, 16 Eng. L. & Eq. 236; Snow v. Franklin, 1 Lutw. 358; Alden v. Blague, Cro. Jac. 99; Cumber v. Wane, 1 Stra. 426, 1 Smith's Lead. Cas. *357; Noyes v. Hopgood, Cro. Jac. 649; Neal v. Sheaffield, Cro. Jac. 254; Oliver v. Lease, Cro. Car. 86; Kaye v. Wagborne, 1 Taunt. 428; Harper v. Hampton, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 673; Herzog v. Sawyer, 61 Md. 344; Cabe v. Jameson, 10 Ired. (N. Car.) 193; Smith v. Brown, 3 Hawks (N. Car.) 580; Mitchell v. Hawley, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 414, 47 Am. Dec. 260; Garvey v. Jarvis, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 179; Esmond v. Van Benshoten, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 376. But see McCreery v. Day, 119 N. Y. 1, 16 Am. St. Rep. 793; Reichel v. Jeffrey, 9 Wash. 250.

The Reason for This was the common-law rule that an obligation under seal could only be discharged by an instrument of equal dignity. Blake's Case, 6 Coke 436; Preston v. Christmas, 2 Wils. 86; Levy v. Very, 12 Ark. 148; State Bank v. Littlejohn, 1 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 563. See also Ligon v. Dunn, 6 Ired. (N. Car.) 133.

How Far Recognized at Present.—How far the distinction or rule stated in the text would be accepted at the present day, may be doubtful. In Steeds v. Steeds, 22 Q. B. Div. 537, Willes, J., said: "It is clear that at law accord and satisfaction of a debt due upon a bond is no bar to the action. This is, however, purely the result of a technicality absolutely devoid of any particle of merits or justice, viz., that a contract under seal cannot be got rid of except by performance or by a contract also under seal." And it was held, in this case, that in equity delivery and acceptance of goods would operate as a satisfaction of the bond for the payment of money. Where at least equitable defenses are allowed in an action at law, such a satisfaction will be held a good defense. See Clerk v. Laurie, 1 H. & N. 458; Mostyn v. West Mostyn Coal, etc., Co., 1 C. P. Div. 145; Barelli v. O'Conner, 6 Ala. 617; Savage v. Blanchard, 148 Mass. 348; McCreery v. Day, 119 N. Y. 1, 16 Am. St. Rep. 793; Lawrence v. Barker, 9 Daly (N. Y.) 140; Webb v. Hewitt, 3 Kay & J. 438.

Distinction between Bond with a Condition, and Covenant.—"If the debt arises by the performance or breach of the condition [in a bond], and not by virtue of the bond, accord and satisfaction is a good plea in discharge of the condition, and must be so pleaded. Neal v. Sheaffield, Cro. Jac. 254, Yelv. 192. See also Anonymous, Cro. Eliz. 46. For 'though the bond is under seal, the condition is of a thing resting in evidence only, and may be compared to a matter in pais.' West v. Blakeway, 2 M. & G. 751, 40 E. C. L. 609. Thus payment and acceptance (Drake v. Mitchell, 3 East 251) of a less sum before the day, or at a different place, in satisfaction, may be pleaded in bar to the sum due by the condition; for parcel of the debt, before the day, or at a different place, may be more beneficial to the obligee than the whole at the day. And so of the gift of a horse, hawk, or robe, for the value of the satisfaction is not material. Pinnel's Case, 5 Coke 117a. * * * And note the distinction between covenant, and bond with a condition, in this respect; for in the case of a covenant the whole matter is under the seal of the party, and accord and satisfaction is no answer to an action before breach, but in a bond with a condition it is not so." 1 Selw. N. P. (13th Eng. ed.) p. 497.

As to the effect of release in such cases see the title RELEASE.

In Strang v. Holmes, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 224, it was held, after an examination of the early English authorities, that the distinction taken in those cases between a plea in satisfaction of the obligation and one in discharge of the condition, or money due, did not apply where the defendant, instead of pleading accord and satisfaction, specially set it up by notice under the general issue non est factum. And it was also held that under a statute similar to that of 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, limiting the Judgment.—At common law there could be no satisfaction in discharge of a judgment or decree, except by matter of record, and accord and satisfaction could not be pleaded as a defense to an action upon a judgment.¹ But under modern statutes allowing payment to be pleaded to bar the recovery of a debt of record, it has been held that the rule no longer applies, and accord and satisfaction is a good plea.²

3. Consideration of the Accord.—a. GENERALLY.—Must be of Benefit to the Creditor.—The agreement of accord must be founded upon a valuable consideration—a benefit, or possibility of benefit, accruing to the creditor or person relinquishing a demand or cause of action,³ or a detriment to the other party.⁴

recovery upon a bond with a condition to the principal and interest, it makes no difference whether the accord and satisfaction take place before or after the bond becomes due, because the condition of the bond, as well after as before forfeiture, is the amount due upon it.

Restoring Property Wrongfully Taken.—Restoring to the injured party his chattels or land of which he has been wrongfully dispossessed by the defendant is no consideration to support a promise by the injured person to the defendant not to sue him for these injuries. Keller v. Neal, 2 Watts (Pa.) 424. See Griffiths v. Owen, 13 M. & W. 58.

Note of Infant.—Where the creditor accepts from the debtor the note of a third person in full discharge, and the third person in an action against him on the note successfully defends on the ground of infancy, there is no accord and satisfaction. Wentworth v. Wentworth, 5 N. H. 410.

Discontinuance of Cross Actions.—An agreement by two, each having an action for false imprisonment pending against the other, to discontinue their respective actions and an actual discontinuance accordingly, is a good accord and satisfaction. Foster v. Trull, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 456; Vedder v. Vedder, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 257. See also Boosey v. Wood, 3 H. & C. 484.

Equitable Value.—Although it has been held that the thing given in satisfaction must have a distinct value at law, and, therefore, that the release of equities of redemption could not be a satisfaction for want of such value, Preston v. Christmas, 2 Wils. 86; yet it cannot be doubted that if the satisfaction be actual and for a real value in fact, either at law or in equity, it will be sufficient, 2 Pars. Contr. (8th ed.) 805. b. PART PAYMENT OF LIQUIDATED DEBT OR DEMAND—(1) Common law Rule.—The question of consideration with regard to accord and satisfaction has arisen most frequently in the consideration of the effect of part payment of a liquidated or unliquidated debt or claim.

Part Payment No Satisfaction.—The payment of a less sum at the time and place where a greater liquidated and undisputed sum is due was held at common law never to be a satisfaction of the greater sum, even though accepted as such, because there was no consideration for giving up the rest.¹ Nor, upon Ct.) 415; Landon v. Hutton, 50 N. J. Eq. 500.

Marriage Brokers Contract.—In Johnson v. Hunt, 81 Ky. 321, a contract made by an aged man with his grandson that if the latter would aid the grandfather in inducing a young woman to marry him, write letters to her, and use his influence with her to marry the grandfather, the latter would deliver to the grandson a note that he had against him for five thousand dollars, was held to be against public policy and void.

Agreement Not to Prosecute.—The plaintiff was confined in a jail by a justice of the peace, on a warrant sworn out by the prosecutor, and was afterwards released. He then sued the justice of the peace for assault and false imprisonment. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was imprisoned by him on a criminal charge, and released with his consent by an agreement between the plaintiff and the prosecutor in full satisfaction of the assault and imprisonment, and the discharge was accepted by the plaintiff in full satisfaction. The plea was held bad, because the satisfaction was not legal. Edgecombe v. Rodd, 5 East 294. See also Keeler v. Neal, 2 Watts (Pa.) 424.

The consideration of a note given in order to have a prosecution for bastardy dropped is good, although the maker be innocent of the charge. Moon v. Martin, 122 Ind. 211. Compare Emery v. Royal, 117 Ind. 299. But see Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Hull, 51 Ohio St. 270; Barber v. State, 24 Md. 383.

Origin of Common-law Rule.—The common-law rule that a part payment is not a satisfaction for a liquidated debt was first laid down in Pinnel's Case, 5 Coke 117a. And although in that case the rule was but a dictum of the court of common pleas, it has since been universally recognized by courts and text-writers. See upon the origin and history of the rule the very able opinion of Lord Blackburn in Foakes v. Beer, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 605, 54 L. J. Q. B. 130.

Comments on Common-law Rule.—It is said that "this rule of the common law is not founded on natural justice, nor can it be supported upon any other than technical grounds. An agreement to accept a barrel of flour in satisfaction of a debt of $1000 is valid, and if the flour is delivered the debt is satisfied. But an agreement to accept $999 in satisfaction of the debt is unavailing, and obligation to pay the dollar unimpaired." Report (1865) of Commissioners of Civil Code of New York 219.

"It is enough to say that the English common law stands committed to the absurd paradox that a debt of one hundred pounds may be perfectly well discharged by the creditor's acceptance of a peppercorn at the same time and place at which the one hundred pounds are payable, or of ten shillings at an earlier day or at another place, but that nothing less than a release under seal will make his acceptance of ninety-nine pounds in money at the same time and place a good discharge, although modern decisions have confined the absurdity within the narrowest possible limits." Pollock's Principles of Contract (1st Am. from 2d Eng. ed.) 165. See also Johnson v. Brannan, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 272; Kellogg v. Richards, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 116; Brooks v. White, 2 Met. (Mass.) 283, 77 Am. Dec. 95.

A Parol Release of a Judgment for less than the amount due is invalid, although indorsed on the execution. Weber v. Couch, 134 Mass. 26, 45 Am. Rep. 274. But see Gunn v. McAden, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 79; Bull v. Bull, 43 Conn. 455.

Receipt of Principal.—Where the amount of the payment exceeds the principal and only falls short slightly in the calculation of interest, the accord and satisfaction has been held to be valid. Johnson v. Brannan, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 268.

Where the creditor has received the principal debt, as such, in full, he cannot thereafter maintain an action for interest. Tenth Nat. Bank v. New York, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 429. See Tuttle v. Tuttle, 12 Met. (Mass.) 551, 46 Am. Dec. 701.

But it has been held that the common-law rule applies even though the creditor has received full payment of the principal of the debt. Foakes v. Beer, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 605, 54 L. J. Q. B. 130.

Payment of Costs.—The plaintiff agreed to release the defendant from the claim in suit on payment of costs. The defendant thereupon paid the costs. Such payment is a bar to the suit and a good accord and satisfaction. Baum v. Buntyn, 62 Miss. 110.

Release of Mortgage.—Where there was an agreement for a release of a mortgage, and payment of a sum less than the mortgage debt, it was held that under the circumstances this was no accord and satisfaction. Lankton v. Stewart, 27 Minn. 346.

A Bill Alleging an Acceptance of a Less Sum in satisfaction of a larger sum will be bad after verdict. Down v. Hatcher, 10 Ad. & El. 121, 37 E. C. L. 69, L. R. 2 P. & D. 292, 3 Jur. 651.

Insolvency of the Debtor.—The fact that the debtor is insolvent at the time when his creditor promises to accept from him a less sum than is due in full satisfaction of the debt does not affect the question of the consideration of such promise. Pearson v. Thomason, 15 Ala. 700, 50 Am. Dec. 159. See also Fellows v. Stevens, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 294. But see Gunn v. McAden, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 79; also Bull v. Bull, 43 Conn. 455.

Receipt under Protest.—Receiving part payment under protest, though tendered in full, will not establish accord and satisfaction. People v. Cortland County, 40 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 53.

Rule Changed by Statutes in Some States.—This rule of common law has been changed in some of the states by enacting statutes somewhat similar to the Virginia statute, which reads: "Part performance of an obligation, promise, or understanding, either before or after a breach thereof, when expressly accepted by the creditor in satisfaction, and rendered in pursuance of an agreement for that purpose, though without any new consideration, shall extinguish such obligation, promise, or undertaking." Virginia Code (1887), § 2885. See Dakota Comp. Laws 1887, § 3486; California Code, § 1524; Georgia Code (1882), § 2881.

Maine Rule.—In Maine it is provided that any payment less than the amount actually due, which has been received in full payment, will bar further action on the original claim. Weymouth v. Babcock, 42 Me. 42; Austin v. Smith, 39 Me. 203. Both parties, however, must concur in the agreement.

accord and satisfaction.¹ But this rule applies only when the claim thus settled is liquidated and undisputed.²

Release.—A release under seal, either with or without part payment, takes the case out of the rule just stated.³

Receipt.—A receipt in full when the whole amount has not been paid is not conclusive, and will not prevent the recovery of the balance due.⁴

(2) Variant Mode of Payment—(a) Generally.—Where, by a mode or time of payment, variant from that provided for in the contract, a new benefit is or may be conferred upon the creditor, or burden imposed upon the debtor, a new consideration arises out of the transaction and gives validity to the agreement of the creditor.⁵

This provision does not apply to a part payment with an agreement that the debtor shall have "his own time to pay the balance." Mayo v. Stevens, 61 Me. 562.

Georgia Rule.—In Georgia a part payment bars further action, if the accord and satisfaction is actually executed; but not when only a part of the amount agreed upon has been paid. Rogers v. Ball, 54 Ga. 15; Tyler Cotton Press Co. v. Chevalier, 56 Ga. 494; Troutman v. Lucas, 63 Ga. 466.

Payment in Services.—An agreement by a creditor to release a portion of his debt, in consideration that the debtor, who is insolvent, will apply the yearly proceeds of his personal labor in payment of the residue, is valid. Merchants' Bank v. Davis, 3 Ga. 112. See also Molyneaux v. Collier, 13 Ga. 407.

When Defendant Pays Part and also Surrenders Claims.—The defendant was sued for two thousand dollars, and agreed to pay one thousand five hundred dollars and costs, and to give up his claim to some collaterals held by the plaintiff. He carried out his agreement, and the plaintiff gave a receipt in full of notes, agreements, and claims of all kinds, it being understood that all suits were thereby discontinued. This was held to be a good accord and satisfaction, and barred an action on the balance of the debt. Pardee v. Wood, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 584.

If, in addition to an agreement to pay part of a debt in lieu of the whole, the debtor gives anything which may be considered a benefit to the creditor, and the creditor accepts it as a satisfaction of the whole, it is a good discharge of any further liability. Douglass v. White, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 621.

Discharge from Surety.—Procuring a written agreement from one probably liable on the default of the defendant, that he will take no advantage of the discharge of the defendant, is a good consideration to make part payment a satisfaction. Booth v. Campbell, 15 Md. 569.

Additional Security.—When additional security is added to the smaller sum, the promise to accept this sum is valid and binding. Keeler v. Salisbury, 33 N. Y. 648.

(d) Payment by Negotiable Note of Debtor.—Accord and satisfaction founded upon the receipt by the creditor of a negotiable note of the debtor, although for a less amount than the debt, has been held valid.³

accord, having a new consideration by reason of mutual promises, is pleaded, it will be binding upon the parties, and an action will lie for a breach of it. Billings v. Vanderbeck, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 546. See infra, this title, Execution of the Accord.

When the Defendant Pays Part and Agrees Not to Go into Bankruptcy.—Where the defendant being indebted to the plaintiff, and having an intention to petition in bankruptcy, proposed a compromise through the plaintiff's own attorney, and where the plaintiff agreed to receive a certain portion of the debt in full settlement, which portion the defendant accordingly paid over to the attorney, who notified the plaintiff that he had received the amount for him, to which he made no objection, and the defendant in consequence took no further steps to become a bankrupt, it was held that the payment to the attorney was in effect a payment to the plaintiff, and that the defendant's abandoning his intention of becoming a bankrupt was a sufficient consideration for receiving a part of the debt in settlement of the whole. Hinckley v. Arey, 27 Me. 362.

Paying Part of Debt and also Costs.—In an action on a liquidated debt of two hundred and ninety-nine dollars the creditor orally agreed to accept one hundred and fifty dollars in full, if the debtor paid the costs and expenses. The one hundred and fifty dollars was paid, and the debtor subsequently paid the costs. The last payment made a sufficient additional consideration, and the transaction was a good accord and satisfaction. Mitchell v. Wheaton, 46 Conn. 315, 33 Am. Rep. 24.

Assigning Contract.—When the answer sets forth that a certain contract is assigned to the plaintiff in full satisfaction and payment of a certain note sued on, it is immaterial how much is due on the contract. Luke v. Johnnycake, 9 Kan. 511.

The Mere Offer of a Judgment Creditor to accept a less amount in satisfaction of the judgment, if the offer is not accepted by the debtor, will not be a sufficient accord and satisfaction to bar the recovery of the full amount of the judgment. Bird v. Smith, 34 Me. 63, 56 Am. Dec. 635.

Part Payment in Different State.—The contract was made to pay two thousand dollars in Mississippi, but the creditor agreed to accept fifteen hundred dollars in full satisfaction if paid in New York. It was held that this was a sufficient consideration to bind the payee if the tender of payment in New York was made before the withdrawal of the proposition reached Mississippi. Jones v. Perkins, 29 Miss. 139.

2. Clark v. Abbott, 53 Minn. 88. See also Stagg v. Alexander, 55 Barb. (N. Y.) 70.

3. Payment by Check or Note.—Taking a check or receipt for a smaller sum than the amount due on promissory notes in payment and satisfaction of the notes is not necessarily an attempt to discharge a larger sum by payment of a smaller; the notes being salable, like any other personal property. Rockwell v. Taylor, 41 Conn. 55.

Where the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff for £125 7s. 9d. for goods sold and delivered, and gave to the plaintiff a check for £100 payable on demand, which the plaintiff accepted in satisfaction, it was held to be a good accord and satisfaction, because paid by check and not in cash. Goddard v. O'Brien, 9 Q. B. Div. 37.

So part payment by a negotiable note. Sibree v. Tripp, 15 M. & W. 23, overruling Cumber v. Wane, 1 Stra. 426, 1 Smith Lead. Cas. 357. See Foakes v. Beer, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 605, 54 L. J. Q. B. 130. But compare Commonwealth Bank v. Letcher, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 196.

These cases proceed upon the ground that the negotiability of the instrument given in satisfaction makes it in fact a different thing from a mere part payment in money, and more advantageous to the creditor than the original debt, which was not negotiable. See Bidder v. Bridges, 37 Ch. Div. 406.

Where the holder of a promissory note surrenders it to the maker and takes one of less amount in satisfaction until the full discharge, no action can be maintained for the unpaid portion. The surrender is equivalent to a release under seal. Draper v. Hitt, 43 Vt. 439, 5 Am. Rep. 292.

But taking a less amount than that which is due without surrendering the note is not

(e) Payment by Note of Third Person.—The note of a third person for a less amount than due, given and received in payment of the whole, is a good satisfaction.¹

(f) Payment in Property.—A money debt may be satisfied by payment in property if so accepted, whatever the value of such property may be,² or by satisfaction. Pearson v. Thomason, 15 Ala. 700, 50 Am. Dec. 159; Silvers v. Reynolds, 17 N. J. L. 275.

The receipt of a check which is dishonored and proves worthless is not a valid satisfaction. Weddigen v. Boston Elastic Fabric Co., 100 Mass. 422.

Note to Creditor Unindorsed by Debtor.—But it has been held that if the note of a third person, payable to the creditor, is given in payment of a debt, yet is not indorsed by the debtor, it does not extinguish the debt, but is considered to be only collateral security. Hunter v. Moul, 98 Pa. St. 13, 42 Am. Rep. 610.

Condition of Parties must be Rendered Better.—The giving and receiving of one obligation, in lieu of another, the parties to which, or some of them, are different, may be pleaded as an accord and satisfaction. But to render it available the condition of one or both parties must be rendered better. Bullen v. McGillicuddy, 2 Dana (Ky.) 90; Mehan v. Thompson, 71 Me. 492.

Where the creditor receives a note of a third person in full discharge of a debtor's note, he will not be allowed to prove, on a suit upon the debtor's note, that the debtor verbally agreed to make a further payment on it. Kellogg v. Richards, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 116.

Express Agreement Not Necessary.—When the notes of a third person are accepted by the creditor, an understanding that they were accepted in full discharge is sufficient, and it is not necessary to show an express agreement to that effect. Ralston v. Aultman (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 26 S. W. Rep. 746.

When Stranger is Insolvent.—When the plaintiff accepts a note of a third party in full satisfaction of the debt of the defendant, such acceptance is valid, even though the party is insolvent, if this fact is unknown at the time of settlement. Cadens v. Teasdale, 53 Vt. 469, 38 Am. Rep. 697.

Note of Infant.—An agreement of accord founded upon the acceptance of the negotiable note of an infant, although executed, is not valid as a satisfaction. Wentworth v. Wentworth, 5 N. H. 410.

Judgment Debt.—The note of a third party for the full amount of a judgment debt, given and accepted in payment thereof, extinguishes it. Sanders v. Decatur Branch Bank, 13 Ala. 353; Jones v. Ransom, 3 Ind. 327; Booth v. Smith, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 66; State Bank v. Fletcher, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 85.

In Pinnel's Case, 5 Coke 117a, it was resolved that the gift of a horse, hawk, or robe, etc., in satisfaction, is good. For it shall be intended that a horse, hawk, or robe, etc., might be more beneficial to the plaintiff than the money, in respect of some circumstance, or otherwise the plaintiff would not have accepted of it in satisfaction.

Creditor Retaining Property.—If the creditor lawfully acquires the debtor's property, and it is agreed that he may retain it in satisfaction of the debt, this will be an accord and satisfaction.²

Debtor Relinquishing Property.—An agreement that the debtor shall relinquish property in satisfaction of a debt is not valid, unless it is also agreed at what time it shall be relinquished.³

Must be no Agreement for Price.—It is, however, only when property is received in satisfaction without any price being agreed upon at which it is to be estimated between the parties, that it becomes a valid accord and satisfaction. But when the debtor delivers to his creditor, and the creditor receives, the property at a price agreed upon by them, and the amount thus paid is less than the debt, this is not accord and satisfaction, notwithstanding the creditor agrees to take it as full payment of the debt.⁴

(g) Giving Additional Security.—It is the general rule that giving further security for part of a debt, or other security, though for a less sum than the debt, and acceptance of it in full of all demands, make a valid accord and satisfaction.⁵

2. Jones v. Sawkins, 5 C. B. 142, 57 E. C. L. 142.

Delivery of Personal Property.—An undertaking on the part of the plaintiff to pay all the defendant's debts, and a delivery by the latter to him of specified personal property in consideration thereof, constitutes an accord and satisfaction. McCreary v. McCreary, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 147.

Acceptance of Deed.—In the absence of fraud, an acceptance by the creditor of a stranger's deed of all his title in specified land may be a good consideration to sustain an agreement to take a part for the whole debt, even though the title fails. Reed v. Bartlett, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 273.

Conveyance of Lands.—A debtor, by a deed reciting his indebtedness to the grantee, in consideration of the premises and of tendollars conveyed to him certain land in fee. It was held that the transaction was, upon its face, a satisfaction of the debt. Eckford v. DeKay, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 29.

Equity of Redemption.—When a creditor accepts from a debtor, in full payment of a writing obligatory, the right of redemption of the debtor to certain property, such acceptance is a good accord and satisfaction. Bailey v. Cowles, 86 Ill. 333.

Creditor's Failure to Make Examination.—It constitutes a good accord and satisfaction, that a creditor agrees to take certain property of his debtor in satisfaction of his debt, upon the faith of the representations of the debtor as to its condition, and that he actually takes it under such agreement after he has had an opportunity to test the truth of the representations. Williams v. Phelps, 16 Wis. 83.

Revenue Officers must Receive Money.—It is not a good accord and satisfaction, however, to pay a debt upon a revenue bond by the delivery and acceptance of property. Collectors of revenue must receive money. Martin v. U. S., 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 486.

Payment of Judgment.—It is a good accord and satisfaction by the agreement of parties when one hundred bushels of oats are given

But the acceptance of a new security for an existing debt does not operate as a payment unless so intended by the parties.¹

c. UNLIQUIDATED OR CONTINGENT DEMAND.—If the debt or claim is disputed or contingent at the time of payment, the payment, when accepted, of a part of the whole debt, is a good satisfaction.² Where the claim settled

Note Signed by Debtor and His Wife.—If a creditor receives from his debtor, in satisfaction of his claim, a note for a less sum, signed by the debtor and his wife, which all the parties at the time suppose is binding upon her, and such note is afterward paid out of her separate property, it will constitute a valid discharge of the original debt. Bowker v. Harris, 30 Vt. 424.

Indorsed by Stranger.—So is a note for less amount than the debt, indorsed by a third party, a good accord and satisfaction. Varney v. Conery, 77 Me. 527.

Pledge of Dower Right.—Where a promise by a debtor to pay a smaller sum than that which is due to extinguish an existing debt is reinforced by the debtor's giving, as additional security, a mortgage of real estate in which his wife joins, the pledge of her inchoate right of dower for such payment is sufficient to make it a valid accord and satisfaction. Keeler v. Salisbury, 33 N. Y. 648.

Mortgage to Secure Part of Debt.—But where a debtor, merely for the purpose of securing a part of the note and not by way of substitution, gives a mortgage on his own estate alone, it is a mere accord without satisfaction, and does not extinguish the debt. Platts v. Walrath, Hill & D. Supp. (N. Y.) 59.

Acceptance by a Creditor, of a Note of the Debtor for half the debt, with two securities, in full satisfaction—the note being paid—is a good accord and satisfaction for the whole debt. Mason v. Campbell, 27 Minn. 54. See also Colburn v. Gould, 1 N. H. 279.

Notes of Stranger with Debtor as Indorser.—A lessor sued the lessee on a sealed lease. The lessee testified that he delivered to the lessor the notes of a third party with the lessee's indorsement. The lessor verbally agreed to accept them in payment of the rent due and to fall due under the lease. This was held to be an accord and satisfaction not only for a past, but for a future, breach of the covenant to pay rent. Lawrence v. Barker, 9 Daly (N. Y.) 140. See Booth v. Smith, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 66; Frisbie v. Larned, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 450; Stafford v. Bacon, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 532, 37 Am. Dec. 366.

Giving Smaller Notes.—Where a creditor requested a debtor to give new notes for small sums in place of the old debt, so that he might sue before a justice, and the debtor did as requested, it was held that the giving of the new notes under such circumstances constituted a sufficient consideration and canceled the old debt. In re Dixon, 2 McCrary (U. S.) 556.

Relinquishment of Part and Security for Remainder.—It is a valid agreement when a creditor agrees to relinquish a portion of his debt if the debtor will secure the residue, the debtor being in failing circumstances. Gunn v. McAden, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 79. See also Bull v. Bull, 43 Conn. 455. But see Pearson v. Thomason, 15 Ala. 700, 50 Am. Dec. 159; Fellows v. Stevens, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 294.

Delivery of Execution.—The delivery by the debtor to the creditor, of an execution against third parties, in favor of the debtor, for a sum larger than the debt, and its acceptance by the creditor in pursuance of an agreement of accord, is a good accord and satisfaction, because the creditor obtains a security of a third person and a large sum thrown into the bargain. Thatcher v. Dudley, 2 Root (Conn.) 169.

Understanding that Third Parties shall Assign Property.—Where one party furnished another with money and accepted a note therefor, with the understanding that the payor should procure third parties to assign to himself certain liens on lands claimed by the payee, which liens the payor should hold for the benefit of the payee in satisfaction of the note, such agreement was held to amount to an accord and satisfaction, and to constitute a payment of the note. Treadwell v. Himmelmann, 50 Cal. 9.

Draft upon a Third Person.—When a draft upon a third person is offered by the debtor, and accepted in full satisfaction by the creditor, who thereupon surrenders the evidence of indebtedness, and the draft is duly paid, it amounts to a good accord and satisfaction. Stagg v. Alexander, 55 Barb. (N. Y.) 70. Compare Weddigen v. Boston Elastic Fabric Co., 100 Mass. 422; Wentworth v. Wentworth, 5 N. H. 410.

Eastern Draft.—The acceptance of an Eastern draft may be good as an accord and satisfaction of a judgment, though for less than the amount thereof. Reid v. Hibbard, 6 Wis. 175.

So an assignment of property by deed to secure debts with a power of sale on giving six months' notice, will not be a valid satisfaction, but only a collateral security. *Emes v. this execution of the accord is the satisfaction.¹ Satisfaction consists in the actual performance by one party of the agreement of accord, and the acceptance by the other party of such performance in full satisfaction of the original cause of action or contract.²

A Full, Perfect, and Complete Satisfaction is required to make good the plea of accord and satisfaction. Jones v. Fennimore, 1 Greene (Iowa) 146; Clark v. Dinsmore, 5 N. H. 136.

"Every accord ought to be full, complete, and perfect, for if divers things are to be performed by accord, the performance of part is not sufficient, but all ought to be performed, and therewith agreeth 17 E. 4, 2; 6 H. 7, 10; Plow. Com. 5." Peyton's Case, 9 Coke 79b. See Cock v. Honychurch, T. Raym. 203, 2 Keb. 690; Francis v. Crywell, 5 B. & Ald. 886.

The Creditor's Offer to Accept Less than the amount of the judgment will not, unaccepted by the debtor, be a sufficient accord and satisfaction to bar the recovery of the full amount of the judgment. Bird v. Smith, 34 Me. 63, 16 Am. Dec. 635. But see Matthews v. Merrick, 4 Md. Ch. 364.

Agreement of a Debtor to Deliver His Notes.—When an agreement is made by a debtor to deliver, in full satisfaction of a larger sum due, his notes or money for a less sum, even though there is a consideration for the agreement, it must, in order to operate as a discharge, be fully and fairly performed in all its parts both in time and amount. Memphis v. Brown, 1 Flipp. (U. S.) 188. See Harding v. Commercial Loan Co., 84 Ill. 251; Robertson v. Campbell, 2 Call (Va.) 421.

Condition Precedent.—Accord and satisfaction as to a condition precedent is equivalent to a performance. Richards v. Carl, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 313.

Agreement to Credit upon Executory Contract.

—An agreement by which two persons agree to treat the amount due from one to the other upon a certain contract, as a part payment upon a subsequent executory contract between them under which their relations as debtor and creditor are reversed, is an accord and satisfaction, and bars a recovery upon the preceding contract. Peck v. Davis, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 490.

Discharge in Consideration of Delivery of Deed.

—An agreement between creditor and debtor that the former will give a discharge of the debt in return for a deed of certain lands belonging to the latter is executed by the receipt of the deed, and will be good as an accord and satisfaction. Eaton v. Lincoln, 13 Mass. 424.

Guardian.—Acceptance by a ward, after he is of age, of promissory notes which the guardian had not collected and was therefore liable to pay, is not a good plea to an action on the guardian's bond unless they are collected. Com. v. Miller, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 205.

Stockholder Withdrawing according to By-laws.—Where a stockholder in a building association, under a resolution of the association permitting borrowers to withdraw on the payment of a stipulated amount, the stock to be then "withdrawn and canceled," withdrew, paying off his returns and stock, which stock was then marked on the books as "canceled and withdrawn," it was held that the company could not afterward recover for dues which subsequently accrued thereon. After an acceptance of the terms of the resolution and the payment by the debtor of the sums found thereby to be due, the new contract was executed, and the case of accord and satisfaction made out. Miller v. Second Jefferson Bldg. Assoc., 50 Pa. St. 32.

1. Burgess v. Denison Paper Mfg. Co., 79 Me. 266.

2. Acceptance of the execution of the accord is a sine qua non of a good plea of accord and satisfaction. Drake v. Mitchell, 3 East 251; Sinard v. Patterson, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 353; Peace v. Stennet, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 450; Johnson v. Hunt, 81 Ky. 321; Young v. Jones, 64 Me. 563, 18 Am. Rep. 279; Clifton v. Litchfield, 106 Mass. 34; Washburn v. Winslow, 16 Minn. 33; Barnes v. Lloyd, 1 How. (Miss.) 584; Watson v. Elliott, 57 N. H. 511.

To constitute a good defense of accord and satisfaction of a debt by the giving of a note, it must appear that the note was both given and received as satisfaction. Maze v. Miller, 1 Wash. (U. S.) 328; State Bank v. Littlejohn, 1 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 566; Jones v. Fennimore, 1 Greene (Iowa) 146; Brenner v. Herr, 8 Pa. St. 106.

Accord without Satisfaction.—It follows from these principles that an accord without satisfaction is invalid.¹

sooner than the debt fell due, and a tender to the counsel of the creditor, without alleging an acceptance by either the creditor or counsel, it was held that there was no execution of the accord and satisfaction, and that the defense failed. Hearn v. Kiehl, 38 Pa. St. 147, 80 Am. Dec. 472.

Acceptance Implies Act of Will.—Acceptance in satisfaction demands an act of the will in addition to the actual reception of the thing agreed upon. Hardman v. Bellhouse, 9 M. & W. 596. See Jacobs v. Day, 5 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 410, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.), p. 94.

It depends upon the intention of the parties, and is a question of fact for the jury. Schemerhorn v. Loines, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 311; Porter v. Talcott, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 359; Hart v. Boller, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 162, 16 Am. Dec. 536; Mason v. Wickersham, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 100; Jones v. Shawhan, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 257.

Saying "It is not enough, but there will be no trouble," at a time of receiving payment, is not an acceptance in full satisfaction. Wiley v. Warden, 27 Vt. 655.

Satisfaction of Entire Demand.—An accord and satisfaction must be a satisfaction of the entire debt or demand. Line v. Nelson, 58 N. J. L. 362; Fenwick v. Phillips, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 87; Bliss v. Swartz, 7 Lans. (N. Y.) 186, 64 Barb. (N. Y.) 215; Bryan v. Foy, 69 N. Car. 45; Murphy v. Kastner, 50 N. J. Eq. 214.

The entry in a suit that the costs are to be paid by the defendant is no evidence for the jury of an accord and satisfaction. Bond v. McNider, 3 Ired. (N. Car.) 440; Carter v. Wilson, 2 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 276.

Receipt.—A receipt in full is evidence of an accord and satisfaction, but not so a receipt not expressed to be in full. McCullen v. Hood, 3 Dev. (N. Car.) 219.

A contractor's acceptance of a check which purports to be an award, and giving a receipt "for amount awarded by the commandant as damages arising out of the contract," constitutes a good accord and satisfaction. Murphy's Case, 14 Ct. Cl. 508. See also Hemingway v. Stansell, 106 U. S. 399.

A Release Given by the Creditor's Agent, but not purporting to have been made by the creditor, although invalid as a release, is competent as evidence of an agreement which, ratified by the subsequent conduct of the creditor in accepting with knowledge its fruits in whole or in part, may amount to an accord and satisfaction. Evans v. Wells, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 324.

Conditional Acceptance.—Where an offer of an accord is made upon the condition that it is to be taken in full of demands, the party to whom it is made has no alternative but to refuse it or accept it upon such condition, and if he takes it, no protest or declaration made by him at the time can affect the case. Bull v. Bull, 43 Conn. 455; Berdell v. Bissell, 6 Colo. 162; Deutmann v. Kilpatrick, 46 Mo. App. 624; Fuller v. Kemp, 138 N. Y. 231; Preston v. Grant, 34 Vt. 201.

The Case would be Different if the debtor assented to the creditor receiving it upon his own terms. Pottlitzer v. Wesson, 8 Ind. App. 472; Potter v. Douglass, 44 Conn. 541; Nas-soiy v. Tomlinson, 65 Hun (N. Y.) 491.

In Order to Make Such an Acceptance Binding as an accord and satisfaction, it is necessary that the money should be offered in satisfaction of the claim, and that the offer be accompanied with such acts and declarations as amount to a condition that if the money is accepted it must be accepted in satisfaction, and such that the party to whom it is offered is bound to understand therefrom that if he takes it he takes it subject to such condition.

Where a debtor sent to his creditor a statement of the accounts between them, with a note for the apparent balance and a letter explaining some of the items, and ending as follows: "Trusting you will find this correct and satisfactory," and the creditor retained the note and wrote to the debtor, giving his views of the items in controversy, it was held that the transaction did not amount to an accord and satisfaction, since there was no act or declaration accompanying the giving of the note which amounted to a condition that if it was accepted it was to be taken in satisfaction of the claim. Boston Rubber Co. v. Peerless Wringer Co., 58 Vt. 551.

As to the effect of payment by a note or bill, see the title PAYMENT.

A Verbal Agreement between the holder and the maker of a note to accept in full satisfaction the payment of a smaller sum at an earlier that the plaintiff accepted the agreement alone in satisfaction and discharge of his cause of action.¹

Conflicting Authorities.—While the great weight of authority is uniform in requiring that the accord be executed, cases are found supporting a less stringent rule holding tender in certain cases to be sufficient, although the promise was not in itself accepted in satisfaction.² Thus it has been held that where the day is binding, and an action lies against the holder for breach of such agreement. Schweider v. Lang, 29 Minn. 254, 43 Am. Rep. 202.

Bond Satisfied by Judgment.—A judgment may be a satisfaction of a bond if accepted as such. Seaman v. Haskins, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 195. See Frisbie v. Larned, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 450.

What Constitutes New Consideration.—If by a subsequent executory simple contract, made and accepted in satisfaction of a simple contract debt or cause of action, increased liabilities are undertaken by the defendant, if an additional sum of money is agreed to be paid or additional acts and duties to be performed, for the nonperformance of which an action will lie against the defendant, or if a surrender or exchange of securities has been agreed upon, or an apportionment of property and debts, this new contract, with the remedies thereupon, will constitute a good accord and satisfaction. Comyns's Dig., tit. Accord, (B. 4); Creager v. Link, 7 Md. 259.

When New Promise is Performed.—But even a promise, which would not itself be a satisfaction, may, if it be fully performed, at the right time and in the right way (not merely tendered), become a satisfaction. Comyns's Dig., tit. Accord, (B. 4); Payne v. Barnet, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 312.

When New Promise is Executory and Not Binding.—If the new promise is executory, and it is not binding, it is no satisfaction until it be executed; and although it is to be performed on a future day certain, the promisee may have his original action before the new promise becomes due. Comyns's Dig., tit. Accord, (B. 4).

1. Hall v. Flocton, 16 Q. B. 1039, 4 Eng. L. & Eq. 185.

Giving and receiving an obligation in satisfaction of another, the parties to which, or some of them, are different, may be pleaded in accord and satisfaction. Bullen v. McGillicuddy, 2 Dana (Ky.) 90; Bruce v. Bruce, 4 Dana (Ky.) 530.

When it is manifest that performance was contemplated by the parties, the mere promise to perform is not satisfaction. Yazoo, etc., R. Co. v. Fulton, 71 Miss. 385, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.), p. 94.

When Execution of Promise Unnecessary.—In Babcock v. Hawkins, 23 Vt. 561, Redfield, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "We think it must be regarded as fully settled, that an agreement upon sufficient consideration, fully executed, so as to have operated in the minds of the parties as a full satisfaction and settlement of a pre-existing contract or account between the parties, is to be regarded as a valid settlement, whether the new contract be ever paid or not; and that the party is bound to sue upon the new contract, if such were the agreement of the parties. This is certainly the common understanding of the matter. It is reasonable, and we think it is in accordance with the strictest principles of technical law. 1. There is no want of consideration in any such case, where one contract is substituted for another, and especially so where the amount due upon the former contract or account is matter of dispute. The liquidating a disputed claim is always a sufficient consideration for a new promise. Holcomb v. Stimpson, 8 Vt. 141. 2. The accord is sufficiently executed, when all is done which the party agrees to accept in satisfaction of the pre-existing obligation. This is ordinarily a matter of intention, and should be evidenced by some express agreement to that effect, or by some unequivocal act evidencing such a purpose. This may be done by surrender of the former securities, by release or receipt in full, or in any other mode. All that is requisite is, that the debtor should have executed the new contract to that point whence it was to operate as satisfaction of the pre-existing liability, in the present tense. That is shown in the present case by executing a receipt in full, the same as if the old contract had been upon note or bill, and the papers had been surrendered. 3. In every case where one security or contract is agreed to be received in lieu of another, whether the substituted contract be of the same or a higher grade, the action in case of failure to perform must be upon the substituted contract. And in the present case, as it is obvious to us that the plaintiffs agreed to accept the note, and the defendant's promise to pay the costs, in full satisfaction, and in the place of the former liability, the defendant remained liable only upon the new contract. 4. In all cases where the party intends to retain his former remedy, he will neither surrender nor release it; and whether the party shall be permitted to sue upon his original contract is matter of intention always; unless the new contract be of a higher grade of contract, in which case it will always merge the former contract, notwithstanding the agreement of the debtor to still remain liable upon the original contract."

2. The earliest reported case to depart from the strict rule of the common law as to execution seems to have been Case v. Barber, T. Raym. 450, decided in the Court of King's Bench in 1681. In that case the defendant's counsel is reported to have alleged that "though in Peytoe's Case, and formerly, it hath been held that an accord cannot be pleaded unless it appears to be executed (9 Coke 796; 3 Cro. 46, pl. 2), yet of late it hath been held that upon mutual promises an action lies; and consequently, there being equal accord is executory, but supported by a valuable consideration and with the date fixed for its execution, and the debtor performs his part of the agreement and makes tender, the accord and satisfaction is good although the creditor refuses to accept.¹ It has also been held that where the failure to perform an executory accord is due entirely to the fault of one of the parties thereto, such party cannot avail himself of the fact that the accord was not fully executed.²

remedy on both sides, an accord may be pleaded without execution as well as an arbitrament, and by the same reason that an arbitrament is a good plea without performance; to which the court agreed, for the reason of the law being changed, the law is thereby changed, and anciently remedy was not given for mutual promises, which now is given; and for this reason, Mich. 18, Car. B. R. Palmer v. Lawson." The decision of the case, however, turned upon the absence of consideration and the statute of frauds.

In Coit v. Houston, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 243, it appeared that, A. being indebted to D. upon a promissory note, it was agreed in writing between them that A. should deliver to B. coal of a certain quality, at a stipulated price, to an amount equal to the amount of the note, but no time or place was fixed for delivery. A., having large quantities of coal of the requisite quality in his coal yard, at different times tendered B. the coal in satisfaction of the note. B. made no objection to the place or mode of delivery, but said at one time that he would send and take the coal, and at another that he was not ready to receive it, and finally neglected to take it. In an action afterwards brought by B. against A. on the note it was held that the agreement for the delivery of the coal was valid, and that the tender on the part of A. was equivalent to performance, so as to bar the plaintiff's action, and might be pleaded by way of accord and satisfaction. Thompson, J., in delivering his opinion in this case, cited Case v. Barber, T. Raym. 450, with approval.

In Tilton v. Alcott, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 598, Coit v. Houston, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 243, is distinguished, and the dictum of Thompson, J., founded upon the case of Case v. Barber, is overruled. In delivering the opinion of the court Johnson, J., said: "In a very early case (Coit v. Houston, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 243) Thompson, J., laid down the rule that the agreement by way of accord, in order to be effectual as a bar, 'must be executed and satisfied with a recompense in fact, or with an action or other remedy to execute it and recover compensation;' but the decision in that case was placed by all the other judges upon the ground that the new agreement had been substantially performed, which fact had been settled by the verdict of the jury, and Thompson, J., places his opinion in part upon the same ground."

In Kromer v. Heim, 75 N. Y. 574, 31 Am. Rep. 491, Andrews, J., speaking for the court, said: "The doctrine which has sometimes been asserted, that mutual promises which give a right of action may operate and are good as an accord and satisfaction of a prior obligation, must, in this state, be taken with the qualification that the intent was to accept the new promise as a satisfaction of the prior obligation. Where the performance of the new promise was the thing to be received in satisfaction, then until performance there is not complete accord, and the original obligation remains in force;" citing Tilton v. Alcott, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 598, and other New York cases.

1. Whitsett v. Clayton, 5 Colo. 476. See also Foster v. Collins, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 1.

In Whitsett v. Clayton, 5 Colo. 476, the court cited and relied upon Bradley v. Gregory, 2 Campb. 383; Coit v. Houston, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 243; Jenness v. Lane, 26 Me. 475; Heirn v. Carron, 11 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 361, 49 Am. Dec. 65; Jones v. Perkins, 29 Miss. 142; Christie v. Craigie, 20 Pa. St. 430; Bradshaw v. Davis, 12 Tex. 336; Babcock v. Hawkins, 23 Vt. 561; Latapee v. Pecholier, 2 Wash. (U. S.) 180; Story on Contr., § 982b; Add. Contr. 325, 326.

An examination of these authorities shows that the doctrine laid down by the court is not firmly established. Babcock v. Hawkins, 23 Vt. 561; Christie v. Craigie, 20 Pa. St. 430; Jones v. Perkins, 29 Miss. 142, merely affirm the doctrine already considered, that where the promise itself is received in satisfaction of the accord no execution is necessary. In Latapee v. Pecholier, 2 Wash. (U. S.) 180, which was a nisi prius case, the question was not before the court, for Washington, J., instructed the jury that the defendant had not shown either an actual or technical performance on his part. In Heirn v. Carron, 11 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 361, 49 Am. Dec. 65, it was decided that an accord with tender of satisfaction and refusal is equivalent to satisfaction. The court cites in support of this doctrine, Coit v. Houston, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 243; Allen v. Harris, 1 Ld. Raym. 122; Lynn v. Bruce, 2 H. Bl. 317; Peytoe's Case, 9 Coke 80. The first of these cases must be regarded, as has been seen, as being overruled, and the other cases cited are in direct opposition to the doctrine announced. Jenness v. Lane, 26 Me. 475, tends to support the doctrine for which it is cited, but it is to be noted that the supreme court of Maine has in later cases declared that tender without acceptance is not good as an accord and satisfaction. White v. Gray, 68 Me. 579. Bradshaw v. Davis, 12 Tex. 336, is a case on all fours with Coit v. Houston, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 243, and proceeds avowedly upon the authority of that decision.

2. Where it appeared that the plaintiff had made a contract with the defendant to deliver certain quantities of lumber to him upon certain specified terms, but that he failed to deliver the lumber as agreed, that the parties thereupon entered upon a second agreement by which the plaintiff was to deliver

Mutual Promises.—It has been held that an accord with mutual promises to perform is good, although unperformed when the action is brought, for the reason that the party has a remedy to compel the performance.¹

3. Who may Execute the Accord.—The authorities are divided upon the question whether performance must be by the debtor or his agent, not by a stranger, as it has been said that the creditor is not bound to receive performance at the hands of a third party.² But when the stranger acts as the debtor's agent, or the creditor accepts the payment in discharge of the debtor's liability, it will be a good satisfaction.³ Plea of accord and satisfaction is bad lumber within a given time, that at the end of that time a large portion of the lumber was still undelivered, and that the defendant refused to proceed further in the execution of the second agreement, it was held that the plaintiff could not recover upon the original contract; that the failure to execute the accord agreement being entirely due to the plaintiff, the defendant was in a position to decline further proceedings thereunder. Cary v. McIntyre, 7 Colo. 173.

Where by the terms of the accord agreement the creditor was to have the privilege of electing between its performance by the conveyance of certain property or the payment of one hundred dollars in cash by the debtor, and the creditor never made this election, and the defendant was in constant readiness to do either, it was held that, the failure to make the accord a full satisfaction being the fault of the plaintiff, the defendant was not precluded from the benefit of this defense. Tucker v. Edwards, 7 Colo. 209.

1. Case v. Barber, T. Raym. 450; Comyns's Dig., tit. Accord, (B. 4); Wentworth v. Bullen, 9 B. & C. 840, 17 E. C. L. 503. See Billings v. Vanderbeck, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 546; Thurber v. Sprague, 17 R. I. 634.

2. Stark v. Thompson, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 302; Clow v. Borst, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 37; Daniels v. Hallenbeck, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 408. See also, as to payments or novation by a stranger, the titles NOVATION; PAYMENT.

It is said, in Stark v. Thompson, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 302, that accord and satisfaction by a stranger can be pleaded in equity.

A stranger voluntarily paying the amount due to the creditor does not acquire by such payment any right of action against the debtor; neither does such voluntary payment bar the creditor's right of action against the debtor. Brown v. Chesterville, 63 Me. 241.

Where the defendant accepted a bill of exchange drawn by the creditor, and the indorsee afterward brought suit against the defendant, who pleaded that the creditor delivered property to the plaintiff in full satisfaction of the debt, and that the plaintiff held the bill and brought suit against the will and consent of the creditor, it was held that the plea was no bar to the plaintiff's right to recover against the defendant on the bill. Jones v. Broadhurst, 9 C. B. 173, 67 E. C. L. 173.

Draft on Stranger for Part of Debt.—Where a debtor offers his creditor a draft on a stranger for fifty per cent of the debt in full payment of his indebtedness, and the draft is so accepted and is paid, and the creditor surrenders the evidence of indebtedness, there is a good accord and satisfaction. Stagg v. Alexander, 55 Barb. (N. Y.) 70.

Payment by Surety on Appeal Bond.—After a decree in the appellate court, the surety on an appeal bond pays a certain amount and takes a receipt stating that the money paid is in "full satisfaction of the decree rendered against" the surety. Such payment constitutes a good accord and satisfaction, and parol evidence cannot be adduced to show any agreement that the receipt was given on condition that no one else should appeal. Boffinger v. Tuyes, 120 U. S. 198.

Authorities Discussed.—In Snyder v. Pharo, 25 Fed. Rep. 398, it was held that satisfaction of a debt by the hands of a stranger is good when made by the authority of or subsequently ratified by the defendant, and that a subsequent ratification by pleading accord and satisfaction would be sufficient. In this case Wales, J., after citing Grymes v. Blofield, Cro. Eliz. 541, and Jones v. Broadhurst, 9 C. B. 173, 67 E. C. L. 173, proceeded: "None of the later English decisions adhere with any strictness to the rule, and it is quite evident from an examination of them that a plea of satisfaction by a stranger, when properly averred, would be held good. Belshaw v. Bush, 11 C. B. 191, 73 E. C. L. 191; Goodwin v. Cremer, 18 Q. B. 757, 83 E. C. L. 757; Kemp v. Balls, 10 Exch. 607; Simpson v. Eggington, 10 Exch. 845. The rule continued to be applied and enforced in this country apparently without consideration or inquiry of its justice or authority, notably in Clow v. Borst, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 37; Daniels v. Hallenbeck, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 408; Bleakley v. White, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 655; and as late as 1873, in Atlantic Dock Co. v. New York, 53 N. Y. 66. But its unsoundness and inequity were so fully exposed by Bartley, C. J., in Leavitt v. Morrow, 6 Ohio St. 72, as to leave no justification for the further recognition of its authority. * * * The same subject is discussed in the notes to Cumber v. Wane, 1 Smith Lead. Cas. 357, and to Vadakin v. Soper, 2 Am. Lead. Cas. 163, in which the learned editors concur that the rule has been virtually abrogated."

unless the payments of the stranger are alleged to have been made for and on account of the debt, or to have been ratified by the defendant.¹

4. Presumption from Lapse of Time.—It has been held that a lapse of twenty years after actual damage suffered from the breach of a covenant furnishes a presumption which, if not rebutted, will sustain the plea of accord and satisfaction.²

IV. Settlement between Mortgagor and Insurer.—Where the plaintiff held a mortgage upon certain real estate, which contained a covenant on the part of the mortgagor to keep the buildings insured for the benefit of its holder, and pursuant to this covenant the owner of the fee procured from defendant a policy of insurance on the buildings, by the terms of which any loss was made payable to the plaintiff "as his mortgage interest may appear," it was held that a settlement for a loss within the policy made between the owner and the defendant, without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff, was no bar to a recovery by the plaintiff against the defendant. *Hathaway v. V. EFFECT OF FRAUD, IGNORANCE, OR MISTAKE.—Accord and satisfaction, procured by the defendant's wilfully misrepresenting or suppressing any material fact in the statement of his affairs, is void, and a sealed release based thereon will be set aside;⁴ it will also be set aside if it is shown that the par-

But in order for this rule to apply it seems that there must be such a unity of interest among the joint creditors that all must be joined in a strictly personal action for its recovery. Hathaway v. Orient Ins. Co., 134 N. Y. 409.

Satisfaction by Third Party in Collusion with Debtor.—Where a judgment debtor furnished his own money to a third party with instructions to buy from his creditor the judgment against him for a smaller amount in full satisfaction of the whole, and this third party did so satisfy the judgment without disclosing the real facts, it was held that such satisfaction was void and the payment only partial. Shaw v. Clark, 6 Vt. 507, 27 Am. Dec. 578. See also Carter v. Sheriff, 1 Hawks (N. Car.) 483.

Discharge Induced by False Representations.—A composition and discharge will be set aside where it was induced by representations of insolvency and poverty, while the debtor had previously made a fraudulent conveyance of his property. Richards v. Hunt, 6 Vt. 251, 27 Am. Dec. 545.

Mere Formal Execution of Promise.—Though the promise is executed literally, or in form, if it is rendered worthless by an act of commission or omission on the part of the debtor there will be no accord and satisfaction. Turner v. Browne, 3 C. B. 157, 54 E. C. L. 157; Coles v. Soulsby, 21 Cal. 47; Hall v. Smallwood, Peake's Add. Cas. 13.

Settlement with Knowledge Not Set Aside.—An action cannot be founded on fraud or misrepresentations where a settlement has been made with full knowledge on the plaintiff's part of the facts relied on to constitute fraud. King v. Williams, 71 Iowa 74. See also Pierce v. Ten Eyck, 9 Mont. 349.

Settlement Set Aside in Part.—In an action to set aside a settlement for fraud and misrepresentation, the settlement may be set aside in part and left undisturbed as to the balance. Reid v. Beyle, 39 Kan. 559.

1. Mowatt v. Wright, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 360, 19 Am. Dec. 508; Calkins v. Griswold, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 210; Burr v. Veeder, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 412; Wheadon v. Olds, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 174; Reed v. Horn, 143 Pa. St. 323.

Accord by Advice of Third Party.—But where the accord was made upon the advice of a third party, who was mistaken as to some facts, the consequent satisfaction formed a bar to further action if the principals in the transaction were not mistaken about the facts. Thompson v. Bennett, 34 Mo. 477.

Waiver of Conditions.—A condition of an accord agreement, like that of any other contract, may be waived by both parties. Cary v. McIntyre, 7 Colo. 173.

Satisfaction Based on Erroneous Account.—In an action on a covenant in a demise of mines alleging nonpayment of tonnage rents and not keeping books of account, the plea was, that the defendant did keep books of account, which were submitted to the plaintiff and a certain amount accepted by the plaintiff in full satisfaction. The replication was that by reason of the mistake and ignorance on the part of the plaintiff divers quantities of tonnage rents were omitted from the accounts. It was held that the plea afforded no answer to the action, and if it afforded a prima facie defense, it was answered by the replication. Perry v. Attwood, 25 L. J. Q. B. 408.

What Constitutes a Mutual Mistake.—As to what is such a mutual mistake of fact as will authorize a court to open and correct an accord and satisfaction, see Calkins v. Griswold, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 208; Bensen v. Perry, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 16; Woodford v. Marshall, 72 Wis. 129; Langevin v. St. Paul, 49 Minn. 189.

When Made under Advice of Attorney.—The evidence showed a settlement of a controversy to have been prudent and fair, and to have been made deliberately and under the advice of a competent attorney. It was held that equity would not set aside a conveyance made thereunder. DeWolf v. Hays, 125 U. S. 614.

A settlement has also been held good when made against the advice of the attorney. Sullivan v. Bruhling, 70 Wis. 388; Stono v. Weiller, 128 N. Y. 655.

Trifling Mistake.—When there is a trifling mistake as to a fact especially within the knowledge of the party attacking the settlement, it is final, in the absence of fraud. Currey v. Lawler, 29 W. Va. 111.

Mistake of Fact.—A creditor received three notes of third parties from the debtor in satisfaction of his claim. Both parties believed one of the notes to be secured by mortgage, as was represented by the debtor. The note proved to be unsecured and worthless. The creditor sued for balance of his debt, and it was held that he could rescind his acceptance on the ground of mistake, retain the other notes, and return the worthless note at the trial. Wiswall v. Harriman, 62 N. H. 671.

Adequacy of Consideration.—The adequacy of consideration cannot be inquired into, but the want of any consideration whatever may be; a mere threat or fear of a suit on a groundless pretext is not such a consideration as will uphold a compromise. Creutz v. Heil, 89 Ky. 429; Grandin v. Grandin, 49 N. J. L. 508; Gilliam v. Alford, 69 Tex. 267.

A father and son had a settlement, and the latter gave the former a note for the amount found due. The father agreed that the interest on the note should go to the son as compensation for board. Such a settlement cannot be questioned by the heirs or legatees of the father after his death. Bell v. Henshaw, 91 Ky. 430.

By an instrument under seal, the plaintiff assigned and conveyed to the defendant one third of the estate acquired by him under the will of their ancestor, in settlement of a dispute and threatened lawsuit respecting the validity of the will. It was held that being an executed transfer it would be set aside for fraud only. Copley v. Hyland, 46 Minn. 205.

Whether Necessary to Refund Amount Paid—Personal Action for Injury.—The defendant pleaded accord and satisfaction. The repli-

Rescission upon Notice of Fraud.—If a compromise agreement pleaded as accord and satisfaction is claimed to be fraudulent, in an action at law upon the original claim, the plaintiff must show that he rescinded the fraudulent compromise prior to the commencement of the suit; that he acted promptly on the discovery of the fraud; and if he received anything of value by reason of the fraudulent compromise, that he unqualifiedly offered to restore it.¹

ACCORDING. (See also ACCORDING TO LAW.)—The words "according to" a contract, or law, or statute, imply that everything has been done in compliance with the terms of the instrument, law, or statute referred to, it being understood that the construction of the law or statute is governed by the recognized principles of the law at the time the words were used.²

ACCORDINGLY.—Agreeably, conformably, or in that capacity.³

ACCORDING TO LAW. (See also LAW.)—This phrase has received construction in various connections in a number of cases, which will be found set out in the notes.⁴

cation was that the plaintiff signed the receipt thinking he was signing the pay-roll, that he was unable to read, and the receipt was obtained by fraud. It was held that an action could be maintained without refunding or tendering back the money received. Butler v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 88 Ga. 594. See also Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Hull, 51 Ohio St. 270. But see Alexander v. Grand Ave. R. Co., 54 Mo. App. 66; Galvin v. O'Brien, 96 Mich. 483.

2. Doe v. Harrison, 3 B. & Ad. 764, 23 E. C. L. 182.

According to Population.—Where the constitution provided that apportionment should be "according to population," the court said: "It is evident that the term 'according to population' means as near as reasonably practicable, in view of other requirements." State v. Cunningham, 83 Wis. 163.

According to and in Pursuance of. (See also PURSUANCE.)—A charge that an overt act was done according to and in pursuance of a conspiracy which had been previously recited is equivalent to charging that it was done to effect the object of the conspiracy. Dealy v. U. S., 152 U. S. 546. The court said: "It is also said that the indictment does not charge that the overt act was done 'to effect the object of the conspiracy,' as the statute expresses it, but is charged to have been done simply 'according to and in pursuance of said conspiracy.' But this is too great a refinement of construction. Something more is intended by the use of the words 'according to and in pursuance of' than that the overt act was done after the formation of the conspiracy, or even that it was simply a result of the conspiracy. It implies that the act was one contemplated by the conspiracy, 'according to,' and was done in carrying it out 'in pursuance of,' something which the conspiracy provided should be done, something which when done should tend to accomplish the purpose of the conspiracy. Again, it is objected that the time at which the overt act was done is not specifically stated, but the date of the conspiracy is alleged, and that the overt act was 'according to and in pursuance of.' Necessarily, therefore, it was subsequent to the conspiracy."

According to Directions of Engineer.—"According to such directions, therefore, as the city engineer may from time to time give in superintending the construction of the work," should be construed to mean such directions that he may give looking to a completion of the work according to the plans and specifications, and not to mean that the engineer may give directions for an improvement in manner different from that provided in the plans and specifications. It is made the duty of the engineer under the contract to see that the contract is complied with, not violated." Burke v. Kansas City, 34 Mo. App. 580.

According to Conditions.—The insertion of a clause in a bond enlarging it so as to include a subsequent advance, the accompanying mortgage remaining unchanged, does not affect the operation of the mortgage, or enlarge the meaning of the words "according to the conditions of said bond" in said mortgage so as to include the advance. Stoddard v. Hart, 23 N. Y. 556.

3. Lindley v. Girdler, 13 L. J. Q. B. 53.

4. Importing Compliance with Requisites.—An averment in the declaration that the defendant subscribed for certain shares in the capital stock of plaintiff's company "according to the statute incorporating the company" will be held, on general demurrer, to mean that he had done everything required by the charter in order to become a subscriber. Fiser v. Mississippi, etc., R. Co., 32 Miss. 360.

The words "according to the forms of statute," at the head of proclamations, indorsed on a fine, import that the fine was proclaimed as required by statute. Doe v. Harrison, 3 B. & Ad. 764, 23 E. C. L. 182.

An averment in a complaint that an affidavit was made according to law will be held, after verdict and judgment, to mean that it was made within the time prescribed by law. McElhanev v. Gilleland, 30 Ala. 183.

Record.—Where the docket entries fairly showed that bail for an appeal was entered in a fixed sum, "according to Act of Assembly," the recognizance was deemed sufficient, and in a suit thereon the plea of nul tiel record was held properly overruled. Harvey v. Beach, 38 Pa. St. 500.

If the docket entry shows that the jury were "sworn according to law," and no objection is made at the time, it will be presumed that they were regularly sworn. Williamson v. Fox, 38 Pa. St. 214.

Devise.—In Stark v. Hunton, 1 N. J. Eq. 216, it was held, where a testator devised certain property to his wife during her life, provided she remained a widow, but in case she married, then the property to be disposed of according to law, that the manifest intent of the testator was that the devise should be in lieu of dower, at least in the premises so devised.

After giving a life estate, a testator devised his plantation to the next male heir according to law. The court said: "The words according to law are not to be rejected in the construction of this will. It is true that the testator may have meant that the law is to be regarded in ascertaining who is his next male heir nearest in kindred and relation to him; but he may also have meant that the estate shall come to him in the same manner that the law would have given it to the heirs of the testator. We adopt this as the true meaning." McIntyre v. Ramsey, 23 Pa. St. 320.

And where a testator provided that his surviving children should, after the expiration of a life estate, take the property according to law, it was held that they took according to the law at the death of the life tenant, and not according to the law at the execution of the will or at the death of the deceased. Van Tilburgh v. Hollinshead, 14 N. J. Eq. 32.

Law of What Time—Official Bond. (See also the title PUBLIC OFFICERS.)—An official bond conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of an office according to law embraces duties required by laws in force during the term of the officer, whether enacted before or after the execution of the bond. King v. Nichols, 16 Ohio St. 80; approved in Dawson v. State, 38 Ohio St. 1.

Change of Law.—Where coaches have been allowed by statute to stand in certain places, according to the statutes made for that purpose, and a subsequent statute gives the vestrymen of a church the right to designate the place for such standing, and to regulate it, a coach cannot, after a prohibition by the vestrymen from a certain stand, be said to occupy such stand according to the statutes, and it may, if found there, be impounded. Frost v. Williams, 7 Ad. & El. 773, 34 E. C. L. 221.

To Administer according to Law is to fulfil the functions of an administrator; in other words, to perform all his duties. Balch v. Hooper, 32 Minn. 162.

Remand of Cause to Lower Court.—The judgment of a trial court was reversed, and the cause was "remanded for further proceedings according to law." The appellate court said: "The words according to law manifestly meant, according to the opinion of the court filed upon that appeal; for, without regard to the merit or demerit of that opinion, it necessarily became the law of the case. This being so, it would seem to follow that, upon the cause being remanded, the plaintiff was entitled to judgment against the garnishee in accordance with the determinations of this court in the opinion filed." Winner v. Hoyt, 68 Wis. 284.

In State v. Fowler, 42 La. Ann. 144, it was held, where a judge made an appeal returnable to the supreme court according to law, that this indicated that the judge had considered and construed the law, and even if he had committed an error it could not be visited upon the appellant under the authority of State v. Dellwood, 33 La. Ann. 1220.

Appeal from Justice.—Where a statute provides that appeals from justices must be tried according to equity and justice without regard to any defect in the summons, or other process before the justice, a defect in a notice cannot be considered on appeal. Abrams v. Johnson, 65 Ala. 465.

1. On Account of—Bill of Exchange.—In Rice v. Porter, 16 N. J. L. 440, it was held that an order to pay one hundred dollars on account of drawer's share of rent, and to be accepted by drawee when due, was not a bill of exchange. The court said: "Had the drawer of this order directed it to be paid out of his share of rent, instead of on account of it, most clearly it would have been payable out of a particular fund. All the cases in the books speak but one language on this point. Is there any substantial difference between the two? Does the change of phraseology convey to the mind any new or distinct idea? I think not. If a man owe me for a horse, and I request him to pay a sum on account of the consideration money or out of the consideration money, it is one and the same thing—a designation of the particular fund from which the payment is to be made. This construction was recognized as the true one in Banbury v. Lisset, 2 Stra. 1211, where the draft was 'on account of the freight of the galley Veale,' and it was held by Lee, C.J., no bill of exchange, because it was only payable out of a particular fund."

2. Officer Accountable to Another.—A provision making an officer accountable to another may imply authority to remove him. McPhillips v. McPhillips, 9 R. I. 536.

Indorsement upon Note.—A party has a reasonable ground to expect, upon receiving notes indorsed by the payee's name, followed by the word accountable, that the said payee shall be "subject to pay," "responsible" or "liable for," or make good the amount of said notes as soon as they become due and payable, without subjection to previous demand upon the makers. Furber v. Caverly, 42 N. H. 74.

ACCOUNTABLE RECEIPT. (See also ACQUITTANCE, and the title RECEIPTS.)—An accountable receipt is an instrument acknowledging the receipt of money or personal property, coupled with an obligation to account for or pay or deliver the whole or some part of it to some person.¹

Will.—A bequest of personal property, with a devise over of the residue, declared that the legatee should not be accountable for depreciation of farming implements and stock; this was held to give an absolute title to the farming implements and stock. Breton v. Mockett, 9 Ch. Div. 95.

1. State v. Riebe, 27 Minn. 315.

Forgery. (See the title FORGERY.)—"Boston, Aug. 15, 1868. Received of Wm. J. Dale, Surgeon-General of Mass., my discharge and check No. 6979 for $100. George P. Gill. Witness, Frederick P. Cutting." This, not acknowledging that anything has been received to be accounted for, is not an accountable receipt within a statute making an accountable receipt for money, goods, or other property a subject of forgery, and is fatal to an indictment for forgery as of an accountable receipt. Com. v. Lawless, 101 Mass. 32. See State v. Wheeler, 19 Minn. 98; Reg. v. West, 2 C. & K. 496, 61 E. C. L. 496.

A Railway Scrip Certificate, signed by two of the directors, and stating that the holder of it, "having paid the deposit of £5, signed the parliamentary contract and subscribers' agreement, and agreed to pay all costs in respect thereof, is the proprietor of one share of £50, part of the additional capital," and that "the share represented by this certificate will bear interest at the rate of £5 per cent." from 1st Jan., 1847, to 1st July, 1853, and after that share in the net profits of the company, is neither a "receipt," nor an "acquittance," nor an accountable receipt within the stat. 1 Will. IV., c. 66, § 10; and the forgery of such certificate is, therefore, not an offense against that statute. Reg. v. West, 2 C. & K. 496, 61 E. C. L. 496.

A Statement of Account, such as is received by a bank from other banks having business connections with it, and containing an acknowledgment of the receipt of money to be accounted for, is an accountable receipt, and the fraudulent alteration thereof is forgery. Ex p. Debaun, 4 Mont. L. Rep. Q. B. 145.

A Receipt in Full of all demands is not an accountable receipt. Com. v. Talbot, 2 Allen (Mass.) 162.

A Bank Pass-book is an accountable receipt. R. v. Smith, 31 L. J. M. C. 154; R. v. Moody, 31 L. J. M. C. 156.

A Clearance Certificate from one branch of a friendly society to another is not an accountable receipt. R. v. French, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 217.

Indictment.—In State v. Riebe, 27 Minn. 315, it was held that an indictment for altering an accountable receipt for money, so as to give it the form of a promissory note, is not good unless it states or shows what the obligation of the receipt was, so that it may appear that the legal effect of it has been changed by the alteration. The court said: "Such receipt for money may be in legal effect, though not in form, a promissory note."

An indictment for forging an accountable receipt of an elevator company, which was set out in the indictment, and appeared to be signed "M. G., Inspector," not showing that the person whose name was so signed was agent of the company, was held bad. The court said: "The case at bar is of an accountable receipt, not purporting to be signed by an officer of the elevator company duly empowered to sign it. It is not on the face of the instrument of any apparent legal effect." State v. Wheeler, 19 Minn. 98.

2. English Bills of Sale Acts.—A person who carried on business as agent to an accountant, and was employed as accountant by other persons, was held to be properly described as an accountant for the purposes of the Bills of Sale Acts. Briggs v. Boss, 37 L. J. Q. B. 101, L. R. 3 Q. B. 268. But a clerk in the accountant office of a railway, who occasionally balances books for other people after office hours, is not properly described as an accountant. Larchin v. North Western Deposit Bank, 44 L. J. Exch. 71, L. R. 10 Exch. 64. In the latter case Mellor, J., said: "I think in Briggs v. Boss, 37 L. J. Q. B. 101, L. R. 3 Q. B. 268, we went to the extreme limit."

3. An Ohio statute provides that whosoever shall knowingly present false and fraudulent claims to the auditor or other accounting officer of a municipal corporation shall be guilty of a crime. It was held that the board of infirmity directors is an accounting officer within the statute. The court said: "It seems too clear for serious discussion that the words 'other accounting officer' imply such an officer as may lawfully pass upon and allow a claim or account against a municipal corporation, upon the authority of which allowance the comptroller may issue his warrant upon the treasurer; and even if these words were not chosen with a view to their prior technical signification, the fact of their employment in the connection in which we here find them is sufficient in itself to enlarge or qualify the sense in which they had theretofore been used." Hauck v. State, 45 Ohio St. 443.

I. DEFINITION—Accounts—Generally.—An account is a written statement of pecuniary transactions;¹ a detailed statement of demands in the nature of debt and credit between parties, arising out of contract or some fiduciary relation.²

1. Abbott's Law Dict. "An account," said Sanford, Chancellor, in Rensselaer Glass Factory v. Reid, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 587, "is no more than a list or catalogue of items whether of debts or credits."

The word "account" has no very clearly defined legal meaning. Nelson v. Posey County, 105 Ind. 287; Watson v. Penn., 108 Ind. 21; Rensselaer Glass Factory v. Reid, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 587.

Account—Meaning in Statute Providing for Reference.—"Account," as used in § 2864 of Wisconsin Rev. Stat., providing for a peremptory reference in cases involving a long account, means an account in fact kept by one party or the other; and a long account is an account of at least some length. Druse v. Horter, 57 Wis. 644.

A "long account" is a series of charges made at various times as the transactions occurred. Freeman v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co., 13 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 124. See the title REFERENCES.

2. Bouvier defines an account as "a detailed statement of mutual demands in the nature of debt and credit between the parties, arising out of contract or some fiduciary relation." This definition has been quoted with approval in McWilliams v. Allan, 45 Mo. 573; Gale v. Drake, 51 N. H. 78; but it seems open to the criticism that the word "mutual" would imply that each party must have demands against the other, thus excluding ordinary accounts rendered for work, services, etc. See People v. Peek, 57 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 315; Hosack v. Heyerdahl, 38 N. Y. Super. Ct. 391; Camp v. Ingersoll, 86 N. Y. 433.

The definition given in Sweet's Law Dict. is accurate. It is as follows: "An account is a list or statement of monetary transactions, such as payments, purchases, sales, debts, credits, etc., in most cases showing a balance or result of comparison between items of an opposite nature, e.g., receipts and payments." This definition, however, fails to bring out the necessary relations between parties, upon which an account must be based.

In Whitwell v. Willard, 1 Met. (Mass.) 216, Shaw, C. J., said: "The primary idea of account, computatio, whether we look to the proceedings of courts of law or equity, is some matter of debt and credit, or demands in the nature of debt and credit, between parties. It implies that one is responsible to another for moneys or other things, either on the score of contract or of some fiduciary relation of a public or private nature created by law or otherwise." In accordance with this principle, it was held in this case that a statute authorizing the court to appoint an auditor to state accounts did not authorize it to appoint such an officer in an action against a sheriff for nonfeasance in not attaching or levying on certain articles of personal property, inasmuch as the case involved "no relation of debtor and creditor, no relation of responsibility for money or property intrusted by one to another, either in fact or in law, either between the parties or other persons." See also Nelson v. Posey County, 105 Ind. 287; Watson v. Penn., 108 Ind. 21; McMaster v. Booth, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 427; Vanbebbber v. Plunkett (Oregon, 1895), 38 Pac. Rep. 707; and infra,

An account in most cases shows a balance or result of comparison between the items of an opposite nature, e.g., receipts and payments,¹ but a balance is not itself an account.²

II. VARIOUS KINDS OF ACCOUNTS—1. Open Accounts.—An open account is an account not stated or agreed upon between the parties.³ Thus, an account is open when some term of the contract is not settled by the parties, whether the account consists of one item or many.⁴ An account is also open whenever there have been current dealings between the parties, which are kept unclosed with the expectation of further transactions between them.⁵

2. Current Accounts.—An account current is an account not stated; a running account.⁶

this title, Accounts Stated; Previous Transactions.

In Stringham v. Winnebago County, 24 Wis. 594, it was held, quoting and approving Whitwell v. Willard, 1 Met. (Mass.) 216, that under the statute giving the county supervisors power to examine, settle, and allow all accounts chargeable against the county, the supervisors had no jurisdiction over a claim to have taxes on land refunded on the ground that they were excessive and illegal, because no matter of account was involved in such a question.

Where a Testator made a Bequest of "All my Accounts" it was held that this did not include a deposit in a savings bank, inasmuch as the word "accounts" was to be taken in its ordinary and popular meaning, which is a "statement of mutual demands, in the nature of debt and credit, which arise out of contracts and dealings between parties, and the items of which are entered from time to time in the books commonly known as account books." Gale v. Drake, 51 N. H. 78.

Creditor not Bound to Furnish.—A creditor is not bound to furnish an itemized account before bringing suit for an amount due to him. Foster v. Newbrough, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 645.

1. Sweet's Law Dict.

2. Account and Balance of Account Distinguished.—Where the plaintiffs filed with their papers for a mechanic's lien a mere statement of the balance due to them from the defendant, it was held that they did not satisfy the statute requiring a lienor "to file with lien papers an account of the demand due to" him. McWilliams v. Allan, 45 Mo. 573. In this case the court, by Currier, J., said: "There is a broad distinction between an account and the mere balance of an account, resembling the distinction in logic between the premises of an argument and the conclusion drawn therefrom. A balance is but the conclusion or result of the debit and credit sides of an account."

3. Sweet's Law Dict.

The settled distinction seems to be between an open or current account and one that is stated; the former is holden to be within the exception of the statute of limitations, but the latter is barred by it. Webber v. Tivill, 2 Saund. 127, note.

Open account sometimes seems equivalent to mutual account as meaning an account open to entries by either party. Abbott's Law Dict.

Assignability.—In Arkansas an open account is not an assignable instrument within the meaning of the statute, and a party to whom it is transferred cannot sue on it alone, but must make his assignor a party to the suit. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Camden Bank, 47 Ark. 541. But an open account is assignable by statute in other states. See McClain's Anno. Code of Iowa (1888), § 3263.

"Continuous, Open, Current Account."—The words "continuous, open, current account," as used in the Code of Iowa (McClain's Anno. Code of Iowa (1888), § 3736) are defined by the court in Tucker v. Quimby, 37 Iowa 17, as follows: "An account to be 'continuous' must be without break or interruption. By the term 'open' we mean something that is not closed; and the term 'current,' as used in the statute, signifies 'running,' 'passing,' a 'connected series.' See Webster's Unabridged Dictionary. Hence a continuous, open, current account is an account which is not interrupted or broken, not closed by settlement or otherwise, and is a running connected series of transactions."

4. Maury v. Mason, 8 Port. (Ala.) 230; Sheppard v. Wilkins, 1 Ala. 62. In this latter case Ormond, J., said: "If a single article be sold and delivered and the price or time of payment be left in uncertainty, this is an open account, because there is a term of the contract to be ascertained. The account is, therefore, unliquidated. It is open."

Terms Agreed upon—Contract not in Writing.—Where all the terms of the contract are agreed upon, an account is not open, although not reduced to writing. Sheppard v. Wilkins, 1 Ala. 62; Maury v. Mason, 8 Port. (Ala.) 211.

5. Goodwin v. Harrison, 6 Ala. 438.

6. See supra, this title, Open Accounts.

The difference between a running account and one that does not run is that in the latter each item is a separate cause of action in itself, the minds of parties are presumed to have concurred only on single transactions; but in the case of a running account, according to the doctrine of relation, the subsequent acts relate back each to the preceding act and all the original acts. Ring v. Jamison, 2 Mo. App. 584.

When each of a series of transactions covering a number of years is separate and distinct from those which precede it, there is no running account. Compton v. Johnson, 19 Mo. App. 88.

3. Accounts Rendered.—An account rendered is a statement presented by a creditor to his debtor showing the charges of the former against the latter.¹ Merely rendering an account gives it no binding effect upon the debtor, but by his acquiescence, express or implied, it becomes an account stated.²

Effect of Rendering Account in Absence of Prior Agreement as to Terms.—Rendering an account for personal or professional services, without an agreement as to the price thereof, does not preclude the party rendering the bill from proving the actual value of his services.³

4. Accounts Settled—Defined.—When the balance admitted upon a stated account is paid, the account is deemed a settled account.⁴ The term is also used in another sense.

Accounts of Trustees and Executors.—Settled accounts are accounts rendered by a trustee or executor to cestuis que trustent, or to residuary legatees, upon their releasing him of his accountability to them, and approved and accepted by the cestuis que trustent or legatees.⁵

Conclusiveness.—Settled accounts are conclusive until impeached for fraud or error.⁶

5. Account Sales.—Account sales are separate accounts rendered to his principal by a factor or broker showing goods sold, prices obtained, and the net results after deduction of expenses, etc.⁷

6. Book Accounts.—The statutes of some of the states of the Union provide for a distinct action upon book accounts. Other statutes provide that books of account may, under certain restrictions, be given in evidence to support the claims of the party offering them, and these statutes are known as "book account" or "book debt" laws.⁸

7. Bank Accounts.—The phrase designates the fund which merchants, traders; and others have deposited into the common cash of some bank, to be drawn out by checks from time to time, as the owner or depositor may require; also the statement of the amount deposited and drawn, which is kept in duplicate, one in the depositor's bank-book and the other in the books of the bank.⁹

action in fact, it is immaterial that it is stated with one or many balances. Lamb v. Hanneman, 40 Iowa 41; Pickett v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 32 Ark. 346. See the titles LIMITATION OF ACTIONS; MUTUAL ACCOUNTS. See also the title ACTIONS, 1 Encyc. Pl. & Pr. 153.

Cannot Claim beyond Amount of the Bill Rendered.—But it has been held that the amount of a bill so presented is the extreme limit of compensation which the party rendering it can claim. Daniels v. Wilber, 60 Ill. 526. And see Nicholson v. Pelanne, 14 La. Ann. 514; Ayland v. Rice, 23 La. Ann. 75.

Money Advanced upon the Account—Conclusiveness.—Where money has been actually advanced upon such an account, it becomes conclusive unless error or other sufficient equity be shown. Rayburn v. Mason Lumber Co., 57 Mich. 274; Kehl v. Smith, 87 Wis. 212. See Cicotte v. Wayne County, 59 Mich. 509.

Fraud or Duress.—But where there are elements of fraud or duress, payment upon such an account does not render it conclusive. Cicotte v. Wayne County, 59 Mich. 509; Turnbull v. Boggs, 78 Mich. 158.

Accounts Rendered as Affecting Previous Contracts.—Lills rendered cannot control a previous contract between the parties. Gallinger v. Lake Shore Traffic Co., 67 Wis. 529.

Giving a promissory note is prima facie evidence that the accounts have been settled. See infra, this title, Accounts Stated: Giving Evidence of Indebtedness.

But settlement of accounts is not always used in so strict a sense as this. Thus, parties are said to settle accounts when they agree and strike a balance. See the title SETTLEMENT.

8. Accounts Stated—a. DEFINITION.—An account stated is an agreement, between parties who have had previous transactions of a monetary character, that all the items of the accounts representing such transactions are true and that the balance struck is correct, together with a promise, express or implied, for the payment of such balance.¹

Promise Implied.—The importance of an account stated is due to the fact that it operates as an admission of liability from the person against whom the balance appears, or, in the language of the common law, "the law implies that he against whom the balance appears has engaged to pay it to the other," and on this implied promise or admission an action may be brought.²

b*. PARTIES—(1) Generally.—An account must be stated between the person in whose favor the balance appears, or his duly authorized agent, and the person against whom the balance lies, or his duly authorized agent.³

1. Lord Mansfield in Trueman v. Hurst, 1 T. R. 42, defined an account stated as follows: "What is an account stated? It is an agreement by both parties that all the articles are true." This definition is followed in Union Bank v. Knapp, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 96, 15 Am. Dec. 181; Davis v. Tiernan, 2 How. (Miss.) 804; Stebbins v. Niles, 25 Miss. 348; Reinhardt v. Hines, 51 Miss. 346; Claire v. Claire, 10 Neb. 57; Hawkins v. Long, 74 N. Car. 783.

An account stated is defined by Mr. Abbott to be "an agreement between persons who have had previous transactions, fixing the amount due in respect of such transactions and promising payment." Abbott's Trial Ev. 458. This definition is quoted in Zacardino v. Pallotti, 49 Conn. 36; McKinster v. Hitchcock, 19 Neb. 100; Truman v. Owens, 17 Oregon 525.

"An account stated," said George, C. J., in Anding v. Levy, 57 Miss. 51, 34 Am. Rep. 435, "is defined to be an agreement, after an examination of the accounts between the parties, that all the items are true, and the balance struck a just and true balance."

Accounts Stated by Agents.—The clerk of the creditors, corn-factors, may state an account with the debtor of such factors. Chisman v. Count, 2 M. & G. 307, 40 E. C. L. 385.

The respective bookkeepers of debtor and creditor may state an account binding upon the employees as a stated account. Rice v. Schloss, 90 Ala. 416.

The clerk of a merchant, merely as such, cannot bind him by an account stated. Spears v. Turpin, 9 Rob. (La.) 293.

Attorney.—It seems that an attorney employed to collect a bill for goods sold and delivered has power to state an account with reference to such bill. Grundy v. Townsend, 36 W. R. 531.

Agents to Copy Accounts.—Persons selected by the parties merely to copy their account-books, and put the matter in convenient form, cannot state accounts so as to bar a suit for the settlement thereof. Whitehead v. Darling (Ky., 1887), 5 S. W. Rep. 356.

Arbitrators and Appraisers.—Evidence of an award between the parties, and an admission of the balance due, are admissible under a count upon an account stated. Bates v. Curtis, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 247; Buschman v. Morling, 30 Md. 384; Keen v. Batshore, 1 Esp. 194.

Aliter, in England, if regular bonds of submission are entered into. Bates v. Townley, 2 Exch. 152.

In Tennessee it has been held that an award is not an account stated unless signed by the parties. Collins v. Oliver, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 439; Henniken v. Brown, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 397.

An account stated cannot be based on an appraisal where it does not appear that the defendant took part in the choice of the appraisers, or authorized them to bind him by their actions. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Peters, 45 Mich. 636.

When an award has been made by arbitrators, after the time has expired they cannot be said to be proceeding with the defendant's assent, and to be stating an account by him as his agents. Ruthven v. Ruthven, 8 U. C. Q. B. 12.

Equitable Owner.—Where the consignor of goods assents to an account of sales received from the consignee, the account becomes a stated account binding upon the equitable owner of the goods, although his equitable interest was known to the consignee. Bevan v. Cullen, 7 Pa. St. 281.

Officer of Corporation.—The bookkeeper of a corporation, who also acts as secretary and assistant treasurer, has no implied authority to bind the corporation upon an account stated, but his authority must be actually shown. Harvey v. West Side El. R. Co., 13 Hun (N. Y.) 392.

The certificate of a roadmaster of a railroad company duly authorized to issue it, that the bearer is entitled to a specific sum for labor performed, which certificate has been accepted by the laborer, constitutes an account stated on which an action may be maintained against the railroad company. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Camden Bank, 47 Ark. 541.

Admissions to Third Persons.—Admissions to third persons not connected with the creditor do not constitute an account stated.¹

(2) Joint Parties.—One of several joint debtors cannot, in the absence of special authority, bind his associates by stating an account with the creditor;² but such authority may be proved by the relations existing between the debtors.³

(3) Infants.—An account stated by an infant is not binding upon him, though it was for necessities;⁴ but it may be ratified by him on attaining his majority.⁵

(4) Married Women—Wife as Agent of Husband.—It is sufficient to show that the account was stated with the wife of the creditor as agent for her husband.⁶

Wife and Husband Jointly.—At common law a wife could not state an account so as to bind herself, but it seems that a husband and wife might state an account, with respect to a debt due to the wife, or for which she had been the meritorious cause of action, so as to acquire a right which might be enforced in an action by the husband and wife.⁷

(5) Executors and Administrators.—An executor may sue upon an account

Officers of Municipal Corporation.—Auditors appointed by a municipal corporation may state an account with a debtor of the corporation, and the admission of the corporation made to such debtor binds it as to the correctness of the account. St. John v. Lockhart, 23 New Bruns. 430; St. Louis Gas Light Co. v. St. Louis, 11 Mo. App. 55, 84 Mo. 202. See also Huron Dist. Council v. London Dist. Council, 4 U. C. Q. B. 302; *Milwaukee County v. Ratification.—Proof of a settlement made with an unauthorized person, if afterwards ratified by the party whom such unauthorized person undertook to bind, is sufficient. Mink v. Morrison, 42 Mich. 567.

2. One of Several Joint Debtors Stating Account with Creditor.—Reed v. Pixley, 22 Minn. 540.

Where a person is bound under seal to pay two jointly, the legal interest under the bond of one of the two creditors cannot be extinguished by an account stated between the obligor and the other creditor. Zimmerman v. Woodruff, 17 U. C. Q. B. 584.

3. Where A and B were trustees of an insolvent estate indebted to the plaintiff, the question was whether B was bound by an account stated between A and the plaintiff. Proof that A and B were such joint trustees; that they were at the plaintiff's counting-house on several occasions together; that at a meeting of the creditors of the insolvent estate the amount of the plaintiff's debt was stated by one and acquiesced in by the other; and that B had admitted in a letter that there was a debt due to the plaintiff, was held sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that B had constituted A his agent in stating the account. Chisman v. Count, 2 M. & G. 307, 40 E. C. L. 385.

4. Account Stated by Infant not Binding.—Trueman v. Hurst, 1 T. R. 40; Bartlett v.

Emery, 1 T. R. 42, note; Williams v. Moor, 11 M. & W. 256; Hedgley v. Holt, 4 C. & P. 104, 19 E. C. L. 297; Ingledeu v. Douglas, 2 Stark. 36.

5. Ratification after Attaining Majority.—Williams v. Moor, 11 M. & W. 256. In this case Parke, B., said: "We can see no sound or sensible distinction in this respect between the liability of an infant on an account stated, and his liability for goods sold and delivered, or on any other contract. * * * The general doctrine is, that a party may, after he attains his age of twenty-one years, ratify, and so make himself liable on contracts made during infancy. We think that, on principle unopposed by authority, this may be done on a contract arising on an account stated as well as on any other contract."

6. 2 Chitty on Contracts (11th Am. ed.) 963. Mr. Chitty cites Buller's N. P. 129, where it is said: "In assumpsit upon an account stated, proof that the defendant and the plaintiff's wife reckoned that the defendant had borrowed forty shillings at one time, at another time forty shillings, and at another time four pounds, and that this came to eight pounds, and that he promised to pay it, is good evidence. And yet in such case no confession of the wife's would be allowed to be given in evidence against the husband. Stuart v. Rowland, 1 Show. 215."

7. Wife's Interest must Appear.—In a suit by a husband and wife on such a cause of action, the declaration must show the wife's interest. Johnson v. Lucas, 1 El. & Bl. 659, 72 E. C. L. 659.

A Wife is not Bound by the silent retention of an account rendered to her by her husband, who has the custody of her money and property, of moneys disbursed for her use. The rule of accounts stated does not apply in such a case. Southwick v. Southwick, 1 Sweeny (N. Y.) 47.

An Account Kept in the Husband's Name and rendered to him in that form will not be presumed correct as against the wife because she did not object to it when so rendered. Powell v. Hopson, 13 La. Ann. 626.

stated with him as executor concerning money due the testator, or concerning money due him as executor.¹

Allowance of Account by Executor or Administrator.—In some jurisdictions the allowance of an account by an executor or administrator gives it the character of an account stated against the estate, and renders it binding upon the executor or administrator, but not upon the heirs, next of kin, legatees, or devisees.²

Statute of Limitations.—An account stated by an executor or administrator with a creditor of the estate, before the claim has been barred by lapse of time, will arrest the running of the statute of limitations with respect thereto.³

(6) Partners.—An account stated between a third person and one member of a firm is binding upon the firm.⁴ As between the partners, one member of the copartnership may sue another member in assumpsit upon an account stated between them.⁵

(7) Public Officers.—Accounts audited and settled by public officers are not accounts stated.⁶

1. 2 Williams on Executors (7th Am. ed.), 79. See Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 223.

Evidence of an Account Stated with Executors.—Where the executors of the payee of a note sued the makers of the note upon which was the following indorsement, signed by the makers and one of the executors: "Hull, 1838, memorandum that the sum of £1. 7s. 6d., one quarter's interest, was paid on within note"—it was held sufficient evidence of an account stated with the executors, without proof of the time of the testator's death. Purdon v. Purdon, 10 M. & W. 562.

2. Lambert v. Craft, 98 N. Y. 342; Schutz v. Morette, 81 Hun (N. Y.) 518, 2 N. Y. Anno. Cas. 35. See Watkins v. Washburn, 2 U. C. Q. B. 291. Contra, Fish v. Morse, 8 Mich. 34. This question is, however, largely dependent on statute. See the title DEBTS OF DECEDENTS.

Failure to Object.—The rule that an account rendered, retained without objection, becomes an account stated, applies here, and it makes no difference that one of the representatives was a woman unacquainted with mercantile affairs. Ogden v. Astor, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 332.

Aliter under the present statutory provisions in New York relative to the powers and duties of executors and administrators. Schutz v. Morette (Ct. App.), 2 N. Y. Anno. Cases 35, reversing on this point Schutz v. Morette, 81 Hun 518.

3. Smith v. Forty, 4 C. & P. 126, 19 E. C. L. 305; Ashby v. James, 11 M. & W. 542; Watkins v. Washburn, 2 U. C. Q. B. 291. See also, generally, upon the question as to how far an admission of an executor or administrator will arrest the running of the statute of limitations, the title LIMITATIONS, STATUTE OF.

No Express Promise Necessary.—An account stated by an executor of an unliquidated debt due by the testator, without any express promise to pay, is sufficient to arrest the running of the statute. Watkins v. Washburn, 2 U. C. Q. B. 291. Compare Tullock v. Dunn, R. & M. 416.

Admissions by One Partner.—An admission by one partner of the correctness of an account stated against a firm is binding upon the firm. Cady v. Kyle, 47 Mo. 346. Heidenheimer v. Ellis, 67 Tex. 426.

A declaration by a partner, after the death of A, that the firm owed A eleven hundred dollars, is evidence of an account stated between the firm and A during the latter's lifetime. Cunningham v. Sublette, 4 Mo. 224.

An admission of a debt by one partner during the continuance of the partnership is a promise binding upon the firm. Burgan v. Lyell, 2 Mich. 102, 55 Am. Dec. 53. See Phillips v. Purington, 15 Me. 425.

Entry by One Partner.—An entry in a book of accounts by one partner during the partnership binds his copartners and is evidence against all. Walden v. Sherburne, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 409.

Retention of Account Addressed to a Firm.—If one retains an account wherein he is charged as liable with some other person as his partner, the retention of the account does not prove the partnership, and if proof thereof aliunde fails, neither the partnership nor the individual retaining the account can be charged thereon. Kemp v. Peck, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 118.

Transactions beyond the Scope of Business.—Where a partner, in the name of a firm, enters into a contract with a third person outside the scope of the partnership business, and the managing clerk of the firm without the knowledge of the other partners wrote letters to such third person containing evidence of an account stated respecting the amount due under the unauthorized contract, it was held that the letters of the clerk were not evidence of an account stated as against the other partners. Brettel v. Williams, 4 Exch. 623.

5. The cases under this head are numerous and diversified. Upon the question whether a final balance of accounts is necessary and when a partial balance is sufficient, and whether an express promise to pay the balance is required, see the title PARTNERSHIP.

c. PREVIOUS TRANSACTIONS—(1) Necessity of Previous Transactions of Monetary Character.—An account stated must be founded on previous transactions of a monetary character creating the relation of creditor and debtor between the parties.¹

Single or Cross Demands.—These transactions may have consisted of mutual or cross demands, or of a single item only.² When the account is stated with Such an account lacks the element of agreement between competent parties, since such a public officer has no authority to state an account. State v. Brown, 10 Oregon 215.

An account audited by an accounting officer of the United States Treasury is a departmental proceeding, and is not conclusive or prima facie evidence of the indebtedness of the government, nor can an action be brought upon it. McKnight v. U. S., 13 Ct. of Cl. 292.

Treasury settlements are only prima facie evidence of the correctness of the balance certified, and it is competent for accounting officers to correct mistakes and restate the balance. Soule v. U. S., 100 U. S. 8; U. S. v. Eckford, 1 How. (U. S.) 256. See also U. S. v. Smith, 1 Bond (U. S.) 68.

The settlement of accounts by a public officer is not a judicial proceeding, and is only prima facie evidence of the correctness of the result stated. *Washington County v. An account stated only determines the amount of the debt where a liability exists. It cannot be made the instrument to create per se a liability where none previously existed. Austin v. Wilson (Buffalo Super. Ct.), 33 N. Y. St. Rep. 503.

Previous Pecuniary Transactions Necessary.—In Truman v. Owens, 17 Oregon 527, Lord, J., said: "It will be noted then that the account stated relates to some previous transactions or dealings between the parties, or some article or articles formerly sold by one to the other, and that the relation of debtor and creditor already exists between them."

In Vanbebbler v. Plunkett (Oregon, 1895), 38 Pac. Rep. 707, Wolverton, J., after citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 110, and other authorities, stated the following conclusion: "It would seem that an account stated should be the result of computation between the parties concerning monetary transactions, or debts in the restrictive sense, as distinguished from liabilities and demands either existing reciprocally or entirely upon the one side or the other."

Where the defendant, at the request of the plaintiff's husband, opened an account with the plaintiff, but the account was really with the husband, and all the defendant's dealings and transactions were with him, and plaintiff's name upon his books stood really for the husband's, there could be no account stated, since there were no dealings between the parties upon which the account stated could be founded. Field v. Knapp, 108 N. Y. 87.

Report of an Officer of Government.—The report of the quartermaster-general of the United States, acting in pursuance of an act of Congress, that a specified sum is due from the government to a certain person on account of property destroyed by the United States armies, is not an account stated. Nutt v. U. S., 23 Ct. of Cl. 68. In this case Nott, J., said: "As to the second ground taken by counsel, the court is of the opinion that an account stated grows out of commercial transactions, being the rendition of a running account by one party to the other and his acceptance or acquiescence in its accuracy and amount. It is, therefore, in legal effect but the liquidation of fractional items into a single amount by the agreement of parties express or implied. In the present case the court is unable to perceive in the report of the quartermaster-general a single element of an account stated. There was no running account between the parties; there had been no transactions which brought them within the usage or law of merchants; the account was not rendered by one party to the other; time did not run against the government so as to raise a presumption of acquiescence, and the subsequent payment of a part instead of the whole negated the idea that the whole was acquiesced in by Congress and acknowledged as an indebtedness."

2. Mutual or Cross Demands—Single Items.—Chitty on Contracts (11th Am. ed.) 962; Bartlett v. Emery, 1 T. R. 42, note; Highmore v. Primrose, 5 M. & S. 65; Porter v. Cooper, 1 C., M. & R. 387; Knowles v. Michel, 13 East 249; Kirton v. Wood, 1 M. & R. 253; Lane v. Hill, 18 Q. B. 252, 83 E. C. L. 252; Ware v.

reference to a single item, that item must be of a character which creates an actual debt between the parties;¹ but when there are cross demands, and the relation of debtor and creditor already subsists, and the parties strike a balance, they may include therein debts not due in presenti, and equitable as well as legal demands.²

In State v. Hartman Steel Co., 51 N. J. L. 446, Reed, J., said: "It is apparent from an examination of the course of decisions touching what will and what will not amount to an account stated, that the courts have drifted away from the original standard of a stated account. An account stated originally presented to the legal mind the idea of mutual accounts and of a balance struck by a comparison of such accounts made by the respective creditors. Such an account stated involved an agreement in respect to the items in such account which were to be allowed, and so implied an assent to the correctness of a balance found to be due against one of such creditors. * * * But it now seems to be entirely settled that it is not essential that there should be mutual or counter accounts between the parties to support an action for an account stated. A bill of items rendered, or even a single item presented to a party and acknowledged to be correct, will constitute such an account."

1. Account Stated with Reference to Single Item.—Tucker v. Barrow, 7 B. & C. 623, 14 E. C. L. 103; Whitehead v. Howard, 2 B. & E. 372, 5 Moore 105; Lemere v. Elliott, 6 H. & N. 656; Lubbock v. Tribe, 3 M. & W. 607; Gough v. Findon, 7 Exch. 48; Buck v. Hurst, L. R. 1 C. P. 297; Wilson v. Marshall, 2 Ir. R. C. L. 356; Ware v. Dudley, 16 Ala. 742; Truman v. Owens, 17 Oregon 523; Toms v. Silis, 29 U. C. Q. B. 497; Kennedy v. Adams, 15 New Bruns. 162.

Debt Due upon Contingency.—An account cannot be stated with reference to a debt due upon a contingency. 2 Chitty on Contracts (11th Am. ed.) 962; Baker v. Heard, 5 Exch. 939; Tuggle v. Minor, 76 Cal. 96.

Illustrations.—In Gough v. Findon, 7 Exch. 48, a testator left certain sealed letters directed to G. These letters contained promissory notes for a large amount in G.'s favor. G. applied to the executors for payment, and on seeing the notes they paid her a portion and promised to pay the remainder. It was held that the notes were in effect a legacy, and as such were void, not being attested as required by statute, and that the executors' part payment and promise did not amount to an account stated, inasmuch as the promise was made on a supposed debt, not in fact due.

In Truman v. Owens, 17 Oregon 525, the plaintiffs sold defendants a stump-puller, the defendants promising to pay for it by an order on P., the employer of the defendants.

This order P. was to pay as soon as the amount due the defendants for work was sufficient for the purpose. Subsequently a bill for the stump-puller was rendered by the plaintiffs to the defendants, who, according to their agreement, gave the plaintiffs an order on P. It was held that upon these facts the plaintiffs could not recover in an action upon an account stated; that the order was not given as a statement of previous transactions, but was itself a part of the original transaction, and that it was not an admission of a debt then due, but was to become due at a future time according to the contract.

In Vanbebber v. Plunkett (Oregon, 1895), 38 Pac. Rep. 707, defendants agreed to construct for the plaintiff a fence of a certain length. The defendants failed to construct the fence, and the plaintiff had it built at his own expense. Afterwards the defendants agreed to pay the plaintiff a certain amount in liquidation of the latter's claim for damages for defendants' failure to carry out their contract. It was held that the plaintiff, under the circumstances, could not recover in an action upon an account stated, inasmuch as the obligation of the defendants to construct the fence in question was not a debt due and owing from the defendants to the plaintiff, but was merely a demand for unliquidated damages for breach of contract, and not a proper subject upon which to base an account stated. Perhaps if the parties agree that a debt due in future shall be considered as due and owing, that will be sufficient. See opinion of Wightman, J., in Laycock v. Pickles, 4 B. & S. 497, 116 E. C. L. 497; but this was a case involving mutual demands, and Blackburn, J., places the decision of the court on other and more satisfactory grounds. See the following note.

2. Debts not Due in Presenti—Equitable and Legal Demands.—Laycock v. Pickles, 4 B. & S. 497, 116 E. C. L. 497; Swain v. Knapp, 34 Minn. 232; Jugla v. Troutet, 120 N. Y. 21; Smith v. Holland, 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 333. See the remarks of Parke, B., in Bates v. Townley, 2 Exch. 152. Where there were mutual demands between the plaintiff and defendant, and the parties, desirous of settling all differences and striking a balance, agreed that the plaintiff's interest in certain lands upon which the defendants held an equitable mortgage should be conveyed to the defendant, valued at a certain sum in the adjustment of the account between the parties, and the accounts were adjusted upon that footing, and a balance found to be due to the plaintiff, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover such balance on a count upon an account stated. Laycock v. Pickles, 4 B. & S. 497, 116 E. C. L. 497. In this case Blackburn, J., said: "In common talk, an account stated is

(2) Original Debt Void.—Since the statement of accounts must rest upon a subsisting indebtedness, it follows that a claim void by reason of illegality or immorality in consideration will not support an account stated.¹

(3) Original Indebtedness not Recoverable.—If the original debt is not void, but simply not enforceable because of the want of legal evidence to support it, it may still afford a basis for a statement of accounts.²

Transaction within the Statute of Frauds.—Thus, where an agreement could not have been enforced had it remained executory on account of the statute of frauds; yet, if it has been executed except as to the payment of the consideration, and the consideration has been acknowledged as a subsisting debt by the party who has received the benefit of the transaction, a recovery may be had upon an account stated.³

d. AGREEMENT AS TO CORRECTNESS OF ACCOUNTS—(1) General Principles.—In stating an account, as in making any other agreement, the minds of the parties must meet.⁴

treated as an admission of a debt due from the defendant to the plaintiff. But there is also a real account stated, which is equivalent to what is called in the old law an insimul computaverunt when several items of claims are brought into account on each side, and, being set against one another, a balance was struck, and the consideration for the payment of the balance was the discharge on each side. I do not agree with Mr. Quaine that, in order to make out a real account stated, there must be real debts due at the time, or that the claims brought into account must be legal claims; equitable claims would do, and I am not certain that a moral obligation would not be sufficient." In reply to an argument of counsel the same judge said: "I incline to think that a debt in presenti solvendum in futuro might be set off [in an account stated] against a debt payable immediately."

The plaintiffs and the defendants entered into an agreement by which the plaintiffs sold to the defendants the stock and goodwill of their business in the city of New York for a certain sum, the plaintiffs at the same time agreeing to manufacture and supply for defendants the goods in which they dealt. Defendants were to pay in monthly instalments. After about half the purchase money was paid, the plaintiffs sent defendants an account embracing all the dealings between the parties, including the unpaid purchase money. The defendants retained this account without objecting to its correctness. It was held that the account would sustain an action upon an account stated. Jugla v. Troutt, 120 N. Y. 21. Here Bradley, J., said: "If the fact that the balance, as represented by the account rendered, was not then payable, denied to the statement the character of an account stated, the cause of action as alleged was not established by the evidence. * * * There may have been an effectual adoption by acquiescence of the amount of the balance at a specified time, in a statement embracing the unpaid purchase money, and if nothing intervened or was essential on the part of the plaintiffs to perfect their right to payment when it became payable, no reason appears why it may not have been treated as an account stated."

Transfer of Balance Standing against Firm to Private Account of One of the Partners.—A transfer by a merchant, in his ledger, of the balance of his account against a firm to the private account of one of the partners, without the privity of any of them, does not conclude the merchant, and his recharging the firm is good and sufficient to hold them. Barker v. Blake, 11 Mass. 16.

Acquiescence or Consent.—Where A strikes a balance in his books of account with B, such a balance cannot have the effect of a stated account unless it appears that it was struck with the consent or acquiescence of B. Nosstrand v. Dittmis, 127 N. Y. 355.

Landlord and Tenant.—Where a landlord demanded forty pounds from an incoming tenant upon his agreement to pay for the crops growing upon the ground, and the tenant offered to pay seventeen pounds, this was held to be no evidence to support a count upon an account stated. Wayman v. Hilliard, 7 Bing. 101, 20 E. C. L. 62.

1. Must be Understood as Final Adjustment.—Harvey v. West Side El. R. Co., 13 Hun (N. Y.) 392; Middleditch v. Ellis, 2 Exch. 623; Zimmerman v. Woodruff, 17 U. C. Q. B. 590. See Rehill v. Rosengrant, 55 Ark. 376.

Account Made out, but with no Intention to Bind Corporation.—Where an officer of a corporation, at the request of a party who had dealings with the company, furnishes him a copy of his account on the books of the corporation, but has no intention of binding the company, or asserting the claim, or establishing a balance due, the copy of accounts furnished was held not to be an account stated. Harvey v. West Side El. R. Co., 13 Hun (N. Y.) 392.

Where the Beneficiary under a Trust Deed, not aware of his interest thereunder, examines the accounts of the trustee which have been rendered to the grantor, the account does not become an account stated as to the beneficiary. Andrews v. Hobson, 23 Ala. 219.

Balance Sheet to show Partnership Condition.—A balance sheet drawn up merely to show the general condition of affairs of a partnership, and not to show the state of accounts between the partnership and a member of the firm, is not an account stated between such partner and the firm. Wood v. Gault, 2 Md. Ch. 433. See McCarthy v. Wood (Ky., 1890), 13 S. W. Rep. 792.

Monthly Statement of Bank Account.—And the same is true in case of a monthly statement between a bank and a depositor, intended merely to show how the accounts stood between the parties. Pickett v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 32 Ark. 346.

Sale under Mortgage—Account of Sale.—Where there was a sale under a mortgage with power of sale, and the account of sale showed a certain deficiency which the defendant admitted to be correct, it was held not to constitute an account stated. Rolfe, B., said:

"It is a perversion of language to speak of this as an account stated. It is merely the process adopted for the purpose of ascertaining how much of the original debt has been discharged, and all which is really done is to make out to what extent the defendant remains liable on the debt. This does not entitle the plaintiff to proceed as on a new liability, as on an account stated." Middleditch v. Ellis, 2 Exch. 623.

Cotenants—Special Agreement.—The plaintiff and the defendant entered into an agreement for the improvement of certain lands whereof they were cotenants, and for the erection of houses thereon. In this agreement it was declared "that the accounts of the costs of said lands, the costs of the improvements thereon, and the expenses connected therewith, and also the accounts of moneys furnished by each of them" for the purposes of the agreement, were stated in and appeared upon the books of account of the plaintiff's firm. It was held that this admission was not intended to give the books the weight of accounts stated, or to be a conclusive admission of their correctness, but that it was intended as a declaration that such accounts were prima facie correct. Brown v. Brown (Supreme Ct.), 5 N. Y. Supp. 893.

2. Agreement as to Balance Struck.—Hughes v. Thorpe, 5 M. & W. 667; Ware v. Manning, 86 Ala. 238; Reinhardt v. Hines, 51 Miss. 344; State v. Hartman Steel Co., 51 N. J. L. 446; Lockwood v. Thorne, 18 N. Y. 285; Stenton v. Jerome, 54 N. Y. 484; Larder v. Farquhar, 20 Nova Scotia 454.

Agreement as to Correctness of Items Only.—If the correctness of the items of the accounts involved between the parties is admitted so that finding a balance is a mere matter of addition and subtraction, it is not necessary that these operations should be actually performed, but the accounts will have the character of accounts stated. Ware v. Manning, 86 Ala. 238. See Treadway v. Ryan, 3 Kan. 437; Finlay v. Kirkland, 9 Martin (La.) 463.

Sum Certain after Deductions.—An instrument reciting a settlement and an understanding that the plaintiff shall receive a certain sum, "first claims deducted," will sustain an action upon an account stated. Millikin v. Ferguson, 56 Mich. 189.

The Amount need not be Expressed.—It is not necessary that the amount of the balance should be expressed in words in the agreement between the parties if it is so referred to as to be provable to be a definite amount. Thus, where a party to whom a bill was sent admitted the correctness of "the bill" and promised payment, it was held sufficient. Goodrich v. Coffin, 83 Me. 324, 2 Greenl. on Ev., § 126.

Actual Examination or Admission of Correctness.—For this purpose there must be an examination by the parties of the accounts between them, or circumstances must exist from which it may be concluded that their correctness has been admitted.¹

(2) Assent of Party to be Charged—(a) Generally.—The meeting of the minds of the parties upon the correctness of an account stated is usually the result of a statement of accounts by one party and an acquiescence therein by the other.

Necessity of Assent—Form Immaterial.—The form of this acquiescence or assent is immaterial. It need not be in writing,² nor signed.³ It may be express, Debtor Dissenting from Balance.—Where it appears that at the time of the alleged statement of the account one party dissented from the balance found and claimed an additional credit which was disallowed, an action upon an account stated cannot be maintained. Cape Girardeau, etc., R. Co. v. Kimmel, 58 Mo. 83.; Bouslog v. Garrett, 39 Ind. 338.

Account Closed by Death.—Although the death of one of the parties closes an account in the sense that there can be no additions to it, yet it does not make it an account stated, although a considerable time has elapsed since the death, since in such case there is no balance struck nor assent thereto, express or implied. Bass v. Bass, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 187.

1. Must be Examination or Circumstances Supporting Admission as to Correctness.—In some cases it is stated that in order to constitute an account stated there must be a mutual examination of their respective claims by the parties. Reinhardt v. Hines, 51 Miss. 344; Lockwood v. Thorne, 18 N. Y. 288; Bussey v. Gant, 10 Humph. (Tenn.) 241.

Lapse of Time, Acquiescence, etc.—But without actual examination and approval, circumstances may give to accounts the weight of accounts stated. Such are length of time, acquiescence, and the fact that the party has acted upon them to his injury. Greene v. Harris, 11 R. I. 28; Bottum v. Moore, 13 Daly (N. Y.) 464; Murphy v. Ross (Supreme Ct.), 7 N. Y. St. Rep. 182; Benites v. Hampton, 3 Utah 369.

Thus, in 1 Daniel Ch. Pr. (6th ed.) 666, it is said: "It does not seem to be necessary to aver that the account was settled between the parties upon a minute investigation of items; a general agreement or composition will be sufficient."

Where the plaintiff went over the account in the presence of the debtor and found a certain amount due to himself, and the result was not objected to by the defendant, it was held to be an account stated. Kock v. Bonitz, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 117.

Examination of Account on One Side Only.—It is not sufficient that one side only of the account was gone over, when the other side was not examined and no balance was agreed upon. Pickard v. Simpson (Supreme Ct.), 6 N. Y. Supp. 93, 2 Silv. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 468.

Where the Payee of a Promissory Note, upon which several payments have been made, presents it to the maker, and at his request agrees to remit a proportion of the interest, and the parties compute the amount due upon that basis, and fix upon the amount so found as the amount to be taken as due upon the note, it is such an accounting as will sustain an action on an account stated. Buxton v. Edwards, 134 Mass. 578.

Insufficient Opportunity for Examination.—Where an account stated was pleaded as a bar to a bill for an accounting brought by a town against former selectmen thereof, and it appeared that the relation between the parties was, to a limited extent, of a confidential nature; that the report was presented to the town at an unexpected time, without previous notice, and with no opportunity for the town or its agents to examine it with that degree of care and scrutiny which its importance demanded; that it was not a full and complete account, but was merely an abstract showing the results of the various transactions, deficient in many particulars and wholly unaccompanied with vouchers; that the report was withheld from the officers of the town so that no opportunity was given for a thorough examination; and that acquiescence in the pretended settlement for an unreasonable length of time was wholly wanting,—it was held that the account ought not to be deemed a stated account. Chatham v. Niles, 36 Conn. 403.

2. General Rule—Writing not Necessary.—Nooe v. Garner, 70 Ala. 443; James v. Fellowes, 20 La. Ann. 118; Darby v. Lastrapes, 28 La. Ann. 605; Hea v. Jones, 2 Allen (New Bruns.) 646; St. John v. Lockhart, 23 New Bruns. 430.

An account stated need not be in writing to sustain an action upon an account stated. Pinchon v. Chilcott, 3 C. & P. 236, 14 E. C. L. 283; Knowles v. Michel, 13 East 249; Watkins v. Ford, 69 Mich. 357.

Writing, when Necessary.—But where a party pleads an account stated as a bar to a suit for an accounting, he must show that it was in writing. Burk v. Brown, 2 Atk. 399; Wood v. Gault, 2 Md. Ch. 433.

3. Need not be Signed.—Willis v. Jernegan, 2 Atk. 252; Wood v. Gault, 2 Md. Ch. 433; Stebbins v. Niles, 25 Miss. 348; Brown v. Vandyke, 8 N. J. Eq. 801, 55 Am. Dec. 250; Lockwood v. Thorne, 11 N. Y. 170, 42 Am. Dec. 81; Bruen v. Hone, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 586.

Effect when Signed.—When a party signs his name to an account current, it is not conclusive evidence of his owing the amount therein stated. Proof of fraud or mistake rebuts or implied from the conduct of the parties, but there must in every case be proof in some form of an assent to the account rendered, that is, a definite acknowledgment of indebtedness in a certain sum.¹

Time of Assent.—The admissions of the correctness of an account rendered may be made either before or after suit brought, provided the debt existed before suit brought.² And where the account has been assigned, the admission may be made either before or after assignment.³

the implied admission. Nichols v. Alsop, 6 Conn. 476; Miller v. Probst, Add. (Pa.) 344. See Zacharie v. Blandin, 6 La. 204.

Assent under Duress or Obtained by Misrepresentations.—A party is not bound by an account where his assent is obtained by compulsion or fraudulent misrepresentations. Kelsey v. Hobby, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 269; Stenton v. Jerome, 54 N. Y. 480; Dunham v. Griswold, 100 N. Y. 224; Upton v. Bedlow, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 216. See Tucker v. Barrow, 7 B. & C. 623, 14 E. C. L. 103; Kinney v. Heatley, 13 Oregon 35.

Promise to Pay Another's Debt.—A promise to pay the debt of another is insufficient to support an action upon an account stated. French v. French, 2 M. & G. 644, 40 E. C. L. 555; Wilson v. Marshall, 2 Ir. R. C. L. 356; Stevens v. Ayers (Supreme Ct.), 10 N. Y. Supp. 502. See also Porter v. Lobach, 2 Bosw. (N. Y.) 188; Holmes v. Morse, 50 Me. 102.

Judgment as Evidence.—Assent must be voluntary; so a judgment is not evidence of an account stated. Gooding v. Hingston, 20 Mich. 439.

Recovery on Account Stated where the Original has been Lost.—The plaintiff may recover upon an admission of indebtedness with regard to rent due, as upon an account stated, although he fails to produce or account for the written lease. Burch v. Harrell, 93 Ga. 719.

Consent Withdrawn.—An account wherein a deduction was assented to for a time is not an account stated if the person so assenting afterwards objects and refuses to receipt in full. Fickett v. Cohn (C. Pl.), 1 N. Y. Supp. 436.

An Admission of Mere Liability not Sufficient.—In Bloomley v. Grinton, 1 U. C. C. P. 309, the defendant admitted a certain balance due to the plaintiff from which was to be deducted an unascertained debt due to the defendant, and also a balance on a certain account due by the plaintiff to his brother, which he had agreed should be paid by the defendant out of moneys coming to the plaintiff. It was held that this was not evidence of an account stated. Macaulay, C. J., said: "The mere admission of the balance remaining on one part of a transaction or agreement, to be reduced by deductions concurrently agreed to be made as another part of such transaction or agreement, such deductions not being ascertained or admitted in point of amount (which is the present case), does not admit any specific sum as presently due so as to amount to evidence of an account stated either at that time or at any prior period. Such admission only shows a liability to account, or a state of accounts unadjusted; nor would proof of the amount of the counter claim to be deducted show an admitted balance of the residue sufficient to support the count on an account stated." See also Calvert v. Baker, 2 Jur. 1020; Burgh v. Legge, 5 M. & W. 418; Irving v. Veitch, 3 M. & W. 90; Lane v. Hill, 18 Q. B. 252, 83 E. C. L. 252; Kirton v. Wood, 1 M. & R. 253.

Evidence of Assent.—Any facts which show that the admission of indebtedness in a fixed sum is the necessary result of the settlement between the parties, are competent upon the trial of an account stated. Thus upon an action on an account stated, for the unpaid balance of the purchase money of land, the written contract between the parties and the vendor's subsequent deed to the purchaser may be introduced to show the amount of the purchase money. Chapman v. Lee, 47 Ala. 143.

Where a workman furnishes goods to workmen on orders from their employer, and receives his pay from the employer on presentation of the orders, the amount being fixed by the orders and deducted from the wages of the workmen, the arrangement is evidence of an account stated with the employer. Bull v. Brockway, 48 Mich. 523.

Where a client delivered to his attorney an account of coal furnished to him, and the attorney delivered to the client an account for services, crediting the amount of the coal bill, it is evidence of the client's assent to the attorney's bill that he takes it away with him, promising to send coal as usual to apply thereon, and that he afterwards does send a large amount of coal. Beals v. Wagener, 47 Minn. 489.

2. Assent may be either Before or After Suit Brought.—2 Greenl. Ev. 128; Ex p. Randleson, 2 Deac. & C. 534; Powell v. Pacific R. Co., 65 Mo. 658. See Skinler v. Clute, 9 Nev. 343; Stowe v. Sewall, 3 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 67.

3. Time of Assent when Account has been Assigned.—Powell v. Pacific R. Co., 65 Mo. 658.

(b) Admissions must be Unconditional.—When the party to whom the account is rendered admits that it is correct, it becomes an account stated,¹ but the admission must be direct and unconditional.²

(c) Assent Implied from Conduct.—(aa) ACCOUNTS ADJUSTED IN THE PRESENCE OF BOTH PARTIES.—Where parties adjust accounts between themselves in the presence of both, and no objection is made to their correctness, they become accounts stated against the debtor.³

(bb) PAYMENT OF BALANCE.—The payment of the balance due upon an account stated is an admission of its correctness.⁴ But where such payment is brought about by the other party by threats of a criminal prosecution, or of selling property in his hands belonging to the debtor, payment is not an acquiescence.⁵

(cc) PAYMENT WITHOUT OBJECTION, ON ACCOUNTS RENDERED.—Where an account is rendered by the creditor to the debtor, and the latter retains it and makes payment upon it without objection, it becomes an account stated between the parties;⁶ but in such case the account rendered must be free from ambiguity,

1. Ryan v. Gross, 48 Ala. 370; Burns v. Campbell, 71 Ala. 271; Joseph v. Southwark Foundry, etc., Co., 99 Ala. 47; Pulliam v. Booth, 21 Ark. 420; Carroll v. Paul, 16 Mo. 226; May v. Kloss, 44 Mo. 300; Beach v. Kidder (Supreme Ct.), 8 N. Y. Supp. 587; Philips v. Belden, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 1; Tassey v. Church, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 141, 39 Am. Dec. 65.

Delivering up Vouchers.—Delivering up vouchers is an admission that the account is a stated one, but this is not essential. Willis v. Jernegan, 2 Atk. 252.

Sufficient Admission.—Where a party admits payment of a certain sum and another for goods sold and delivered, the latter admits that a certain sum (less than that demanded) is due, and suit is brought upon an account stated for the sum admitted, the admission of the defendant and the bringing of the action amount to a stated account. Grundy v. Townsend, 36 W. R. 531.

It seems that any admission by one party of a balance, or an acknowledgment that a sum of money is due another, supports a count upon an account stated. Gooding v. Hingston, 20 Mich. 439. See Gregory v. Bailey, 4 Harr. (Del.) 256; Neyland v. Neyland, 19 Tex. 426; and supra, this title, Previous Transactions.

2. Admission must be Direct and Unconditional.—Evans v. Verity, R. & M. 230; Wilson v. Marshall, 2 Ir. R. C. L. 356; State v. Hartman Steel Co., 51 N. J. L. 446.

In Evans v. Verity, R. & M. 230, the defendant, upon the plaintiff's demanding payment of a certain sum, replied that he would pay it if the plaintiff "had not removed the grates." It was held that this was no admission of liability, but only an admission that the sum would have been paid if something else had not happened.

Where the defendant admitted the correctness of the plaintiff's bill, but refused to pay because the plaintiff owed him a larger bill, this admission was held not to amount to an account stated. State v. Hartman Steel Co., 51 N. J. L. 446.

Defendant admitted the correctness of an account presented by the plaintiff, but refused to sign it, alleging that there might be other credits to which he was entitled and for which he required time to consider; it was held that this was not evidence of a stated account. Harley v. Goodfellow, 1 Hannay (New Bruns.) 335.

Where one to whom an account is rendered admits the correctness of the items, but denies his liability, insisting that some other person is justly chargeable and ought to pay, the account does not become an account stated. Ryan v. Gross, 48 Ala. 370. See Harris v. Woodard, 40 Mich. 408.

3. 2 Greenleaf Ev., § 126; Darlington v. Taylor, 3 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 195; Kock v. Bonitz, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 117.

4. Payment as Admission of Correctness.—Bruen v. Hone, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 586; Gilchrist v. Brooklyn Grocers' Mfg. Assoc., 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 390. In this latter case the defendant, after an account rendered to him by the plaintiff, objected to only one item, which the plaintiff deducted, and the defendant paid the balance. It was held that the account was a stated account.

5. Payment Made in Consequence of Threats.—Stenton v. Jerome, 54 N. Y. 480; Dunham v. Griswold, 100 N. Y. 224. See Kelsey v. Hobby, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 269.

6. Manion Blacksmith, etc., Co. v. Carreras, 26 Mo. App. 229. See Kehl v. Smith, 87 Wis. 212; Rayburn v. Mason Lumber Co., 57 Mich. 274.

Where a party after retaining an account rendered for several weeks accepts a draft upon himself in order to make part payment of the balance, this is an admission of the correctness of the account. Weed v. Dyer, 53 Ark. 155.

Where the defendant was silent for some time after an account was rendered to him, made payments on account, and promised to pay the whole in instalments, and stated that he owed the balance of the gambling debt, the jury were warranted in finding an account stated. Mulford v. Caesar, 53 Mo. App. 263.

When not Conclusive.—Where the defendant retains, unchallenged for a long time, an account submitted by the plaintiff, and makes and must show aggregate charges in the plaintiff's favor and deduct proper credits.¹

(dd) GIVING EVIDENCE OF INDEBTEDNESS.—Promissory notes,² due bills and I.O.U.'s,³ being admissions of a certain sum due, are prima facie evidence of accounts stated. So acceptances for a given sum,⁴ or bills of exchange drawn by the debtor in favor of the creditor,⁵ are evidence of a stated account.

(ee) CLAIMING BALANCE.—Where accounts are rendered by one to another showing a balance in favor of the latter, and he makes no objection to the items of account, but claims the balance, as by drawing on the other party, the account becomes a stated account.⁶

(ff) OBJECTION TO PARTICULAR ITEMS.—If, when an account is rendered by one person to another, the latter objects to only one item, it is an admission of the correctness of the other items, and the account becomes stated as to them.⁷

a payment thereon, this does not amount to a conclusive admission of the correctness of the account, and these facts may be met by defendant by evidence of mistake, and his explanation consistent therewith; and the question is then properly submitted to the jury upon evidence. Sharkey v. Mansfield, 90 N. Y. 227, 43 Am. Rep. 161.

1. Manion Blacksmith, etc., Co. v. Carreras, 26 Mo. App. 229.

2. Promissory Notes.—Maybury v. Berkery (Mich., 1894), 60 N. W. Rep. 699; Seabury v. Bolles, 51 N. J. L. 103; Lake v. Tysen, 6 N. Y. 461; Dutcher v. Porter, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 15; Robbins v. Downey (C. Pl.), 45 N. Y. St. Rep. 279; Davis v. Gallagher (Supreme Ct.), 9 N. Y. Supp. 11; Rhodes v. Crawford, 1 U. C. Q. B. 257; Merritt v. Woods, Berton (New Bruns.) 261; Casey v. Hanington, 19 New Bruns. 282.

Joint Note.—Where there are two makers of a promissory note, the note is prima facie evidence of an account stated against both, but if one of the makers is a surety merely, he must show the facts and rebut the presumption as to himself. Hogan v. McSherry, 6 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 633.

When Promissory Note is not Evidence.—When one party was in the habit of giving the other notes not representing what was actually due, but as collateral security for his indebtedness, it shall be presumed that a note depended on as evidence of an account stated was given for a balance on a settlement of accounts. Hill v. Durand, 58 Wis. 160.

Evidence of Settlement.—A promissory note may be prima facie evidence of a settlement and payment of the balance of an account stated, but it is not conclusive. Rosencrantz v. Mason, 85 Ill. 252; Hill v. Sloan, 59 Ind. 181; Gaskin v. Wells, 15 Ind. 253; Morton v. Rogers, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 484, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 576; Dutcher v. Porter, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 15; Sherman v. McIntyre, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 592; Treadwell v. Abrams, 15 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 219; Proctor v. Thompson, 13 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 340.

Writings Lacking Essentials of Promissory Notes.—Writings which are not formal promissory notes, through lacking some of the essential requisites of commercial paper, are yet evidences of accounts stated. Montgomerie v. Ivers, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 38; Reed v. Reed, 11 U. C. Q. B. 26; Grant v. Young, 23 U. C. Q. B. 387; Tyke v. Cosford, 14 U.

3. Due Bills, etc.—Wilson v. Wilson, 14 C. B. 626, 78 E. C. L. 626; Buck v. Hurst, L. R. 1 C. P. 297; Douglas v. Holme, 4 P. & D. 685, 12 Ad. & El. 641, 40 E. C. L. 145; Payne v. Jenkins, 4 C. & P. 324, 19 E. C. L. 404; Frost v. Clark, 82 Iowa 298; Mackay v. Kahn (C. Pl.), 44 N. Y. St. Rep. 286.

Joint and Several I. O. U.—A joint and several I. O. U. signed by A and B is evidence of an account stated by A and B jointly, although the money for which the I. O. U. was given was loaned to A only on B's promise to become surety for its repayment. Buck v. Hurst, L. R. 1 C. P. 297.

4. Acceptances.—Weed v. Dyer, 53 Ark. 155; Stewart v. Kirk, 5 Allen (New Bruns.) 131.

5. Bills of Exchange.—Emerson v. Gardiner, 1 Allen (New Bruns.) 451.

But a bill of exchange is not evidence of an account stated between the acceptor and indorsee, for there is no privity between these parties. Stephens v. Berry, 15 U. C. C. P. 548.

6. American Nat. Bank v. Bushey, 45 Mich. 135; Lockwood v. Thorne, 11 N. Y. 170, 42 Am. Dec. 81; Bevan v. Cullen, 7 Pa. St. 281; Hall v. Sloan, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 138. See also Woodward v. Suydam, 11 Ohio 360.

Receiving the Balance.—Where one party sent an account, with his check for the balance thereon appearing against him, to the other party, and the latter received it and obtained the money thereon, though he objected at the time that the balance was too small, he was bound. Davenport v. Wheeler, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 231. See Pyncheon v. Day, 118 Ill. 9; Horn v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 37 Minn. 375; Schuyler v. Ross (Supreme Ct.), 37 N. Y. St. Rep. 805.

But where the testimony of the two parties to the alleged statement is conflicting, and the plaintiff testified that he accepted the check under protest, and it appeared that upon receiving the account he immediately notified the defendant of an error in the account, the question whether there was an account stated is for the jury. Rosenfield v. Fortier, 94 Mich. 29. See also supra, this title, Accounts Rendered.

7. Objection to Particular Item—Admission of Correctness of the Others.—Chisman v. Count, 2 M. & G. 307, 40 E. C. L. 385; Burns v.

(gg) PROMISING TO PAY AN ACCOUNT RECEIVED WITHOUT OBJECTION.—Where an account has been rendered to the debtor, and he receives it without objection and promises to pay it, it becomes a stated account, the items of which cannot afterwards be questioned.¹ The same is true where an account is received without objection, and the amount of the balance is credited on a subsequent account against the party presenting the first account.²

(hh) RETAINING ACCOUNT RENDERED, WITHOUT OBJECTION—General Principles—Rule Stated.—An account rendered by one party to another and retained beyond a reasonable time without objection is regarded as admitted to be correct, and becomes an account stated.³

Campbell, 71 Ala. 271; Ware v. Manning, 86 Ala. 238; Joseph v. Southwark Foundry, etc., Co., 99 Ala. 47; Tuggle v. Minor, 76 Cal. 96; Sergeant v. Ewing, 36 Pa. St. 156. See also Wiggins v. Where the defendant agreed to pay an account, but one item of the account was left open for further investigation, and the defendant agreed to the amount excluding such item, and no subsequent investigation as to it was shown, it was held that the plaintiff could only recover the admitted amount, as the account was stated as to that only. Tuggle v. Minor, 76 Cal. 96.

Where an account showing a balance in favor of the plaintiff was presented by him to the defendant, and the defendant wrote thereon the sum to be deducted from the balance, this was held to be no admission of the correctness of the account without the deduction. Spurr v. Allison, 3 Allen (New Bruns.) 454.

Objecting to Price Only in Bills of Goods.—The retention by the vendee for several weeks of a bill sent to him by the vendor, not followed by any objection on the part of the vendee except as to the price at which the goods are charged in the bill, constitutes a recognition of the correctness of the quantity of the goods stated therein. Eleventh Ward Bank*, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 476; Craighead v. State Bank, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 399.

In Leather Manufacturers' Nat. Bank v.

Morgan, 117 U. S. 96, Harlan, J., said: "The object of a pass-book is to inform the depositor from time to time of the condition of his account as it appears upon the books of the bank. It not only enables him to discover errors to his prejudice, but supplies evidence in his favor in the event of litigation or dispute with the bank. In this way it operates to protect him against the carelessness or fraud of the bank. The sending of his pass-book to be written up and returned with the vouchers is, therefore, in effect a demand to know what the bank claims to be the state of his account; and the return of the book with the vouchers is the answer to that demand, and in effect imports a request by the bank that the depositor will in proper time examine the account so rendered and either sanction or repudiate it."

Broker and Customer.—A broker's pass-book balanced and returned to a customer periodically constitutes an account stated with him. Marve v. Strouse, 5 Fed. Rep. 485.

No Evidence of an Account Settled.—The failure to object to an account rendered for a considerable length of time is no evidence that the account has been settled. Irvine v. Young, 1 Sim. & Stu. 333; Clancarty v. Latouche, 1 Ball & B. 428; Killam v. Preston, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 16.

1. The rule was early applied in the United States in cases at law. Richardson Mfg. Co. v. Starks, 4 Mason (U. S.) 296; White v. Macon, 3 Cranch (C. C.) 250; Bainbridge v. Wilcocks, 1 Baldw. (U. S.) 536.

2. Statement of Rule by the Early Authorities.—The earliest statement of the rule is in Sherman v. Sherman, 2 Vern. 276, decided in 1692. In this case Lord Hutchins said: "Amongst merchants it is looked upon as an allowance of an account current if the merchant that receives it does not object against it in a second or third post."

The rule seems to have been next noticed in Willis v. Jernegan, 2 Atk. 251, a case before Lord Hardwicke in 1741, where, to an objection that an account was not a stated account because not signed, the court declared that signing was not essential, since, in the case of a merchant beyond sea and a merchant in England, transmitting an account from one to the other and keeping it without objection any length of time will make it an account stated.

In Tickel v. Short, 2 Ves. 239, decided in 1751, Lord Hardwicke said: "As between merchants in different countries, when an account sent by one to the other is kept without objection about two years, the rule with the court of chancery and with merchants is, that it is considered a stated account."

The statement of Tickel v. Short, 2 Ves. 239, is followed in Freeland v. Heron, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 147, and in Murray v. Toland, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 569. These cases will be found discussed in Anding v. Levy, 57 Miss. 62, 34 Am. Rep. 435; and in Townes v. Birchett, 12 Leigh (Va.) 173, in the dissenting opinion of

In Some Jurisdictions Rule Confined to Merchants.—In some of the states of the Union, the courts have refused to extend the rule beyond controversies between merchants.¹

In Other Jurisdictions Rule Applied to Business Men Generally.—But in other states it has been said to be applicable between all classes of business men.²

Difference not Substantial, Ordinarily.—The difference is, however, in many cases, one of terms rather than of substance. The courts holding the rule as applicable generally, regard retention as in no case conclusive, to the extent that upon the admission or finding of the fact of retention for a sufficient length of time unexplained the account becomes, as a necessary consequence, a stated account—as under the chancery rule for merchants—but merely as evidence from which acquiescence may be inferred;³ while courts restricting the rule to the dealings of merchants allow the fact that an account was retained without objection in any case to go to the jury, but consider that the weight to be given to the fact depends upon the business, character, and education of the parties, and their local situation.⁴

1. How Limited by Some Courts.—McCord v. Manson, 17 Ill. App. 121; Mackin v. O'Brien, 33 Ill. App. 474; B. S. Greene Co. v. Smith, 52 Ill. App. 158; Anding v. Levy, 57 Miss. 51, 34 Am. Rep. 435; Rich v. Eldredge, 42 N. H. 153.

In other cases the rule is stated so as to embrace merchants only. See Brown v. Vanduyke, 8 N. J. Eq. 795, 55 Am. Dec. 250; Ruffner v. Hewitt, 7 W. Va. 585.

In Virginia the question seems open. Townes v. Birchett, 12 Leigh (Va.) 173; Robertson v. Wright, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 541.

2. Regarded as Applicable to All Classes of Business Men.—Shepard v. State Bank, 15 Mo. 143; Brown v. Kimmel, 67 Mo. 430; Fleischner v. Kubli, 20 Oregon 328. See Hawkins v. Long, 74 N. Car. 781; Johnson v. McCampbell, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 27.

In Brown v. Kimmel, 67 Mo. 430, it was said by Napton, J.: "The principle seems to have been extended to all cases where the relation of debtor and creditor exists."

Illustrations.—Illustrations of the classes of persons between whom the rule has been applied are: a vendor of stone, and a canal contractor, Towsley v. Denison, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 490; a railroad company, and one boarding laborers employed by the company on its road, Powell v. Pacific R. Co., 65 Mo. 658. The rule is applicable to corporations, Bradley v. Richardson, 2 Blatchf. (U. S.) 343; and to accounts between principal and agent, McCord v. Manson, 17 Ill. App. 118; Philips v. Belden, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 1. Thus it obtains between attorney and client, Case v. Hotchkiss, 1 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 324; stock broker and customer, Mansell v. Payne, 18 La. Ann. 124; commission broker and customer, Darby v. Lastrapes, 28 La. Ann. 605; Bruen v. Hone, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 586; Dows v. Durfee, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 213.

A pass-book kept by an employee, occasionally handed to the bookkeeper of the employer, by whom all necessary entries are made therein, is an account stated between the parties. Burke v. Wolfe, 38 N. Y. Super. Ct. 263.

3. Brown v. Kimmel, 67 Mo. 430; Kent v. Highleyman, 17 Mo. App. 9; White v. Hampton, 10 Iowa 238; Johnson v. McCampbell, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 27. See Bertrand v. Taylor, 32 Ark. 470; Miller v. Bruns, 41 Ill. 293.

In Brown v. Kimmel, 67 Mo. 430, Napton, J., after admitting that the rule is applicable to commercial transactions generally, proceeds as follows: "The rule at best is a very flexible one, and undoubtedly depends in its application on the circumstances of each case, to be judged by the nature of the transaction, the habits of the business in which it occurs, and the course of trade. * * * There are cases in which this presumed acquiescence, arising from lapse of time and failure to object within a reasonable time, has been considered very slight evidence of the correctness of the account, Killam v. Preston, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 16; Spangler v. Springer, 22 Pa. St. 454; and others, again, where the courts have regarded it as conclusive, except where fraud or mistake is clearly shown, Lockwood v. Thorne, 11 N. Y. 170, 42 Am. Dec. 81. It will readily be perceived, on an examination of the numerous cases reported on this subject, that they have been decided on the peculiar circumstances attending each case, and most generally in proceedings in equity. In no case has such implied admissions been held to be an estoppel, but simply a prima facie case throwing the burden of contradiction or explanation on the adverse party." See also Lockwood v. Thorne, 18 N. Y. 285; Quincy v. White, 63 N. Y. 370; Baxter v. Lockett (Wash. Ter., 1884), 6 Pac. Rep. 429.

4. McCord v. Manson, 17 Ill. App. 118; Mackin v. O'Brien, 33 Ill. App. 474; Anding v. Levy, 57 Miss. 51, 34 Am. Rep. 435; Rich v. Eldredge, 42 N. H. 153; Wittkowski v. Harris, 64 Fed. Rep. 712.

In Rich v. Eldredge, 42 N. H. 153, Bell, C.J., said: "The rule as thus stated does not apply in the cases of persons who are not merchants; but some presumption of assent

In Pennsylvania the decisions render the force of the rule somewhat doubtful.¹

Account Rendered by Post.—The rule applies equally in the case of accounts rendered by mail or other regular method of communication.² The fact that an account was so rendered being proven, the presumption is that it was received.³

Reasonable Time.—What is a reasonable time for the retention of an account depends upon the circumstances of the case and the usual course of business.⁴ The courts have not attempted to lay down any general test.⁵ When all the

to the correctness of an account rendered, from the silence and acquiescence of the party without making any objection after a reasonable opportunity has elapsed for its examination, and reasonable time for objecting, arises with more or less force in the case of all persons who can be properly regarded as men of business, considering the nature of their business and education, their local situation, and other circumstances, such presumptions applying with most force in cities and being slightly regarded in the country."

1. Pennsylvania.—The mere retention of an account without objection was said by the court, in Killam v. Preston, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 14, to be some evidence, although at most very slight, that it was admitted to be correct. The same rule was declared, citing the former case, in Spangler v. Springer, 22 Pa. St. 454.

But in other cases a rule more in accordance with the weight of authority elsewhere is laid down. Thus, in Sergeant v. Ewing, 30 Pa. St. 75, it is said: "It is too well settled now to be doubted that accounts rendered to a party indebted, by his creditor, and not objected to in a reasonable time, are prima facie evidence against the party to whom rendered." The same rule is stated in Verrier v. Guillou, 97 Pa. St. 63, and Phillips v. Tapper, 2 Pa. St. 323.

In accord are Porter v. Patterson, 15 Pa. St. 229; Smedley v. Williams, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 359; Payne v. Nicholas, 2 Phila. (Pa.) 220; Lodge v. Heron, 3 Phila. (Pa.) 356; Colket v. Ellis, 1 W. N. C. (Pa.) 246; Preston v. Killam, 1 Am. L. J. (Pa.) 168. See also Jones v. Dunn, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 109.

2. Accounts Sent by Mail.—Bailey v. Bensley, 87 Ill. 556; Darby v. Lastrapes, 28 La. Ann. 605; McCormack v. Sawyer, 104 Mo. 36. But see Price v. Ramsay, 2 Jebb & Sy. (Ireland) 338, where it is declared that the rule does not apply where the accounts are transmitted by post.

3. Presumption as to Receipt of Accounts Mailed.—Darby v. Lastrapes, 28 La. Ann. 605. In this case the evidence showed that accounts were rendered to the defendant regularly in the usual way, by the regular vehicles of communication, and it was held that in the absence of all evidence to rebut the presumption that they were received, and in view of the fact that they had not been objected to for four years, they became accounts stated.

4. Bainbridge v. Wilcocks, 1 Baldw. (U. S.) 536; Freeman v. Howell, 4 La. Ann. 196, 50 Am. Dec. 561; Darby v. Lastrapes, 28 La. Ann. 605.

5. No General Test as to Reasonable Time for Retaining Account.—Lord Hutchins in Sherman v. Sherman, 2 Vern. 276, declared that merchants must object by the second or third post. Lord Hardwicke declared that after the retention of about two years, the rule would apply. Tickel v. Short, 2 Ves. 239. The same period (two years) is stated to be sufficient, in Freeland v. Heron, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 147, and in Murray v. Toland, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 569. Mr. Justice Story (1 Story's Eq. Jur., § 526) states that the passage of several posts between merchants at home, or several opportunities of writing between foreign merchants, is sufficient. This is in agreement with Lockwood v. Thorne, 11 N. Y. 170, 42 Am. Dec. 81, and is quoted as a correct statement of the law in Rich v. Eldredge, 42 N. H. 159.

In Talcott v. Chew, 27 Fed. Rep. 273, an account rendered was held to be converted into an account stated, upon evidence that it was rendered by mail on September 20, the receipt acknowledged on September 22, and that it was retained without objection until October 20 of the same year.

In Hawkins v. Long, 74 N. Car. 781, three months' retention of an account without objection was held to convert it into a stated account.

In Lott v. Mobile County, 79 Ala. 69, the retention of a long account for thirty-five days was held not unreasonable under the circumstances of the case, and not sufficient to convert it into a stated account.

Objection Entertained by Party Rendering Account.—Where, after retaining an account for two months without objection, the defendants objected to certain items, and the plaintiffs who had rendered the account made no claim that it was too late to question its accuracy, but requested that the matter stand until a third person should return from Europe, it was held that the account could not be considered as an account stated. Porter v. Lobach, 2 Bosw. (N. Y.) 188.

Where a party rendered a bill for coal delivered, at so much per ton, and, upon the vendee returning it after several weeks with an objection as to the price of the coal, rendered another bill including additional items, and the second bill was retained for two or three weeks, it was held that the vendor was precluded by his own conduct from treating the first bill as admitted to be correct (although it seems that before rendering the second bill, he might have so treated the first), and the vendee was not precluded by his retention of the second bill for the time facts are undisputed, the question is for the court, but where the evidence is contradictory, it should be submitted to the jury under proper instructions.¹

Form of Account Rendered.—Accounts rendered to which assent is claimed must show the amount claimed to be due,² and must in terms make the person to whom they are rendered a party or clearly make known the grounds upon which it is sought to hold him as a debtor.³ But the fact that accounts rendered begin with balances brought forward from other accounts previously rendered will not prevent their forming stated accounts;⁴ nor will the fact that they contained the letters "E. and O. E." ("errors and omissions excepted") have that effect.⁵ The account rendered need not be accompanied by vouchers.⁶

For Whom Inference Available—Statute of Limitations.—It has been held that the inference of acquiescence of retention cannot be set up by the party to whom an account was rendered, against the party rendering it, in order to avail himself of the statute of limitations.⁷ He cannot be allowed to make his own inaction the basis of his defense, but must show some word or act implying that he assented to the account.⁸

Retention not Conclusive.—The inference of acquiescence from the retention of an account is not conclusive, and its strength depends upon other facts stated, from showing that the price therein charged for the coal was erroneous. Dakin v. Walton (Supreme Ct.), 33 N. Y. Supp. 203.

1. When a Question for Court and when for the Jury.—Toland v. Sprague, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 336; Wiggins v. Burkham, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 129; Standard Oil Co. v. Van Etten, 107 U. S. 334; Talcott v. Chew, 27 Fed. Rep. 273; Hutchinson v. Market Bank, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 302; Fleischner v. Kubli, 20 Oregon 328.

The question of reasonable time for the retention of an account is one of fact. Austin v. Ricker, 61 N. H. 97.

2. Must Show Amount Claimed.—Powell v. Pacific R. Co., 65 Mo. 658. See Manion Blacksmith, etc., Co. v. Carreras, 26 Mo. App. 229.

It seems that a writing in which most of the dates are omitted, and no dollar marks are placed before the figures, and no balance is struck or stated, and which has the appearance of a mere memorandum put together hastily for future consideration, does not constitute an account stated. Coffee v. Williams (Cal., 1894), 37 Pac. Rep. 504.

Statements showing but one side of the account, rendered periodically while the account is accruing, do not become accounts stated by retention without objection. Thomlinson v. Earnshaw, 14 Ill. App. 593.

Not Itemized.—It has been held that the account need not be itemized to become an account stated. May v. Kloss, 44 Mo. 300. But in Williams v. Glenny, 16 N. Y. 389, Denio, C. J., said: "I do not think a claim for a round sum where the subject of the demand is one which would naturally consist of many items, is in the nature of an account." See also Robbins v. Downey (C. Pl.), 45 N. Y. St. Rep. 279.

4. Containing Balances Brought Forward from Other Accounts Rendered.—Union Bank v. Knapp, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 96, 15 Am. Dec. 181; Dows v. Durfee, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 213; Fleischner v. Kubli, 20 Oregon 328.

5. Effect of Letters "E. and O. E." ("Errors and Omissions Excepted").—Johnson v. Curtis, 3 Bro. C. C. 266; Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 353; Young v. Hill, 67 N. Y. 162, 23 Am. Rep. 99; Kent v. Highleyman, 28 Mo. App. 614; Fleischner v. Kubli, 20 Oregon 328. See Elliott v. Walker, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 126; McKay v. Overton, 65 Tex. 86. But compare Ingraham v. Lukens, 30 S. Car. 616.

Provision for Future Correction.—Where an account contains all the essentials of an account stated, it is not prevented from being such by the words: "This settlement is correct according to our understanding at this time, but should anything occur we are amicable to settle it." Marmon v. Waller, 53 Mo. App. 610.

6. Account need not be with Vouchers.—Ogden v. Astor, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 332.

7. White v. Campbell, 25 Mich. 463; Paine v. Walker, 26 Mich. 60.

8. In White v. Campbell, 25 Mich. 463, upon this point, Graves, J., for the court, said: "Considering the origin and nature of the rule, I think a person who has chosen to hold an equivocal position in such a case is not at liberty to assert the rights which pertain to a definite and decided one. He ought not to be allowed at his election to turn his own considerate inaction and reticence into a positive admission in his own favor to serve as the very basis of his defense under the statute. When he claims the benefit of the statute on the ground that the account sued on has been converted into a stated one through his assent to it as rendered to him, it is not enough to substantiate the defense that there is no evidence as to whether he objected or not, nor is it sufficient to sustain such a defense to prove that upon and after the exhibition of the account he remained perfectly passive. He must go further. He must show some word or act marking or implying that he assented to the account."

besides the mere length of time during which the account has been retained.¹ Thus the fact of retention may be explained by showing that the party failing to object was absent from home, suffering from illness, or expected shortly to see the other party,² or that the parties had already come to a disagreement when the account was rendered.³

Admissions to Third Parties, Evidence.—Admissions made to third parties may be evidence to the jury of a previous accounting then admitted to have taken place, if they are unequivocal as to a specific amount acknowledged to be due, although such admissions cannot in themselves constitute a statement of account.⁴

(d) Scope of Matters Covered.—The strong presumption is, that the parties include in a settlement all the items each has against the other that are due, and clear and convincing proof is required to rebut this presumption.⁵ But it does

Where a factor, after selling a consignment of goods and sending to his principal an account of the sales, which account was acquiesced in, was unable to collect from the purchaser, and thereupon resold the goods and sent his principal an account of the resale, no presumption of assent arises from retention or failure to object to the account of resale. Cartwright v. Greene, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 9.

2. Retention—How Explainable.—Wiggins v. Burkham, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 129; Talcott v. Chew, 27 Fed. Rep. 273.

Account Barred by Statute of Limitations.—Retaining an account barred by the statute of limitations does not render it an account stated. Bryan v. Ware, 20 Ala. 687.

Where the plaintiffs, believing that they had performed their part of the contract by which they were to deliver a quantity of wool in good order at a stipulated price to the defendants, when in fact the wool had been sent in bad order, rendered an account of such shipment, the defendants did not make such an account a stated account by the failure to object thereto. Polhemus v. Heiman, 50 Cal. 438.

Where the plaintiff, dissatisfied with the account rendered, requested a more detailed statement, and received something on account and was promised the detailed account asked for, the first account did not become a stated account because the plaintiff waited a long time for the detailed account promised. Carpenter v. Nickerson, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 424.

not prevent a transaction being an account stated, that the parties limited its scope to some only of the items and matters involved in their mutual dealings.¹ Thus an account rendered by the plaintiff to the defendant may become a stated account by the admission of the latter that it is correct, although the defendant may have counter claims which are not deducted.²

c. ACCOUNT STATED, QUESTION OF LAW OR FACT.—Where all the facts are undisputed, the question whether they constitute an account stated is for the court; but where there is conflicting evidence the question should be submitted to the jury.³

Agreement as to Claims not Embraced in Accounting.—Where, at the time of stating accounts, the parties entered into a written agreement to the effect that demands not included should not be barred by the settlement, it was held that the effect of the stipulation was to do away with the presumption of satisfaction arising from the settlement, leaving either party free to pursue against the other claims not embraced in the settlement by appropriate proceedings, but not conferring the right to set off such claims against the balance found due on the accounting. Where the parties attempt to settle their accounts, and agree up to a certain point, and then, being unable to arrive at an agreement with regard to other items, give up further efforts to arrive at a settlement, the partial statement of accounts is not binding upon the parties as an account stated. Bouslog v. Garrett, 39 Ind. 338. See Tioga Mfg. Co. v. Stimson, 48 Mich. 213.

Showing Omission by Parol.—An account having been stated between the parties and signed by them, parol evidence to show other items of indebtedness cannot be received. Pickens v. Friend, 26 La. Ann. 585. See generally infra, this title, Impeaching Settled or Stated Accounts.

2. Counter Claims not Deducted.—Stuart v. Rowland, 1 Show. 215; Ware v. Manning, 86 Ala. 238; Filer v. Peebles, 8 N. H. 226; State v. Hartman Steel Co., 51 N. J. L. 446.

In State v. Hartman Steel Co., 51 N. J. L. 446, it appeared that defendant admitted W.'s bill, but claimed that W. owed him a larger amount. The court, by Reed, J., said: "It is now insisted by the counsel for the plaintiff that the defendant's claim was a set-off, and that the effect of his acknowledgment of the correctness of the plaintiff's bill is not defeated by coupling with such assent an assertion of the right to set off against it a counter claim. There is, undoubtedly, authority for the doctrine that where the correctness of the account presented is admitted it will amount to an account stated, although the person so acknowledging its accuracy insists that he has an offset. It was so ruled in the case of Filer v. Peebles, 8 N. H. 226, upon the authority of the case of Stuart v. Rowland, 1 Show. 215. In view of the character of an account stated which has grown up by judicial decisions, I think it is true that where parties get together and reduce an account to a balance by agreement, such balance may amount to an account stated, although there may exist some outstanding independent claim which one of the parties at the time signifies his intention to produce as an offset against the balance or as a demand in addition to the balance so agreed upon. But this can be so only when such unconsidered demand is an independent matter having no connection with or relation to the subject matter, the items of which are resolved into a sum certain by the agreement of the parties. The notion that there can be an account stated of certain items of the account while other items of the same account are questioned and left open for further adjustment or litigation, as was held in a case decided in the English Court of Common Pleas (Cressman v. Hawley, 2 Scott N. R. 569), cannot be supported upon any rational view of the nature of an account stated. It confounds every admission with an account stated."

3. When Facts Undisputed, a Question for the Court—When Conflicting, for Jury.—Bishop v. Chambre, 3 C. & P. 55, 14 E. C. L. 207; Davis v. Tiernan, 2 How. (Miss.) 786; Powell v. Pacific R. Co., 65 Mo. 658; Burger v. Burger, 34 Mo. App. 153; Lockwood v. Thorne, 11 N. Y. 170, 42 Am. Dec. 81; Stephens v. Ayers, 57 Hun (N. Y.) 51. See Rosenfield v. Fortier, 94 Mich. 30.

f. PROMISE—(1) Generally—Express or Implied.—A promise to pay the balance ascertained is a necessary ingredient of an account stated,¹ but this promise need not be express, for when the parties agree upon a balance due, or when their conduct justifies the inference that they have so agreed, the law implies a promise to pay such a balance.²

(2) Future or Conditional Promise.—The promise, if express, need not be to pay at once.³ Nor need it be absolute or unconditional; a promise to pay upon some future contingency is sufficient if coupled with an acknowledgment of a definite and subsisting indebtedness.⁴

(3) Consideration.—The consideration for the express or implied promise essential to an account stated is said to be the stating of the account.⁵

New Consideration Arising.—In case of mutual accounts, the demands on the two sides are set off against one another, and the consideration for the promise to pay the balance is the discharge on each side.⁶ A new and distinct

Whether a conversation between defendant and a witness is sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover upon an account stated, is a question of law and not of fact. Bishop v. Chambre, 3 C. & P. 55, 14 E. C. L. 207. But compare Burritt v. Villeneuve, 92 Mich. 282.

In all cases where there is controversy as to whether or not a full settlement has been made by the parties, the question whether or not such settlement was in fact made is one for the jury and not for the court. Meyer v. Marshall, 34 W. Va. 42; Robbins v. Downey (City Ct.), 41 N. Y. St. Rep. 95.

2. Promise to Pay Balance need not be Express.—Bouslog v. Garrett, 39 Ind. 338; James v. Fellowes, 20 La. Ann. 116; Chace v. Trafford, 116 Mass. 529; *Buxton v. Merely Striking Balance.—It is sufficient to support a count upon an account stated when it appears that as a result of an accounting between the parties in respect of debts or accounts a balance has been struck. Gooding v. Hingston, 20 Mich. 439.

Promise is Implied to Pay True Balance.—It is immaterial that a mistake was made in addition and subtraction in footing up the account, for it is the true balance by which the parties are bound, and upon which the law raises a promise to pay. Jaques v. Hulit, 16 N. J. L. 38.

Express Promise Supersedes Implied Promise.—An express promise to pay the balance supersedes the implied promise, and no action can be maintained upon the latter; the action must be upon the express promise and according to its terms. Work v. Beach, 53

Hun (N. Y.) 7, 35 N. Y. St. Rep. 22, 37 N. Y. St. Rep. 547. See Hill v. Lott, 13 U. C. Q. B. 465. But see Coughlin v. Gutta Percha, etc., Co., 33 Ill. App. 71.

3. Promise may be to Pay in Future.—Tuggle v. Minor, 76 Cal. 96; Baird v. Crank, 98 Cal. 293; Coughlin v. Gutta Percha, etc., Co., 33 Ill. App. 71; Fergusson v. Kerr, 5 U. C. Q. B. 261; McQueen v. McQueen, 9 U. C. Q. B. 536, 10 U. C. Q. B. 359; Young v. Fluke, 15 U. C. C. P. 360.

Where the defendant acknowledges the correctness of the account and promises payment to the plaintiff in fifteen days, the plaintiff is not compelled to wait for the expiration of that period before bringing suit. Coughlin v. Gutta Percha, etc., Co., 33 Ill. App. 71.

4. Promise to Pay may be Conditional.—So, a promise to pay "if I am able," McCormack v. Sawyer, 104 Mo. 36; or, "when I can do so," Work v. Beach, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 7, is sufficient. See also Russell v. Wells, 5 U. C. Q. B., O. S. 725.

As to whether plaintiff must show fulfillment of the condition, see Baird v. Crank, 98 Cal. 293; Work v. Beach, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 7, (Supreme Ct.) 37 N. Y. St. Rep. 547, 35 N. Y. St. Rep. 22.

But a promise by a party who has destroyed a boat, to replace it or pay one hundred and fifty dollars, will not sustain an action upon an account stated. Rutledge v. Moore, 9 Mo. 537.

5. 1 Stephen N. P. 362; Laycock v. Pickles, 4 B. & S. 497, 116 E. C. L. 497, per Wightman, J.; Holmes v. D'Camp, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 34, 3 Am. Dec. 293.

But the statement of an account without more is not a new consideration, and so does not create an estoppel. McKinster v. Hitchcock, 19 Neb. 100; Abbott's Trial Evidence, 458.

6. Mutual Accounts.—Laycock v. Pickles, 4 B. & S. 497, 116 E. C. L. 497, per Blackburn, J.; Callander v. Howard, 10 C. B. 290, 70 E. C. L. 290; Ashby v. James, 11 M. & W. 542; Brenan v. Cradley, 16 W. R. 754; Rand v. Wright, 129 Mass. 50. See also May v. King, 12 Mod. 537, 1 Ld. Raym. 680; Bump v. Phoenix, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 308.

More Acknowledgment of Debt.—Where the consideration also arises for the promise to pay, where, in arriving at the balance, there has been some concession made upon items in dispute between the parties, so that the balance is the result of a compromise.¹

g. NATURE AND EFFECT OF ACCOUNT STATED—(1) As a New Promise—
(a) Generally.—An account stated is in the nature of a new promise or undertaking, and raises a new cause of action between the parties.² In accordance with this principle it has been seen that a recovery may be had upon an account stated although there could be no recovery on the original debt.³

(b) Original Items not Provable.—Since the account stated is a new promise, the items of which the original cause of action was composed cannot be inquired into.⁴

items are all on one side of the account, and the statement of the account consists merely in the acknowledging of the debt due, whether consisting of one or more items, it is evident that there is no alteration of the situation of the parties and no new consideration. Ashby v. James, 11 M. & W. 542.

1. Compromise.—Wharton v. Anderson, 28 Minn. 301; Hanley v. Noyes, 35 Minn. 174; Kock v. Bonitz, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 117; Dunham v. Griswold, 100 N. Y. 224.

2. St. Louis Lager Beer Bottling Co. v. Colorado Nat. Bank, 8 Colo. 70; Chambers v. Fennemore, 4 Harr. (Del.) 368; Throop v. Sherwood, 9 Ill. 92; Chace v. Trafford, 116 Mass. 529; Christofferson v. Howe (Minn., 1894), 58 N. W. Rep. 830; McKinster v. Hitchcock, 19 Neb. 100; Smith v. Glenn Falls Ins. Co., 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 556; Holmes v. D'Camp, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 34, 3 Am. Dec. 293.

Right of Action Accrues Immediately.—The amount found due by an account stated is due from the time of settlement, and, in the absence of special agreement, the right of action for the balance accrues immediately. The time for payment may be extended by receiving promissory notes payable at a future date, but if the debtor promises to give such notes and fails to do so, the creditor may sue at once. Kronenberger v. Binz, 56 Mo. 121.

Illustrations of Effect of Account Stated being New Promise.—Since an account stated is a new promise, assumpsit will lie thereon, although only debt or covenant would have lain on the original debt. Foster v. Allanson, 2 T. R. 479; Moravia v. Levy, 2 T. R. 483, note.

Where one contracts a debt with a partnership, and one of the firm dies, and the debtor afterwards states an account with the surviving partner, the latter may recover upon an account stated without bringing his action as survivor and without alleging the death of his deceased copartner. Holmes v. D'Camp, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 34, 3 Am. Dec. 293.

If A, indebted to B, becomes indebted to B and C as partners, and states an account with B and C of both the debt due B and that due B and C, B and C may recover both claims in an action upon account stated. Moor v. Hill, Peake's Add. Cas. 10.

Assignability of Account Stated—Arkansas.—An account stated signed by the debtor is a written acknowledgment of a debt, and is an assignable instrument under the statutes of Arkansas (Mansfield's Dig., § 473), and may be sued upon by the holder without making his assignee a party, though there is no written assignment upon it. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Camden Bank, 47 Ark. 541.

3. See supra, this title, Previous Transactions.

4. No Inquiry may be Had as to Original Items.—Bartlett v. Emery, 1 T. R. 42, note; Gregory v. Bailey, 4 Harr. (Del.) 256; Irving v. Edrington, 41 La. Ann. 671; Union Bank v. Knapp, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 96; Christofferson v. Howe (Minn., 1894), 58 N. W. Rep. 830; McCall v. Nave, 52 Miss. 494; May v. Kloss, 44 Mo. 300; McClelland v. West, 70 Pa. St. 183; Benites v. Hampton, 3 Utah 369; Lyne v. Gilliat, 3 Call (Va.) 5; Hawley v. Harran, 79 Wis. 379.

Proof of Items Unnecessary.—A stated account may be proved by the person making it, at the request of the parties, and if the items were admitted by the parties no other evidence of them is necessary. Thus, where an account consisted, among other items, of judgments rendered by a justice of the peace, which were on a stating of the account admitted, there was no necessity for the production of other evidence of such judgments. Walker v. Driver, 7 Ala. 679.

The plaintiff may recover upon an account stated, on proof of the admission of a general balance, without proving the items of the account. Gregory v. Bailey 4 Harr. (Del.) 256; Thompson v. Thompson, 2 Harr. (Del.) 202; Parkins v. Bennington, 1 Harr. (Del.) 209; Oakey v. Weil, 7 La. Ann. 169; Stevens v. Tuller, 4 Mich. 387.

Evidence of Prior Transaction Inadmissible.—If a stated account is not impeached for fraud or mistake, evidence of transactions which took place before the settlement is inadmissible. Martin v. Beckwith, 4 Wis. 219.

When the Statement of Accounts is at Issue.—If the issue is whether the account is a stated one or not, evidence that the items of the account are false is admissible. Coffee v. Williams (Cal., 1894), 37 Pac. Rep. 504.

Prior Balances Incidentally Mentioned.—When an account sued on contained as one item a balance agreed on at a certain date, July 1, 1887, and the plaintiff was permitted to state that the defendant's books were balanced at the end of each month, and incidentally gave the different balances thus found for several months prior to July, 1887, no attempt being made to relate different items

(c) Balance is Principal.—The balance of an account stated is principal,¹ and bears interest from the date of the statement of the account.²

Money Secured by Deed not Recoverable upon an Account Stated.—An account stated is not so far a new cause of action that a previous deed or bond is merged in it; consequently, where a sum of money is secured by deed and a balance is struck ascertaining how much is due thereon, and the obligor admits the correctness of the account stated and promises payment, an action will not lie upon the accounting and promise, but the action must be brought on the security.³ But a sealed instrument executed upon the paper upon which a statement of accounts has been made, acknowledging the correctness and completeness of the accounts and containing an agreement as to the cancellation of securities, does not merge the mutual simple demands, nor prevent a recovery upon the account stated.⁴

constituting the July balance, but the plaintiff's testimony tending directly to support its correctness, it was held that although the prior balances need not be mentioned, the defendant could not contend that the plaintiff was permitted to enumerate specific items of which he had received no sufficient notice. Ohio Creek Anthracite Coal Co. v. Hinds, 15 Colo. 175.

Original Accounts as Evidence.—Original accounts may be introduced to prove previous dealings between the parties. Albrecht v. Gies, 33 Mich. 389; Jacksonville, etc., R. Co. v. Warriner (Fla., 1895), 16 So. Rep. 898.

Whether Suit can be Maintained on Original Items.—It has been held that even after an account stated, suit may be maintained upon the original items, and that it is not necessary to declare specifically upon the account stated. Cross v. Moore, 23 Vt. 482. And this seems the general doctrine where the account consists of items on one side only or of a single item which the debtor acknowledges and promises to pay. See Milward v. Ingram, 2 Mod. 43; Ashby v. James, 11 M. & W. 542; Buxton v. Edwards, 134 Mass. 578.

Where, however, the accounting is founded on mutual or cross demands which are set off against one another and a balance struck, the weight of authority seems to show that the settlement of accounts is a good plea to a suit upon the original items, although the authorities differ as to the proper form of the plea. Milward v. Ingram, 2 Mod. 43; Callander v. Howard, 10 C. B. 290, 70 E. C. L. 290; Richardson v. Rickman, stated 5 T. R. 517; Smith v. Page, 15 M. & W. 683; Rand v. Wright, 129 Mass. 50; Melville v. Carpenter, 11 U. C. Q. B. 132. See Beattie v. Hatch, 12 U. C. Q. B. 195; Comyns Dig., "Pleader," 2 G. 11.

The reason of the cases allowing the plea when in proper form is, that where there are mutual demands the accounting is a payment by set-off of the mutual demands whence a new consideration arises for the promise to pay the balance. See supra, this title, Consideration.

Where the parties meet and liquidate a disputed claim by a compromise, the only remedy is upon the account so stated. Hanley v. Noyes, 35 Minn. 174.

Bringing an Action on Original Accounts Conclusively.—Where the party brings suit upon an open account and relies exclusively upon it, thereby abandoning or repudiating the settlement, he cannot afterwards resort to the settlement to enlarge his recovery. Rowell v. Marcy, 47 Vt. 627. See Northern Line Packet Co. v. Platt, 22 Minn. 413.

1. Balance of Account Stated is Principal.—Marye v. Strouse, 6 Sawy. (U. S.) 204; Orr v. Hopkins, 3 N. Mex. 45; Hawkins v. Long, 74 N. Car. 781; McClelland v. West, 70 Pa. St. 183; Hodge v. Manley, 25 Vt. 210, 40 Am. Dec. 253.

2. Interest on Balance.—Haight v. McVeagh, 69 Ill. 624; Coughlin v. Gutta Percha, etc., Co., 33 Ill. App. 71; Case v. Hotchkiss, 1 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 324; McClelland v. West, 70 Pa. St. 183.

This although, at the time of the settlement, interest was included in the balance. McClelland v. West, 70 Pa. St. 183.

3. Middleditch v. Ellis, 2 Exch. 623; Young v. Hill, 67 N. Y. 162, 23 Am. Rep. 99; Gilson v. Stewart, 7 Watts (Pa.) 100. Compare Danforth v. Schoharie, etc., Turnpike Road, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 227.

Blended with Other Matters.—But if other matters of account between the parties are blended with the settlement of that which arose out of specialty, a recovery may be had upon an account stated. Foster v. Allanson, 2 T. R. 479; Gilson v. Stewart, 7 Watts (Pa.) 100. But see Moravia v. Levy, 2 T. R. 483, note; Jaques v. Hulit, 16 N. J. L. 38, to the effect that a recovery may be had upon an account stated, although the balance, if any, arose upon a transaction respecting which the parties had entered into a covenant by deed.

Estoppel by Deed.—Where payments have been made upon the purchase money and certain lands conveyed to the defendant by a deed reciting the receipt of the consideration, the plaintiff cannot recover the balance of the consideration still due upon an account stated, because he is estopped by the receipt of the deed. Sparling v. Savage, 25 U. C. Q. B. 259. See M'Allister v. Day, 4 Allen (New Bruns.) 37.

4. Hoyt v. Wilkinson, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 31. In this case it was said per curiam: "We think there is nothing in the contract under seal which should prevent the plaintiffs from maintaining assumpsit. It is not a contract to pay money; it is a release of mutual de-

(2) As Payment.—When an account is stated involving mutual or cross demands, and the demands on one side are set off against the demands on the other, this is considered as an actual part payment.¹

(3) How Far Conclusive.—(a) Generally.—An account stated is not in general conclusive. Its effect is to establish prima facie the accuracy and correctness of the items,² and it seems that the strength of the presumption of correctness remains, except those enumerated, which remain just as if there had been no release. A specialty is not substituted for the simple contract. The intestate and the defendant agree, that whenever this account shall be balanced, then and at such time all mortgages, bills of goods, or any other property, and notes of hand which either party holds against the other, shall be cancelled. This is precise. When the account shall be balanced, the securities shall be given up, but the instrument is not a contract to pay the balance; it does not merge the original demands. But another effect may be given to this contract. It is an admission of the existence of the demands enumerated; it is like any other acknowledgment of a debt. It supports the allegation of an insimul computassent.³

Such a mutual account has been said to be "equivalent to a payment by one, and a repayment by the other party." Parke, B., in Pott v. Clegg, 16 M. & W. 327.

2. Account Stated in General not Conclusive.—Perkins v. Hart, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 237; St. Louis Lager Beer Bottling Co. v. Colorado Nat. Bank, 8 Colo. 70; Gruby v. Smith, 13 Ill. App. 43; Hodge v. Boynton, 16 Ill. App. 524; Bouslog v. Garrett, 39 Ind. 338; Clark v. Marbourg, 33 Kan. 471; Wharton v. Anderson, 28 Minn. 301; McKinster v. Hitchcock, 19 Neb. 100; Vanderveer v. Statesir, 39 N. J. L. 593; Barker v. Hoff, 52 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 382; Stenton v. Jerome, 54 N. Y. 480; Clark v. Mechanics' Nat. Bank, 11 Daly (N. Y.) 239; Sampson v. Freedman, 1 Silv. (N. Y. Ct. App.) 128; Tennent v. Dewees, 7 Pa. St. 305; Carrere v. Whaley, 17 S. Car. 595; McKay v. Overton, 65 Tex. 82; Jefferson County v. Jones, 19 Wis. 51.

How Far Conclusive on Person Rendering Account.—In Schettler v. Smith, 34 N. Y. Super. Ct. 17, it is sought to distinguish between the binding effect of an account stated on the party rendering it and on the party assenting thereto. In this case Monell, J., said: "The principle upon which an account stated is made conclusive against the party who receives it is, that if he omits to object he is deemed to acquiesce in its correctness, and hence he is estopped from afterwards questioning its accuracy. But the principle does not apply to the party who furnishes the account. As to him, it contains certain admissions, and is generally regarded to be correct, but it is, nevertheless, open to explanation for any omissions or mistakes."

Guarantor of Balance of Account.—One who guarantees the payment of a balance due upon an account stated is as much bound as if he were a party to the account, and no greater latitude will be allowed to him in opening the account than if he were an original party. Bullock v. Boyd, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 293, 1 Hoffm. Ch. (N. Y.) 294.

When Account Stated Conclusive—Estoppel.—An account stated may, however, become conclusive upon the principle of estoppel in pais when some act has been done or forbore in consequence thereof and in reliance thereon, which would put the party claiming the benefit of it in a worse condition than if no accounting had been had. So, also, where, in case of mutual compromise, it is founded upon a new and independent consideration. Wharton v. Anderson, 28 Minn. 301. See also Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Snelling, 59 Tex. 116; Comer v. Mackey, 73 Hun 236.

Where a balance was struck by parties in respect to certain matters, after a hearing before referees had commenced, and was reported to the referees and entered by them on their minutes, it was held conclusive as an admission in the cause and could not be opened. Clark v. Fairchild, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 576. In this case the court by Cowen, J., said: "The defendant's counsel relies on the law as unquestionable, that you may always prove a mistake in accounting. And I do not deny that this is correct as a general rule. But there are whole classes of exceptions; and the settlement in question plainly belongs to one of them. * * * The settlement was conclusive. In the first place it was conclusive as being an admission in the course of the cause for the purpose of superseding all proof in respect to the general account, and every part of it. Being made with that intent, its conclusive effect is perfectly well established by authority, even though it had been made out of court. Davies v. Burton, 4 C. & P. 166, 19 E. C. L. 324; Phil. Ev. 278; 8th Lond. ed. 1 Phil. Ev. 105, from 7th Lond. ed., and notes by Cowen and Hill, note 192, p. 200. A fortiori, where the admission is in open court. The reason, says Phillips, is that a court of justice has been induced, on the faith of the admission, to adopt a particular course of proceeding. Phil. Ev. 8th ed. ut supra, et vide 7th ed. and notes, ut supra. The same books at the same places present and illustrate an additional ground, viz.: 'Where other persons have, on the faith of the representations, been led to alter their condition.' 8th ed. ut supra. Here the plaintiff had of course been led to avoid all preparation by way of proof depends to some extent upon the circumstances of the case.¹

(b) Notes for Balance Settled.—Where upon an accounting a party has given a note for the balance, or has allowed as an item of the account a note previously given by him, he cannot afterwards set up as a defense to the note matters fully within his knowledge at the time of the settlement,² nor, in the absence of fraud or mistake, claim a partial failure of consideration,³ and the burden is upon him to establish such fraud or mistake.⁴

on the point settled, but now proposed to be contested. It would have looked much fairer, though I do not admit the offer would then have been admissible, at least to have given the plaintiff previous notice of the new move. Again, the settlement was in the nature of a contract in consideration of the plaintiff's assignment; yet it was claimed to throw it open without even relinquishing this."

The mere fact of the knowledge, at the time of the rendering of the account, of the truth of the matters which are set up to defeat an account, does not create an estoppel. Baxter v. Waite, 2 Wash. Ter. 238.

Waiving Statement of Accounts.—Although parties may have agreed upon a statement of accounts, they may by mutual consent waive this, and agree to a reopening and restatement thereof. Horn v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 37 Minn. 375.

Agreement Reserving Items.—After a settlement of an account between the parties and the giving of a note for the balance, it was agreed that if a certain shipment of lumber yet to arrive, which was included in the settlement, should prove deficient, the defendant should make good the deficiency. It was held that this agreement, being subsequent to the settlement, although at the same interview, was not merged in it, and the lumber proving deficient a recovery was had against the defendant upon the agreement. Smith v. Holland, 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 333. See supra, Scope of Matters Covered.

Written Acknowledgment of Correctness.—A written acknowledgment of the correctness of an account will not estop the signer as against parties having notice of defects. Higham v. Harris, 108 Ind. 246.

Agreement as to Conclusiveness of Account Stated.—Where, upon the statement of an account, the parties entered into an agreement reciting that errors of undercharging or overcharging might be discovered in the account, and stipulated that errors might be corrected notwithstanding a bond and mortgage given for the balance found due, it was held that the parties thereby determined for themselves the extent of their own rights in re-examining the account; that their rights rested entirely upon this agreement; that no charges or credits could be introduced, but that errors might be shown and items varied in amount or totally rejected. Troup v. Haight, Hopk. Ch. (N. Y.) 239.

Formerly Considered Conclusive.—Formerly, the stating of an account was considered so deliberate an act as to be conclusive of the matters included therein. Trueman v. Hurst, 1 T. R. 40; Gruby v. Smith, 13 Ill. App. 43.

1. Strength of Presumption as to Correctness Dependent upon Circumstances.—In Lockwood v. Thorne, 18 N. Y. 285, Selden, J., said: "An account stated or settled is a mere admission that the amount is correct. It is not an estoppel. The account is still open to impeachment for mistakes or errors. Its effect is to establish prima facie the accuracy of the items without other proof, and the party seeking to impeach it is bound to show affirmatively the mistake or error alleged. The force of the admission, and the strength of the evidence which will be necessary to overcome it, will depend upon the circumstances of the case. An account stated which is shown to have been examined by both parties and expressly assented to or signed by them would afford stronger evidence of the correctness of its items than if it merely appeared that it had been delivered to the party or sent by mail and acquiesced in for a sufficient length of time to entitle it to be considered as an account stated." See also infra, this title, Opening Settled or Stated Account.

2. Party Setting up Matters within his Knowledge at Time of Settlement.—Where a master has credited his employee with full time, and settled upon that basis, he cannot afterwards in an action upon a promissory note given to the employee, such note having been an item in the settlement of accounts which took place several months after the note was given, claim a set-off on the ground of loss of time on the part of the employee by reason of sickness. Prussing Vinegar Co. v. Meyer, 26 Ill. App. 564.

Where a debtor by a promissory note and his creditor meet and have an accounting and settlement, and the debtor gives a new note for the balance due in renewal of the old note, the debtor cannot, when sued upon the renewed note, without alleging fraud or mistake, set up in a plea of payment alleged credits which ought to have been made on the first note, and which the facts show must have been entirely within his knowledge at the time of the settlement. Turner v. Pearson, 93 Ga. 515.

3. Claiming Partial Failure of Consideration in Absence of Fraud or Mistake.—Leighton v. Grant, 20 Minn. 345; Pickel v. St. Louis Chamber of Commerce Assoc., 80 Mo. 65; Robinson v. Dawson, 2 W. N. C. (Pa.) 185.

4. Burden to Show Fraud or Mistake.—Abraham v. McCurdy (Miss., 1894), 15 So. Rep. 137.

III. IMPEACHING SETTLED OR STATED ACCOUNTS—1. Generally.—Settled or stated accounts cannot be opened or corrected except on the ground of fraud, mistake, omission, accident, or undue advantage,¹ and the burden is on the

As to what amounts to fraud and mistake see, generally, the titles FRAUD; MISTAKE.

Accounts between Partners.—Accounts stated or settled between partners are conclusive except so far as they impeach for fraud or mistake. Gage v. Parmelee, 87 Ill. 329; Silver v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 5 Mo. App. 381, 72 Mo. 194; Wahl v. Barnum, 116 N. Y. 87. See the title PARTNERSHIP.

What Accounts Equity will Open or Correct.—Equity will not open a stated account for fraud or error unless it be such an account as falls within the equity jurisdiction. Dickenson v. Lewis, 34 Ala. 634. See the title ACCOUNTS AND ACCOUNTING, 1 Encyc. Pl. & Pr. 93.

Negligence in Detecting Errors.—A stated account will not be opened where it appears that the plaintiff has been guilty of negli-party seeking to impeach the account to prove the existence of such fraud, mistake, or the like.¹ Even where any of these elements are shown to exist, the gence in detecting the errors which he claims to have discovered. Bruen v. Hone, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 586; Paulling v. Creagh, 54 Ala. 646; Philips v. Belden, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 1.

Where the Mistakes are the Direct Result of Gross Negligence on the part of the party making them, equity may refuse to relieve against them. Cannon v. Sanford, 20 Mo. App. 590.

An Omission to Read an Account rendered does not qualify its effect. Weber v. Bridgman (Supreme Ct.), 12 N. Y. St. Rep. 622.

Accounts Settled with Knowledge.—Where an account is settled by the parties and there is no unfairness, and all the facts are equally known to both parties, their adjustment is final and conclusive. Hager v. Thomson, 1 Black (U. S.) 80; Gage v. Parmelee, 87 Ill. 329; Harrison v. Dewey, 46 Mich. 173; Rutty v. Person, 52 N. Y. Super. Ct. 329. See Harley v. Eleventh Ward Bank, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 476; Kilpatrick v. Henson, 81 Ala. 464.

Fraud.—But a party is not prevented by silent assent to an account rendered, from setting up fraud to defeat an action thereon, though the fraud was known to him when the account was rendered. Baxter v. Waite, 2 Wash. Ter. 237.

Mistake in Law.—A mistake in law is no ground for opening a settled account. Scioto County v. Gherky, Wright (Ohio) 493. But otherwise, apparently, where the mistake is mutual. See Daniell v. Sinclair, L. R. 6 App. Cas. 181; see also the title MISTAKE.

Simple Accounts.—Where an account, consisting of few and simple items concerning which the complainant had knowledge or means of easily obtaining it, is stated and settled by giving independent security, the courts are much more reluctant to disturb it than where the account is complicated and consists of many items as to which the complainant had not such particular means of knowledge; especially where complaint of errors and mistakes is made for the first time after the death of one of the parties. Paulling v. Creagh, 54 Ala. 646.

Effect of Release.—If a settled account is impeached, a release executed in consideration of the settlement of the account will not prevent the courts from looking into the settlement; and the release in such a case is entitled to no greater force in a court of equity than the settlement upon which it was given. Kelsey v. Hobby, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 269; Pritt v. Clay, 6 Beav. 503. See Gist v. Gist, Bailey Eq. (S. Car.) 346.

Effect of Receipt.—A receipt given upon a settlement of accounts will not render the settlement conclusive. Fuller v. Crittenden, 9 Conn. 406, 23 Am. Dec. 364; McDougall v. Cooper, 31 N. Y. 498; McCrae v. Hollis, 4 Desaus. (S. Car.) 122; Ingraham v. Lukens, 30 S. Car. 616 (mem.). See the title RECEIPTS.

Agreement not to Open after Certain Period.—Even when there is an agreement that closed accounts shall not be opened after the death of the parties, or after the expiration of a fixed period, a court of equity will open and restate the accounts for fraud or great danger of fraud; and in case of such an agreement, even after the death of the parties, or after a long acquiescence, a settlement will be opened and an account restated for an important error. Peteet v. Crawford, 51 Miss. 43.

Express Promise to Pay Balance.—Where there is an actual express promise to pay a balance of accounts, founded upon a good consideration, and the only issue is the existence of the promise, it cannot be avoided except by proof that the promise was induced by fraud. Hawley v. Harran, 79 Wis. 379.

Fraud or Error Discovered after Action Brought.—Fraud or error discovered after action brought may be set up to defeat an action upon a stated account. Baxter v. Waite, 2 Wash. Ter. 240.

Wisconsin.—Hoyt v. McLaughlin, 52 Wis. 280.

In Chappedelaine v. Dechenaux, 4 Cranch (U. S.) 306, Marshall, C. J., said: "The whole labor of proof lies upon the party objecting to the account, and errors which he does not plainly establish cannot be supposed to exist."

It requires evidence to overcome an account stated, and where the balance has been paid it requires stronger evidence to overcome the settlement than where the balance is simply agreed upon. Nolte v. Leary, 14 Mo. App. 598. See 1 Story Eq. Jur., § 527.

courts will not readily set aside a settlement or statement presumably made by the parties after an examination of the state of their mutual dealings, and where the error or other taint does not affect the whole transaction, they will merely allow the account to be surcharged or falsified.¹

Impeaching Accounts Collaterally.—The right to show that settled or stated accounts are vitiated by fraud or mistake is not confined to a party bringing an action to set aside such statement or settlement.²

1. Settled Accounts Opened with Reluctance.—1 Story Eq. Jur., § 523; Roberts v. Totten, 13 Ark. 609.

In Vernon v. Vawdry, 2 Atk. 119, it is declared that "if there are only mistakes and omissions in a stated account, the party objecting shall be allowed no more than to surcharge and falsify. But if it is apparent to the court that there has been fraud and imposition, the decree must be that the whole shall be opened, notwithstanding it was a stated account of twenty-three years' standing, and he who was guilty of the fraud was dead."

It is not the policy of the law to disturb settlements made with deliberation and with tolerable fairness, more particularly where they have been acquiesced in for two or three years. Wilde v. Jenkins, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 481; Smith v. Marvin, 27 N. Y. 137; Fraser v. Hext, 2 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 250; Pratt v. Weyman, 1 McCord Eq. (S. Car.) 156; Love v. White, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 210.

The rule applies with greater force where vouchers have been delivered up and destroyed. Brown v. Rowles, 21 Md. 21, 1 Story Eq. Jur., § 527.

In Chappelaine v. Dechenaux, 4 Cranch (U. S.) 306, Marshall, C. J., said: "No practice could be more dangerous than that of opening accounts which the parties themselves have adjusted, on suggestion supported by doubtful or by only probable testimony. But if palpable errors be shown, errors which cannot be misunderstood, the settlement must so far be considered as made upon absolute mistake or imposition, and ought not to be obligatory on the injured party or his representatives, because such items cannot be supposed to have received his assent."

Immaterial Error in Approximate Settlement.—Where the parties settle mutual accounts, not upon an exact investigation of all the items involved, but by adopting a basis which they believe in the main just, and intending to waive and release all accidental errors which might occur, such a settlement will be binding and cannot be attacked by showing a merely trivial error. Hamilton Woollen Co. v. Goodrich, 6 Allen (Mass.) 191. See Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 212.

Accounts Settled and Security Given for Balance.—In Drew v. Power, 1 Sch. & Lef. 182, Lord Redesdale said: "One rule material to observe in all cases of account is, that where there has been a settlement of accounts, either the account has been signed or a security taken from the footing of the account, a court of equity does not open that transaction and throw it again between the parties as if no such transaction had happened, unless the evidence which is produced (and that evidence founded on charges in the bill) shows the whole transaction to be so iniquitous that it ought not to be brought forward at all to affect the parties so to be bound. If the account impeached be a settled account, or if an instrument has been executed upon the foot of it, the court expects that the errors should be specified in a bill and proved as specified; otherwise it would be easy to overthrow the fairest account and those settled in the most solemn manner, when there happens to be any complication in their nature." See also Paulling v. Creagh, 54 Ala. 546; Pickel v. St. Louis Chamber of Commerce Assoc., 10 Mo. App. 191.

Settled Accounts.—In cases of settled accounts, a court of equity will not generally open the account, but will, at most, only grant leave to surcharge and falsify, except in cases of apparent fraud. 1 Story Eq. Jur., § 527; White v. Walker, 5 Fla. 478; Phillips v. Belden, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 1; Smith v. Ogilvie (Supreme Ct.), 5 N. Y. Supp. 382; Ruffner v. Hewitt, 7 W. Va. 585; Miller v. Chippewa County, 58 Wis. 630.

2. Upon an inquiry to ascertain damages as on default, a written agreement by the defendant made after suit brought, to the effect that the amount owing was a sum stated or offered in evidence, it was held that the defendant should have been allowed to show that he signed the paper under a mistake of facts in consequence of plaintiff's misrepresentations at a time when he could not personally inspect the property to which the agreement related, because it was overflowed with water, and that he gave notice as soon as the facts were discovered. Dewey v. Sloan, 11 Cinc. L. Bull. (Ohio) 102.

But it has been held that where the plaintiff brings assumpsit for work and labor, and the defendant pleads a stated account and payment thereon, the plaintiff cannot show mistakes in the settlement, and that this can only be done in an action brought to surcharge and falsify. Roach v. Gilmer, 3 Utah 389.

Recovery for Items not Included.—An item omitted in an account may be afterwards recovered. Pavie v. Noyrel, 5 Martin N. S. (La.) 92.

An action at law will lie to recover a balance found to be due upon the correction of a mistake in the settlement, and such a recovery may be had on showing a mistake apparent upon the face of the account. Hanson v. Jones, 20 Mo. App. 595; Jaques v. Hulit, 16 N. J. L. 38; Anthony v. Day, 52 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 35.

2. Opening Accounts De Novo.—In cases of gross fraud, imposition, mistake, or error, tainting the entire transaction, courts will allow the whole account to be opened and examined.¹ Accounts stated between parties standing in confidential relations toward one another, as attorney and client, will be opened more readily than others.²

3. Surcharging and Falsifying—a. MEANING OF THE TERMS.—The terms surcharge and falsify have a peculiar meaning in the vocabulary of courts of equity. To surcharge an account, is to show omitted credits; to falsify an account, is to show wrong chargés.³ The effect of surcharging and falsifying

Memoranda of accounts between the parties used as a basis in the settlement are admissible in evidence as a part of the res gesta in such a case. Madigan v. DeGraff, 17 Minn. 52.

1. Gross Fraud, Imposition, Mistake, or Error.—Vernon v. Vawdry, 2 Atk. 119; Vaughan v. Lloyd, cited in 5 Ves. Jr. 48; Piddock v. Brown, 3 P. Wms. 288; Wharton v. May, 5 Ves. Jr. 48; Paulling v. Creagh, 54 Ala. 646; Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 353; Goodwin v. U. S. Annuity, etc., Ins. Co., 24 Conn. 591; Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 212; Bullock v. Boyd, Hoffm. Ch. (N. Y.) 294; Rehill v. McTague, 114 Pa. St. 82, 60 Am. Rep. 341; Bankhead v. Alloway, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 56.

Fraud is a sufficient ground to open the whole account even after the lapse of considerable time. Liscomb v. Agate, 67 Hun (N. Y.) 388.

Upon a bill for an accounting, it appeared that the plaintiffs were the assignees in bankruptcy of a merchant, who, having been, for a long period, in straitened circumstances, borrowed money at various times from the defendant, a confidential clerk, giving bonds and securities for the sums borrowed, and agreeing to pay usurious interest. The defendant relied upon the fact that at various times during ten years the parties had come to settlements of their accounts, the merchant giving his bonds and securities for the balances found due upon the settlements. It was held that there being evidence not only of errors and omissions in the settlements, but of oppression and imposition and undue advantage taken of the merchant's necessities, the settlements should be entirely set aside and the whole accounts opened de novo. Barrow v. Rhineland, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 550.

Fraud not Essential—Substantial Errors.—In Williamson v. Barbour, 9 Ch. Div. 529, Sir George Jessel, M.R., said: "The practice of the court of chancery, which, of course, is the practice of the high court of justice, is to consider whether the accounts shall be opened, or whether there shall be liberty to surcharge and falsify; that is, if the court is of opinion that errors of sufficient number and sufficient magnitude are shown, it is not, as I understand it, necessary that the errors shown should amount to fraud. If they are sufficient in number and importance, whether they are errors caused by mistake, or errors caused by fraud, the court has a right to open the accounts." See also Clarke v. Tipping, 9 Beav. 284.

2. Parties in Fiduciary Relations.—Matthews v. Wallwyn, 4 Ves. Jr. 125; Newman v. Payne, 2 Ves. Jr. 199; Vaughan v. Lloyd, cited in 5 Ves. Jr. 48; Kennedy v. Broun, 13 C. B. N. S. 677, 106 E. C. L. 677; Williamson v. Barbour, 9 Ch. Div. 529; Gruby v. Smith, 13 Ill. App. 43; Hopkinson v. Jones, 28 Ill. App. 409; Sanchez v. Dickinson (Supreme Ct.), 47 N. Y. St. Rep. 203. See Raht v. Union Consol. Min. Co., 5 Lea (Tenn.) 23.

A court of equity will interfere and open a stated account between a principal and his agent, where it is shown that the principal is of a weak and confiding mind, and that undue advantage has been taken of him. Rembert v. Brown, 17 Ala. 667.

In Paulling v. Creagh, 54 Ala. 656, Brickell, C.J., said: "If a confidential relation exists between the parties, or the one is, by force of circumstances, peculiarly subject to imposition from the other, the transactions will be closely and jealously scrutinized, and settlements had between them whereby a balance is found due from the one reposing confidence, or subject to imposition, will be more readily opened than a settlement between those dealing with each other at arm's-length."

Ignorance of Party Acquiescing in Accounts Rendered.—Where an employer, intrusted by a servant with money to invest, rendered accounts to him from time to time, and one of such accounts rendered showed the balance due to the servant to be in notes of a certain bank, while another account, previously rendered, showing the same balance, did not state it to be in any particular currency, and it was proved that the servant could not read handwriting or sign his name, it was held that the servant would not be bound by the statement of the particular kind of currency in the account whose contents he did not know. Guenivet v. Perret, 18 La. Ann. 356.

3. "Surcharge" and "Falsify" Defined.—Pit v. Cholmondeley, 2 Ves. 565; Perkins v. Hart, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 256; 1 Story Eq. Jr., § 525. See Rehill v. McTague, 114 Pa. St. 82, 60 Am. Rep. 341.

In Pit v. Cholmondeley, 2 Ves. 565, Lord Hardwicke said: "The onus probandi is always on the party having that liberty [to surcharge and falsify]; for the court takes it as a stated account and establishes it. But if any of the parties can show an omission for which credit ought to be, that is a surcharge; or if anything is inserted that is a wrong charge, he is at liberty to show it, and that is falsification; but that must be by proof on his side."

leaves an account in full force, except as to errors or omissions shown.¹

b. WHEN LEAVE GRANTED.—When the fraud, omission, or mistake is not shown to taint the whole settlement, courts will give leave to surcharge and falsify as to the mistaken items only.² When leave has been granted to one party to surcharge and falsify, the other party will be allowed to set right mistakes in the account.³

4. Lapse of Time.—Courts will not open settlements of accounts which have been acquiesced in for a great length of time,⁴ except in the case of actual

Judge Story (1 Story Eq. Jur., § 525) defined the terms as follows: "In the sense of courts of equity, these words are used in contradistinction to each other. A surcharge is appropriately applied to the balance of the whole account, and supposes credits to be omitted which ought to be allowed; a falsification applies to some item in the debits, and supposes that the item is wholly false, or in some part erroneous." This definition has been approvingly quoted in Bruen v. Hone, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 592; Bailey v. Westcott, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 525. See also Philips v. Belden, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 23.

1. Effect of Surcharging and Falsifying.—Pit v. Cholmondeley, 2 Ves. 565; Perkins v. Hart, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 237; Bruen v. Hone, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 586; Bailey v. Westcott, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 525; Rehill v. McTague, 114 Pa. St. 82, 60 Am. Rep. 341.

Party may not Go beyond Items of Bill.—A party seeking to surcharge and falsify cannot go beyond the items and charges of his bill. Drew v. Power, 1 Sch. & Lef. 182; Gover v. Hall, 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 43; Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 353; Consequa v. Fanning, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 587, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 511.

Consenting to Surcharge and Falsify.—When a party consents to a reference to surcharge and falsify, he waives a right to impeach the whole account on the ground of undue influence. Compton v. Culberson, 2 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 93.

2. When the Fraud, Mistake, etc., do not Taint Entire Settlement.—1 Story Eq. Jur., § 523; Gover v. Hall, 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 43; Bullock v. Boyd, 1 Hoffm. Ch. (N. Y.) 294; Carpenter v. Kent, 101 N. Y. 591; Berdell v. Allen (Super. Ct.), 3 N. Y. St. Rep. 523; Ract v. Duviard-Dime (Supreme Ct.), 21 N. Y. St. Rep. 736; Rehill v. McTague, 114 Pa. St. 82, 60 Am. Rep. 341; Bankhead v. Alloway, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 56. See Boston, etc., R. Corp. v. Nashua, etc., R. Corp., 157 Mass. 258.

Where it is not necessary to open the whole account upon proof of unfairness, fraud, or mistake, the mistake must be corrected and the rights of the parties readjusted as to such mistake. Conville v. Shook (N. Y., 1895), 39 N. E. Rep. 405.

After a settlement of accounts, if it be shown that a considerable sum which should have been charged to the defendant has been omitted from the account by mistake, an action will lie to correct the mistake and recover the item omitted. McDougall v. Cooper, 31 N. Y. 498.

Error must be Clearly Shown.—If a party can show an error in a settled account, leave will be granted to surcharge and falsify, but the error must be clearly shown. Redman v. Green, 3 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 54. See Mayo v. Bosson, 6 Ohio 525.

Mere Error.—Mere errors, if not fraudulent, where the other party had ample opportunities to examine the account-books of the party making them, and of making full inquiries of the latter, are no ground for opening an account. Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 212. So a clerical error, not affecting the result of a settlement, is no ground for opening an account. Wilson v. Frisbie, 57 Ga. 269.

Mistake as to One Item.—A mistake as to one item does not authorize the opening of the accounts as to other items. Carpenter v. Kent, 101 N. Y. 591.

Trifling Errors in Calculation of Interest.—Where an account between parties is stated, and, upon the basis of this statement, certain real estate is transferred at a fixed value in part discharge of the balance, an account will not, in the absence of fraud, be opened for trifling errors in the calculation of interest. Maguire v. Filley, 9 Mo. App. 581.

Accounts before a Surrogate.—Where a party seeks to open a settled account before a surrogate, he should show such a case as would have enabled him to file a bill in equity to surcharge and falsify. Valentine v. Valentine, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 430.

fraud;¹ yet after the lapse of considerable time, if the transaction is not barred by the statute of limitations and errors of sufficient importance exist, leave may be granted to surcharge and falsify.² Even when tainted with fraud an account stated becomes conclusive, unless it is attacked within a certain period after the discovery of the fraud.³

See also the titles LACHES; LIMITATIONS OF ACTIONS, as to how far courts of equity will act upon, or upon the analogy of, the statute of limitations.

Not Claiming within Prescribed Period against Testator's Estate.—The plaintiffs sued defendants for a balance found due to their testator upon a settlement of accounts with him, and the defendants pleaded mistake in the settlement, upon which the balance should have been in their favor. It was held that they were concluded by the settlement and by not having made their claim against the testator's estate within the period limited by the court of probate for exhibiting claims. Cogswell v. Whittlesey, 1 Root (Conn.) 384.

Account Formerly Adjudicated.—Where no leave was given to surcharge and falsify an account which had been settled almost twenty years, and there were circumstances which showed that the account had already been adjudicated in a former suit by the court, the master was right in refusing to open the account. Dexter v. Arnold, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 108.

Evidence Destroyed.—Courts are especially reluctant to open long-settled accounts after the evidence of the original transaction has been destroyed. George v. Johnson, 45 N. H. 456; Bruen v. Hone, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 586; Emmons v. Stahlnecker, 11 Pa. St. 366.

Not Opened after Six Years.—Generally, courts of equity will not open an account after six years of delay unaccounted for. Tatam v. Williams, 3 Hare 347; George v. Johnson, 45 N. H. 456; Randel v. Ely, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 270.

Doubtful or even Probable Testimony is not sufficient to open a long-settled account in the absence of any proof of fraud or undue influence. Wilde v. Jenkins, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 481; Lockwood v. Thorne, 11 N. Y. 170, 42 Am. Dec. 81. Upon this principle the testimony of a witness as to admissions made by the defendant many years after the settlement and many years before the trial, no memoranda of the admissions having been made at the time, and the testimony not being corroborated or complete, is insufficient to open an account. McIntyre v. Warren, 3 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 99.

1. Actual Fraud.—Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. (U. S.) 503; Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 212; Kingsley v. Melcher, 56 Hun (N. Y.) 547; Pratt v. Weyman, 1 McCord Eq. (S. Car.) 156.

Where there has been fraud committed by either party, a court of equity will open and re-examine accounts after any length of time, even though the person committing the fraud is dead. Pratt v. Weyman, 1 McCord Eq. (S. Car.) 156.

Probate Accounts.—Where probate accounts which have been settled for a long time are sought to be opened as being fraudulent, fraud must be specifically alleged and proved. Badger v. Badger, 2 Cliff. (U. S.) 137.

2. Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 212; Peteet v. Crawford, 51 Miss. 43; Ogden v. Astor, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 311.

In Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 212, it appeared that a series of complicated accounts extending over many years had been settled by general composition. The defendant offered a statement showing a balance in favor of the plaintiff's intestate of $64,688.72 as a basis for a settlement. The predecessors of the plaintiff in the office of administrators agreed to receive $60,000 in discharge of the whole account, and gave a receipt in full. After nearly twenty years had elapsed a re-examination of the defendant's books showed that the balance due the plaintiff should have been $68,276. It was held that although the whole account would not be opened, yet, there being a promise on the part of the defendant which took the case out of the statute of limitations, leave would be granted to surcharge and falsify; and that though the settlement had been made on the basis of a compromise, the presumption was violent that, had the true balance been known, the sum offered would have been thought too large a deduction for the contingencies supposed to exist.

Where a great length of time has elapsed, for instance, twenty years, proof of error must be clear and satisfactory to induce the court to grant leave to surcharge and falsify. Bruce v. Child, 4 Hawks. (N. Car.) 372.

3. Stearns v. Page, 7 How. (U. S.) 819; Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 212; Kingsley v. Melcher, 56 Hun (N. Y.) 547.

A stated account will not be opened on the ground of fraud after six years, unless the fraud was not discovered, and with reasonable diligence could not have been discovered, within that time. Frauds apparent upon the face of the account, or which a slight examination would have disclosed, are not sufficient. Ogden v. Astor, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 311.

4. Opening Accounts Stated for Usury.—Bosanquett v. Dashwood, Cas. temp. Tal. 38; Lee v. Reed, 4 Dana (Ky.) 109; Bullock v. Boyd, Hoffm. Ch. (N. Y.) 294; Bullard v. Raynor, 30 N. Y. 197.

In Bosanquett v. Dashwood, Cas. temp.

ing, without objection, an account containing usurious items will not estop the debtor from pleading the usury when sued thereon.¹

Tal. 38, a bill for an accounting was filed by the assignees of a bankrupt charging the defendant's testator with lending on usury upon agreements made and repeated from 1710 to 1724. The defendant insisted that the money having been long paid and the account settled by the consent of all the parties, the transaction could not be inquired into at that time; but it being a case of apparent extortion and oppression, the accounts were ordered opened and the demand reduced to moneys lent with lawful interest.

Where accounts are rendered and the balance paid in cash, they cannot be opened to inquire into the correctness of charges for commissions and interest as usurious. Flower v. Millaudon, 19 La. 185.

Compound Interest.—An agreement to pay future compound interest cannot be enforced as an account stated. Young v. Hill, 67 N. Y. 162, 23 Am. Rep. 99.

1. Hickman's Succession, 13 La. Ann. 364.

But it has been held that an acquiescence for two years in such items would estop a party from objection. Smith v. Marvin, 27 N. Y. 137; Seymour v. Marvin, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 80. See Millaudon v. Arnaud, 4 La. 544; Poydras v. Turgeau, 14 La. 34.

Where a party has submitted accounts to arbitration and has acquiesced in and performed the award, his representatives cannot open the settlement on account of usury in the accounts. Radcliffe v. Wightman, 1 McCord Eq. (S. Car.) 408.

For other matters of SUBSTANTIVE LAW and EVIDENCE related to this subject, see the following titles in this work: ACCESSION; BOUNDARIES; ISLANDS; LAKES AND PONDS; WATERCOURSES.

I DEFINITION.—Accretion is the process of gradual and imperceptible increase of land, caused by the deposit of earth, sand, or sediment thereon by contiguous waters.¹

Accretions, or alluvion, is the result of this process.²

1. See Bouvier Law Dict.; Rapalje & Lawrence Law Dict.; 3 Washburn on Real Property (5th ed.) 451.

In Rex v. Yarborough, 3 B. & C. 91, accretion was defined as an increase by imperceptible degrees.

Accretion as a Source of Title.—“Accretion is more properly an incident to real property than a mode of acquisition of lands. But inasmuch as new property is thus acquired, the means or manner of acquisition may fitly be called a title.” Tiedeman on Real Property, § 685.

In Anderson's Law Dict., accretion is also regarded as a source of title, being defined as “a mode of acquiring title to realty, where portions of the soil are added by gradual deposit, through the operation of natural causes, to that already in possession of the owner.”

2. Alluvion Defined.—According to Angell on Watercourses (7th ed.), p. 49, “the rule of the common law, on the subject of alluvion, is the same as that of the civil law. The latter is thus translated: ‘That ground which a river has added to your estate by alluvion becomes your own, by the law of nations; and that is said to be alluvion which is added so gradually that no one can judge how much is added in each moment of time.’”

Alluvion, by the common law, is an addition made to land by the washing of the sea, a navigable river, or other stream, where the increase is so gradual in its progress that it cannot be perceived how much is added in any moment of time. Woolrych on the Law of Waters, marg. p. 29 et seq.; Warren v. Chambers, 25 Ark. 120, 4 Am. Rep. 24; Lovington v. St. Clair County, 64 Ill. 56, 16 Am. Rep. 517.

Of What Alluvion may Consist.—Alluvion comprises “the soil and various other things, such as marine and water plants, seaweeds, etc., which are washed up on the shore of a stream by the action of the water.” Tiedeman on Real Property, § 686.

Seaweed.—In Emans v. Turnbull, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 313, 3 Am. Dec. 427, it was held that seaweed thrown up by the sea may be considered as one of those marine increases arising by slow degrees; and, according to the rule of the common law, it belongs to

Navigability of the Waters.—Some writers have included in their definition of accretion, or alluvion, the adjectives "navigable" or "unnavigable" as modifying waters; but in considering this subject it is ordinarily a matter of indifference whether the contiguous waters be navigable or unnavigable, fresh or salt, or whether affected by tide or current;¹ the only instance in which the navigability of the body of water is of importance being when the existence or non-existence of this characteristic determines the ownership of the shores, bed, or bottom.²

Result of Combination of Natural and Artificial Causes.—It has been stated also by some writers that the accretions or alluvion must be the result of the natural action of the water.³ But the better view seems to be that the addition by way of alluvion may as well be due to the combined influence of natural and artificial causes.⁴

the owner of the soil. "The rule is," said Kent, C.J., delivering the opinion of the court, "that if the marine increase be by small and almost imperceptible degrees, it goes to the owner of the land; but if it be sudden and considerable, it belongs to the sovereign. 2 B. Com. 261; Hargrave Law Tracts 28."

Rights of Littoral Proprietor.—Though a littoral proprietor whose right terminates at ordinary high-water mark may be entitled to all accretions and land reclaimed from the sea by natural or artificial means, he has no exclusive right to seaweed cast upon the beach adjoining his premises, below ordinary high-water mark; he has, however, a right to seaweed cast by extraordinary floods, above ordinary high-water mark. Mather v. Chapman, 40 Conn. 382, 16 Am. Rep. 46. See also Church v. Meeker, 34 Conn. 432; Anthony v. Gifford, 2 Allen (Mass.) 550; Phillips v. Rhodes, 7 Met. (Mass.) 323.

The Code Napoleon declares that accumulations and increase of mud formed successively and imperceptibly on the soil bordering on a river or other stream are denominated alluvion. Alluvion is for the benefit of the proprietor of the shore, whether in respect of a river, a navigable stream, or one permitting floats or not. Book 2, Of Property, etc., § 566.

Such was the law of France before the Code Napoleon was adopted. 4 Nouv. Dic. de Brillon 278; Morgan v. Livingston, 6 Martin (La.) 19.

Spain.—And such was the law of Spain. Part III., tit. xxviii., law 26.

1. Immaterial whether the Water Navigable or not.—Rex v. Yarborough, 3 B. & C. 91; Nebraska v. Iowa, 143 U. S. 359; Hagan v. Campbell, 8 Port. (Ala.) 9, 33 Am. Dec. 267; Warren v. Chambers, 25 Ark. 120, 4 Am. Rep. 25; Lovington v. St. Clair County, 64 Ill. 56, 16 Am. Rep. 516; Denny v. Cotton, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 634, quoting 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) p. 137; Angell on Tide-Waters (1st ed.) 68; 3 Kent Com. (13th ed.) 428. It is immaterial whether the land which is increased by alluvion is upon navigable or unnavigable waters. The rule is the same in either case, the accretion belonging to the owner of the land. Warren v. Chambers, 25 Ark. 120, 4 Am. Rep. 25. In this case the court said: "But whether a river or other water is or is not navigable can in no way affect the right of the riparian proprietor to such additions as may be made by alluvion or dereliction. His right rests altogether on another and different foundation. The facts to be ascertained are the local situation of the land and the mode by which the increase has been added. If the land is contiguous to the water, and the addition is made slowly and insensibly, his title to such addition is complete."

In Lovington v. St. Clair County, 64 Ill. 56, 16 Am. Rep. 516, it is said: "The navigability of the stream, as the term is used at common law, has no applicability to this case. If commerce had been obstructed, or the public easement interrupted, or a question were to arise as to the ownership of the bed of the stream, then the inquiry as to whether the stream was navigable or not, in the sense of the common law, might be pertinent."

In England the same rule is applied to gradual accretion on the shores of fresh waters as in the case of such accretion on the shores of the sea. Rex v. Yarborough, 1 D. & C. 178.

2. Lovington v. St. Clair County, 64 Ill. 56, 16 Am. Rep. 516. And see Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324.

The Beds of Navigable Streams, as well as the Sea, belong to the public; and if, by the instantaneous casting up of sand or other substances, the water is thrown back and an addition made to the land, the sovereign may claim the accession, upon the ground that it was but a part of the bed of the river or sea, of which he was the proprietor. 3 Kent Com. (13th ed.) 428.

3. See Anderson Law Dict.; Bouvier Law Dict.; Rapalje & Lawrence Law Dict.

4. Natural and Artificial Causes.—Halsey v. McCormick, 18 N. Y. 150. In Lovington v. St. Clair County, 64 Ill. 56, 16 Am. Rep. 516, it is held that whether the deposit of alluvion is due to natural causes or to the artificial works of others, and without regard to the question whether the stream is navigable or not, the proprietor of lands bounded by a stream of water is entitled to all the accretions thereto. And see Atty.-Gen. v. Chambers, 5 Jur., N. S. 745, 4 De G. & J. 55.

Meaning of Terms "Imperceptible," "Imperceptible Increase."—There has been some conflict of authority as to the exact meaning of the word "imperceptible" which appears in the definition. It has generally been held that "imperceptible increase" means an increase so gradual and insensible that its progress in any one moment of time may not be perceived.¹ On the other hand, the position has been taken, less reasonably, that "imperceptible" refers to the final result of the accretion.²

II. PROPERTY IN ACCRETIONS—1. In General.—The general rule is that to the owner of the shore belong these imperceptible and insensible additions to his land,³ which, when once acquired, become in all respects a part of the origi-

In Godfrey v. Alton, 12 Ill. 29, 52 Am. Rep. 476, the public landing had been enlarged and extended into the river by both natural and artificial means; and the court held that the accretions attached to and formed a part of the landing. See also New Orleans v. U. S., 10 Pet. (U. S.) 662.

Pier Wrongfully Built.—In Steers v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 51, the plaintiff owned a lot in the city of B., bounded westerly by the water-line of the East river and southerly by the central line of a certain street, the latter terminating at the said water-line. A wharf had been built in front of his lot, extending to the centre of the said street, which the plaintiff maintained, receiving wharfage from all persons using the same. The city authorities built a pier at the end of the street, shutting off from the water that portion of the plaintiff's wharf in front of his half of the street. In an action to recover damages, it was held that the erection of the pier was a wrongful interference with the plaintiff's rights, and rendered the city liable; that the pier was to be considered as an accretion, and so much of it as was in front of his half of the street became his property. Compare 3 Washburn on Real Property (5th ed.) 451, citing Austin v. Rutland R. Co., 45 Vt. 215.

But where an Embankment has been Built by a railroad company in the bed of a river, in the lawful construction of its tracks, below the ordinary high-water mark, and the high-water mark is changed thereby to the further side of the embankment, the riparian owner cannot claim title to the last-named high-water mark on the ground that his boundary has been changed by accretion. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Porter, 72 Iowa 426.

Labor of Trespasser Enuring to Benefit of Riparian Proprietor.—In Hagan v. Campbell, 8 Port. (Ala.) 9, 33 Am. Dec. 267, the court seems to be of opinion, though admitting that a consideration of the question is uncalled for by the circumstances of the case, that if accretion is made impracticable, without the authority of government, by the labor of some third person excluding the water from its former limits, such third person, being a trespasser, should not be allowed to derive a profit, but he who has been deprived of an increase of the soil by natural causes should be allowed to enjoy what art has reclaimed.

1. Consideration of the Word "Imperceptible."—Rex v. Yarborough, 3 B. & C. 91; Warren v. Chambers, 25 Ark. 120, 4 Am. Rep. 24;

Thornton, J., in Lovington v. St. Clair County, 64 Ill. 56, 16 Am. Rep. 517; Woolrych on Law of Waters, marg. p. 29 et seq. This would appear to be the correct construction.

2. In Atty.-Gen. v. Chambers, 4 De G. & J. 71, it was held that the law of gradual accretion should be limited to the cases where the boundaries of the seashore and the adjoining land are so indistinguishable that it is impossible to discover the slow and gradual changes which are from time to time accruing, and where it is evident, at the end of a long period, that there has been a considerable gain from the shore, while yet the exact amount of it, from the want of some mark of the original boundary line, cannot be determined. The court concludes with this question: "But where the limits are clear and defined, and the exact space between these limits and the new high-water line can be clearly shown, although from day to day, or even from week to week, the progress of the accretion is not discernible, why should a rule be applied which is grounded upon a reason which has no existence in the particular case?"

In Spigener v. Cooner, 8 Rich. (S. Car.) 301, 64 Am. Dec. 755, O'Neill, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "There is, I think, no doubt of the proposition that in the case of mere alluvion, 'where the change is so gradual as not to be perceived in any one moment of time, the proprietor whose bank on the river is increased is entitled to the addition.' Angell on Watercourses (7th ed.), c. 2, § 53."

In the Institutes of Justinian, Liber II., tit. 1, § 20, it is said: "Moreover, the alluvial soil added by the river to your land becomes yours by the law of nations. Allu-vion is an imperceptible increase, and that is added by alluvion which is so gradual that no one can perceive how much is added in any one moment of time."

"Once a Riparian Proprietor, Always so; because accretions or newly formed ground belong to such proprietor jure gentium." Kraut v. Crawford, 18 Iowa 549, 87 Am. Dec. 416.

Owner of Lands Bounded by the Great Lakes.—In Banks v. Ogden, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 57, it was held that accretion by alluvion from Lake Michigan belonged to the proprietor of the land bounded by the lake.

Reason of the Rule.—In New Orleans v. U. S., 10 Pet. (U. S.) 662, it was said: "The question is well settled at common law, that the person whose land is bounded by a stream of water, which changes its course gradually by alluvial formations, shall still hold by the same boundary, including the accumulated soil. No other rule can be applied on just principles. Every proprietor whose land is thus bounded is subject to loss by the same means which may add to his territory; and as he is without remedy for his loss in this way, he cannot be held accountable for his gain." To the same effect see Saulet v. Shepherd, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 502; and St. Louis Public Schools v. Risley, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 110.

Bar Formed outside of One's Land.—In an action of trespass, the contention of the defendants was that at the time of the United States grant to the plaintiff's grantor, the land upon which the trespasses were alleged to have been committed was existing and susceptible of ownership, in the shape of a large bar just outside of the plaintiff's line. The court held that if, at the time of the United States grant, the land was in existence and capable of ownership, the plaintiff had no title, it not having been specifically conveyed; on the other hand, if it was not then in existence, but had been formed since the grant, by accretion, the plaintiff, as owner of the contiguous land, was entitled to the alluvion. Stephenson v. Goff, 10 Rob. (La.) 99, 43 Am. Dec. 17.

Flats.—Under an ancient statute relating to the subject of flats, and annexing them to the adjoining land, to the distance of one hundred rods from the shore, it was held that whatever increase happened from natural causes, or from a union of natural and artificial causes, within that distance, must be to the benefit of the owner of the upland, or of him who owned the flats to which the increase was attached. Adams v. Frothingham, 3 Mass. 352, 3 Am. Dec. 151.

Increase must be Imperceptible or Gradual.—To acquire title to land by alluvion, it is necessary that its increase should be imperceptible. Kraut v. Crawford, 18 Iowa 549, 87 Am. Dec. 414; Lovington v. St. Clair County, 64 Ill. 56, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 68, 16 Am. Rep. 517; Hopkins Academy v. Dickinson, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 551; Benson v. Morrow, 61 Mo. 352; *Cooley v. 17 Am. Rep. 270; Mulry v. Norton, 100 N. Y. 424, 53 Am. Rep. 206; Murry v. Sermon, 1 Hawks (N. Car.) 56.

In Murry v. Sermon, 1 Hawks (N. Car.) 56, the defendant in ejectment claimed title to the land in dispute, which was bounded by Mattamuskeet lake, under a patent dated in 1761. The plaintiff claimed under a grant of more recent date, covering lands between the defendant's lines and the lake. Both parties introduced evidence as to what had been actually run for the lines of the defendant's land; and the court below instructed the jury to find for the defendant, no matter whether the lake had receded or not, for in either case it remained his boundary. This was held to be erroneous, and a new trial was awarded, in order that the jury might find the fact whether the waters of the lake had receded gradually or imperceptibly, or suddenly and sensibly, from the land in controversy, because on that question, the court said, the rights of the parties depended.

Sudden Formation—Avulsion.—Where considerable quantities of soil are, by a sudden action of the water, taken from the land of one and deposited upon or against the land of another, they are called "avulsion." The title to such soil remains in the original owner, unless he fails to claim his right of ownership until the deposited soil has united with the soil of the other owner. Angell on Watercourses (7th ed.), § 60; 3 Washburn on Real Property (5th ed.) 453; Woodbury v. Short, 17 Vt. 387, 44 Am. Dec. 344.

Notwithstanding the fact that, owing to the swiftness of the current of the Missouri river and the softness of its banks, the changes of the latter are more rapid and extensive than on most other streams, the law of alluvion has been held to apply. Nebraska v. Iowa, 143 U. S. 359; Nebraska v. Iowa, 145 U. S. 519.

Gradual as Distinguished from Sudden Increase.—"The test of what is gradual, as distinguished from what is sudden, seems to be that, though witnesses are able to perceive from time to time that the land has encroached on the sea line, it is enough if it was done so that they could not perceive the progress at the time it was made." Angell on Tide-Waters (1st ed.) 71; St. Clair County v. Lovington, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 46.

As to what has been held alluvion and not avulsion, see Denny v. Cotton, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 634, quoting 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.), p. 137.

Urban and Rural Alluvion.—In Municipality No. 2 v. Orleans Cotton Press, 18 La. 122, 36 Am. Dec. 624, the contention was made by counsel that, under the Roman law, urban property holders were not entitled to the right to alluvion, as is the case in respect to rural property holders. The court held, however, that the jus alluvionis was as applicable to the one class of property owners as to the other. See also St. Louis v. Missouri R. Co., 114 Mo. 13.

Dower in Accretions.—The widow of the owner of the property to which there has been accretion is entitled to dower in such portion, whether the accretion took place during the possession of the husband or of an alienee. Lombard v. Kinzie, 73 Ill. 446; Gale v. Kinzie, 80 Ill. 132.

Legislation on the Subject of Accretions.—Accretion has been made the subject of legislative enactments in some of the states.

California.—By the civil code of this state, accretions to land belong to the owner of the land, whether situated on navigable or unnavigable waters. California Civil Code, § 6014.

Dakota.—See Civil Code, § 588, for a provision similar to that of California, just set forth above.

Georgia.—The Georgia Code, § 2228, lays down the same rule as the foregoing.

Louisiana.—The provision of the Louisiana Code, § 509, is different only in excluding from its application land resulting from derelictions of the sea. In this state it has also been held that alluvion which forms upon the shores of Lake Pontchartrain is not susceptible of private ownership; such alluvion does not, therefore, become the property of the owners of lots fronting on said lake. It is the accretion made by rivers and streams only that belongs to the proprietors of adjacent lands. Zeller v. Southern Yacht Club, 34 La. Ann. 837.

Maryland.—The statutes of this state are to the same effect. See Maryland Code 1878, art. 16, § 38.

1. Municipality No. 2 v. Orleans Cotton Press, 18 La. 122, 36 Am. Dec. 624; Kennedy v. Municipality No. 2, 10 La. Ann. 54; Gerrish v. Clough, 48 N. H. 9, 97 Am. Dec. 561, 2 Am. Rep. 165; Morgan v. Scott, 26 Pa. St. 51.

Future Accretions.—A party, however, as a riparian proprietor, cannot be protected in the matter of accretions to his land which are not in existence, and which may or may not exist in the future. Taylor v. Underhill, 40 Cal. 471.

In Municipality No. 2 v. Orleans Cotton Press, 18 La. 122, 36 Am. Dec. 624, it was decided that the right to future alluvial formation was a vested right inherent in the property, and an essential attribute of it, resulting from natural law, in consequence of the local situation of the land to which it attaches; and that it was an accessory to the principal estate or land which cities as well as individuals might acquire, jure alluvionis, as the owner of the front or riparian proprietor; and that the right was founded in justice arising from the risks to which the land was exposed, and from the burden of keeping up levees or embankments in front of the river to protect the estate.

Right of Lessee to Accretions.—A lessee of land bordering on a stream not navigable is entitled, at common law, to the accretions thereto caused by the receding of the stream, or a change in its current during his term. Such accretions will attach to and form a part of the grant, as under a deed of convey-with the benefit of the same rights as is the land to which accretion is made;¹ and this, as has been before stated, whether the accretions be due to natural causes alone or to a combination of both natural and artificial influences.²

Alluvion the Result of Encroachment.—The jus alluvionis would not apply, however, where the alluvion was the result of an encroachment or purpresture upon a public harbor.³

Public Use.—Where the banks of a river are subject to a public use, the accretions thereon will be subject to the same use;⁴ though the right of property in such accretions becomes vested in the owner of the bank upon which the alluvion is formed.⁵ If, by reason of the increase by alluvion, a portion of the

How Accretions are Affected by Lien on Original Tract.—When land on a navigable river is leased, mortgaged, or subject to any other lien, subsequent accretions thereto will come under the same burdens and liens. Cobb v. Lavalle, 89 Ill. 331, 31 Am. Rep. 91; Cruikshanks v. Wilmer, 93 Ky. 19. And see Rhoades v. Raymer, 6 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 68.

Statute of Limitations as Applicable to Accretions.—A riparian proprietor is entitled to the accretions made to his land by the river, and the statute of limitations in its application to such accretions relates back to the time when it began to run in favor of the riparian owner as to the main bank. The accretions, in becoming a part of the land to which they are joined, take the title and condition of that land just as it exists at the time of their formation. If the riparian owner is barred, or partially barred, by the statute of limitations as to the bank, he will be barred as to the accretions in like manner, although they may have been deposited but a year or a day. Campbell v. Laclede Gas Light Co., 84 Mo. 353.

Adverse Possession of Original Tract.—Where a disseisor enters upon riparian lands, which he encloses and holds by adverse possession, the title to the shore includes title to the accretions; it is unnecessary that he should extend his fence to keep pace with the formation of the alluvion. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Groh (Wis., 1893), 55 N. W. Rep. 714.

Deprivation by Legislature of Right to Alluvion.—A riparian owner cannot be deprived, by the legislature, of his right to future alluvion that may be deposited upon his property. Municipality No. 2 v. Orleans Cotton Press, 18 La. 122, 36 Am. Dec. 624.

Lands formed by accretion belong to the riparian proprietor, and cannot be granted by the state as vacancy, Patterson v. Gelston, 23 Md. 433; nor be selected as swamp and overflowed land, Minto v. Delaney, 7 Oregon 337.

2. See supra, this title, Definition.

3. Purpresture.—The right to alluvion which has resulted from purpresture or encroachment does not vest in the contiguous proprietor. In Dana v. Jackson St. Wharf Co., 31 Cal. 118, 89 Am. Dec. 165, where the defendant had built a wharf out from the plaintiff's premises into a public harbor, which wharf the plaintiff claimed inured to his advantage, it was held that the owner of the premises would not thus become the owner of the alluvion, the wharf being an unauthorized encroachment into the public harbor.

4. Banks of River Subject to Public Use—Accretions Subject Thereto also.—Where a street extends down to the water line, it will not be deemed cut off therefrom by accretions formed by alluvial deposits, nor by the act of the owner of the land subject to the public easement. Municipality No. 2 v. Orleans Cotton Press, 18 La. 122, 36 Am. Dec. 624; People v. Lambier, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 9, 47 Am. Dec. 273; Matter of Wells Avenue (Supreme Ct.), 4 N. Y. Supp. 301.

Where certain property has been dedicated to the public for the purposes of a street and public landing, all accretions accrue to the public benefit. Godfrey v. Alton, 12 Ill. 29, 52 Am. Rep. 476. And see Mobile v. Eslava, 9 Port. (Ala.) 577, 33 Am. Dec. 325.

In Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 339, it was held that if a city acquires the right to a street along the water front of certain private property, and then proceeds to reclaim land and widen the street, the land reclaimed will at all events be subject to the same easement as was the original street, whether the legal title to such additions vests in the city or in the private individual.

An act of Congress having reference to the laying off of the city of Burlington, Iowa, provided that a "quantity of land of proper width, on the river bank at the town of Burlington, and running with the said river the whole length of said town, shall be reserved from sale, for public use, and remain forever for public use as a public high way, and for other public uses." It was held that under this act the city, taking the land subject to the trusts and conditions expressed in the act, had an equal right to the accretion thereon from the river, which accretion partook of the same nature as the original reservation. The city has no right, however, to make an unqualified disposition of it to a railroad company to be held and used as private property, but may grant the right of way over it to such railroad company. Cook v. Burlington, 30 Iowa 94, 6 Am. Rep. 649.

In Barrett v. New Orleans, 13 La. Ann. 105, it is said that the owner of soil situated on the edge of the water, to whom belongs the alluvion, is bound to leave the public that portion of the bank which is required by law for the public use. And see The Edmondson Island Case, 42 Fed. Rep. 15.

5. Municipality No. 2 v. Orleans Cotton Press, 18 La. 122, 36 Am. Dec. 624; People v.

original bank is no longer needed for the exercise of the use, the owners of the right of property therein will be entitled to its occupation.¹

Necessity of Title to Water Line.—That the law of alluvion may have application, it is obvious, the property holder must have title to the water line; if the boundary is established by allusion to fixed monuments simply near the water mark, the alluvion will not accrue to such proprietor.²

2. Accretion and Reliction Compared.—Reliction may mean either the process of gradual and imperceptible recession of water from land, or the land thus left dry.³ In its latter sense, it is regarded the same in effect as alluvion, and the same principles are held to regulate both.⁴

Lambier, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 9, 47 Am. Dec. 273; Parker v. Taylor, 7 Oregon 435.

1. Municipality No. 2 v. Orleans Cotton Press, 18 La. 122, 36 Am. Dec. 624; Donovan v. New Orleans, 35 La. Ann. 461; Leonard v. Baton Rouge, 39 La. Ann. 275; Louisiana Ice Mfg. Co. v. New Orleans, 43 La. Ann. 217; Delachaise v. Maginnis, 44 La. Ann. 1043.

When land bordering upon a river is granted, and there is reserved a public right of passage along the bank of such river, the title vests absolutely in the grantees, subject only to the servitude. The fact of the road running along the bank of the river cannot be held to limit the grant having the river for its boundary, so as to exclude the proprietor of the lands from his riparian rights. The passage might have been changed by the grantee, or his assignees, as the river gradually receded, so as to continue it along the bank. Hagan v. Campbell, 8 Port. (Ala.) 9, 33 Am. Dec. 267. See also Morgan v. Livingston, 6 Martin (La.) 19.

2. In Cook v. McClure, 58 N. Y. 437, 17 Am. Rep. 270, the claim was to a small strip of land which had once been covered by water, but now adjoined an artificial pond, the defendant claiming to be the riparian owner. The boundary line, as described in the deed of the land to the defendant, was from a stake near the high-water mark of said pond to the upper end of said pond, or to the north line of said lot. The ground which the defendant held was formed by accretion and by subsidence of the waters of the pond. The only real question involved in this case was whether the boundary in the deed under which the plaintiff, by several mesne conveyances, made title, established a fixed and permanent line, or whether such line would follow a change in the water of the pond if produced by natural causes. It was held that the language of the deed indicated an intention to establish a fixed and permanent line, and not one changeable by the varying quantity of water in the pond. Compare Rix v. Johnson, 5 N. H. 520, 22 Am. Dec. 472; Mansur v. Blake, 62 Me. 38.

Where a landowner was not proprietor of the shore, strictly speaking, but owned to a water front of statutory creation, it was held that to such the law of alluvion did not apply. Dana v. Jackson St. Wharf Co., 31 Cal. 111, 89 Am. Dec. 166.

Right to Accretions as Dependent upon Contiguity.—The right to accretions, as such, in the bed of a river, depends on actual contiguity. Any separation of the claimant's land from the alluvion by the land of another defeats the claim. Bates v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 1 Black (U. S.) 204; Saul v. Shepherd, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 502; Bristol v. Carroll County, 95 Ill. 84; New Orleans v. Gravier, 11 Martin (La.) 620; Giraud v. Hughes, 1 Gill & J. (Md.) 249; Matter of State Reservation Comrs., 37 Hun (N. Y.) 537; Doe v. Duncan, 1 Jones (N. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 114 Mo. 13; Rhoades v. Raymer, 6 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 68.

3. Reliction Defined.—Century Dict.; Bouvier Law Dict. Reliction is the term applied to land made by the recession of the water by which it was previously covered. Warren v. Chambers, 25 Ark. 120, 4 Am. Rep. 23; Murry v. Sermon, 1 Hawks (N. Car.) 56; Banks v. Ogden, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 57.

Dereliction is a recession of the waters of the sea, a navigable river, or other stream, by which land which was before covered with water is left dry. In such case, if the alteration takes place suddenly and sensibly, the ownership remains according to former bounds; but if it is made gradually and imperceptibly, the derelict or dry land belongs to the riparian owner from whose shore or bank the water has so receded. Woolrych on Law of Waters, marg. p. 29 et seq.; Warren v. Chambers, 25 Ark. 120, 4 Am. Rep. 24.

Recession must be Slow, Gradual, and Imperceptible.—In order to entitle the adjoining property holders to the right of possession of the land left bare by the receding water, the recession must be slow, gradual, and imperceptible. In case of a sudden and sensible recession of the water, the ownership of the land will not be changed. Warren v. Chambers, 25 Ark. 120, 4 Am. Rep. 23; Cooley v. Golden, 117 Mo. 33; Gill v. Lydick, 40 Neb. 508.

3. Reappearance of Land after Submergence.—It seems that, although land be Sudden and Violent Floods.—In Doe v. Allen, 4 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 62, 32 Am. Dec. 672, in which a boundary line of lands was in controversy, the court held that it did not follow that because the river had deserted the bed in which it flowed when the deed was executed, the boundary of the land of the lessor of the plaintiff had shifted with it. "Admit," said the court, "that such would have been the consequence if the river had receded from its southern bank by small and almost imperceptible gradations, a point upon which no opinion is intended to be expressed or intimated, this consequence does not follow from changes by sudden and violent floods."

Reliction Takes Place most Frequently in Lakes and Ponds.—The owner of land bounded on a lake, whether navigable or not, has title to the land left dry by the gradual and imperceptible recession of the water. Warren v. Chambers, 25 Ark. 120, 4 Am. Rep. 23; Banks v. Ogden, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 57; Granger v. Swart, 1 Woolw. (U. S.) 88; Murry v. Sermon, 1 Hawks (N. Car.) 56; Boorman v. Sunnuchs, 42 Wis. 233.

Under the English Common Law, though a proprietor acquired no title to the soil lying between high and low water mark, yet he was entitled to all accessions made to his land, either by the retreating of the river from its former limits, or by the slow and secret deposit of sand and other substances, so as to leave the soil theretofore inundated, uncovered by water. 3 Kent Com. (13th ed.) 428 et seq.

Reason of the Rule.—In Giraud v. Hughes, 1 Gill & J. (Md.) 249, the court said: "The principle seems to be well settled, that where a tract of land lies adjacent or contiguous to a navigable river or water, any increase of soil formed by the waters gradually or imperceptibly receding, or any gain by alluvion in the same manner, shall, as a compensation for what it may lose in other respects, belong to the proprietor of the adjacent or contiguous land."

"As to lands gained from the sea, either by alluvion, by the washing up of sand and earth, so as in time to make terra firma, or by dereliction, as when the sea shrinks back below the usual water mark; in these cases the law is held to be, that if this gain be by little and little, by small and imperceptible degrees, it shall go to the owner of the land adjoining. For de minimis non curat lex; and, besides, these owners being often losers by the breaking in of the sea, or at charges to keep it out, this possible gain is therefore a reciprocal consideration for such possible charge or loss. But if the alluvion or dereliction be sudden and considerable, in this case it belongs to the king; for, as the king is lord of the sea, and so owner of the soil while it is covered with water, it is but reasonable he should have the soil when the water has left it dry." 2 Black. Com. 262; Woolrych on the Law of Waters 34; Shulte's Aquatic Rights 116.

Reclamation of Soil.—In Connecticut it has been held that the owners of land bounded on a harbor own only to high-water mark, and whatever rights such owners have of reclaiming the shore are mere franchises. Lockwood v. New York, etc., R. Co., 37 Conn. 387. And see Boston v. Richardson, 105 Mass. 351, as to rights of proprietors of land upon the shore of the sea, lying within the city of Boston, to land reclaimed from the sea.

Submergence—Reliction.—Land lost by submergence may be regained by reliction, and its disappearance by erosion may be returned by accretion, upon which the ownership temporarily lost will be regained. Mulry v. Norton, 100 N. Y. 426, 53 Am. Rep. 215. See also infra, this title, Reappearance of Land after Submergence.

An Island which is cut off from the Mainland by a stream in the ordinary stages of low water cannot be added to the land of an adjacent proprietor merely because in the very dry season of the year the stream has almost disappeared and no water flows over the intervening dry and sandy or pebbly bed. Stover v. Jack, 60 Pa. St. 339, 100 Am. Dec. 566.

In St. Paul, etc., R. Co. v. Schurmeier, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 272, it was held, however, that a sandbar in the Mississippi river, separated by a slough twenty-eight feet wide from the mainland, and at high water entirely submerged, belonged to the riparian owner, although the acts of Congress made the river a public highway at the place in question. And see Shoemaker v. Hatch, 13 Nev. 261.

Where the intermediate space between a survey on the mainland of the Missouri river and a surveyed island, at the times of the surveys, consisted of a slough, and since then the slough has so filled up as to connect the island and the mainland and to make them one continuous tract of land, the adjacent owners of the island and the survey are entitled to the accretions to their respective lands; but if the slough simply filled up from the bottom, or by deposits within its bed, and the accretions did not form on the one side or the other, then the centre of the slough as it was before the water left it is the boundary between the survey and the island. Where the shore lines of two tracts of land divided by a watercourse receive accretions until they come together, the line of contact will then be the division line. If the slough gradually filled up as the water receded, the same principle is applied, and the new land belongs to the riparian owner from whose shore the water receded, it being immaterial whether the water was navigable in the common-law sense or general acceptance of the term, or was a non-navigable stream. Buse v. Russell, 86 Mo. 209; Bigelow v. Hoover, 85 Iowa 161. And see Naylor v. Cox, 114 Mo. 232.

Proof to be Made by a Claimant by Reliction.—In Boorman v. Sunnuchs, 42 Wis. 235, Lyon, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said that where one claimed land by reliction, he should give reasonably definite information of the progress of the falling or recession of the water. He should show the several submerged by the sea, yet if it eventually reappears and remains capable of identification, the title thereto revests in the original owner.¹

4. Doctrine of Accretion and Reliction as Applicable to Islands.—The proprietorship of an island formed by alluvion or subsidence of water is in the owner of the bed or bottom of the stream.² If the island is formed in public waters, the title thereto immediately vests in the state;³ if formed in private stages of the process through longer or shorter periods of time as determined by the width of the strip uncovered, or by comparison with known and fixed objects, so that the court might have satisfactory data upon which to determine the character of the reliction. Mere proof that persons watching the process could not see the water recede should not suffice.

1. Reappearance after Submergence.—Mulry v. Norton, 100 N. Y. 426, 53 Am. Rep. 213. In Hargrave Law Tracts (Sir Matthew Hale De Jure Maris) 36, 37, it is said: "If a subject hath land adjoining the sea, and the violence of the sea swallow it up, but so that yet there be reasonable marks to continue the notice of it, or though the marks be defaced, yet if by situation and extent of quantity and bounding upon the firm land the same can be known, though the sea leave this land again, or it be by art or industry regained, the subject does not lose his property; and accordingly it was held by Cooke and Foster, M. (7 Jac. C. B.), though the inundation continue forty years. * * * But if it be freely left again by the reflex and recess of the sea, the owner may have his land as before, if he can make it out where and what it was; for he cannot lose his propriety of the soil, though it be for a time become part of the sea, and within the admiral jurisdiction while it so continues."

When Portions of the Mainland have been gradually encroached upon by the ocean, so that navigable channels have been extended thereover, the people, by virtue of their sovereignty over public highways, undoubtedly succeed to the control of such channels and the ownership of the land under them in case of its permanent acquisition by the sea. It is equally true, however, that when the water disappears from the land, either by its gradual retirement therefrom or the elevation of the land by avulsion or accretion, or even the exclusion of the water by artificial means, its proprietorship returns to the original riparian owners. Houck on Rivers, § 258; Mulry v. Norton, 100 N. Y. 426, 53 Am. Rep. 215.

Duration of Submergence.—The lapse of time during which the submergence continues does not bar the right of such owner to enter upon the land reclaimed and assert his proprietorship. Angell on Tide-Waters (1st ed.) 77; Mulry v. Norton, 100 N. Y. 426, 53 Am. Rep. 211.

Where Identity is Lost.—Land lost by submergence may be regained by reliction, unless the submergence has been followed by such a lapse of time as precludes the identity of the land from being established. Mulry v. Norton, 100 N. Y. 424, 53 Am. Rep. 211.

2. Islands Formed by Accretion or Reliction.—Heckman v. Swett, 99 Cal. 303; Hopkins

Academy v. Dickinson, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 548; Ingraham v. Wilkinson, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 268; 16 Am. Dec. 342; Deerfield v. Arms, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 41, 28 Am. Dec. 277; Mulry v. Norton, 100 N. Y. 426, 53 Am. Rep. 212. Thus it has been held that the owner of a bank on the Missouri river is not the owner of an island which springs up in the middle of the river, whether the island be on one side of the thread of the stream or the other. Cooley v. Golden, 117 Mo. 33.

In Mulry v. Norton, 100 N. Y. 426, 53 Am. Rep. 212, it is said: "A case quite in point is referred to by the respondent's counsel as arising in Delaware in 1815, decided by the court of common pleas, upon a learned opinion by Judge Wilson, a copy of which is attached to the plaintiff's brief. The case does not seem to be elsewhere reported. It arose over the ownership of an island called Wilson's Bar, which had been created by alluvion upon land formerly contained within the boundaries of an island called Little Tinnicum, but which at some time had been worn away by the ocean. The court said: 'The right to the new island and also to land gained by alluvion or dereliction, all of which are governed by the same principle, follows the right to the soil which is covered by the water. Though the surface of the lower part of Little Tinnicum was destroyed by the force of the winds and waves, and it was consequently overflowed by the water of the river, yet the owner did not lose the propriety of the remaining land covered by the water; if it was regained, either by natural or artificial means, it continued to belong to the original proprietor. * * * The earth deposited on it became his by the right of alluvion, and of course this island formed on it by such deposit became his. And though it probably has extended beyond the limits of the old island, the addition is plainly alluvion.'"

If an island was washed away, in whole or in part, after it was surveyed, and then reformed on the same bed, the owner of it as it was before being washed away would be entitled to it; but when it was washed away, and the land sought to be recovered was made by deposits to and against the survey of the main land, then such deposits became the property of the owner of the survey. Buse v. Russell, 86 Mo. 209.

Where, by the deposit of alluvion, an island in a lake gradually becomes connected by a spit to the neighboring shore, such island does not become the property of the owner of the shore. Bigelow v. Hoover, 85 Iowa 161.

3. Islands in Public Waters.—Mulry v. Norton, 100 N. Y. 426, 53 Am. Rep. 213. But where a lagoon divided the main shore from waters, it becomes vested in the one or more private individuals to whom the bed or bottom belongs.¹

III. RATIONALE OF RULE AS TO PROPERTY IN ACCRETIONS—1. In General.—Several reasons have at various times been advanced as foundations for the jus alluvionis.

2. De Minimis non Curat Lex.—Blackstone is authority for the statement that the right of riparian proprietors to alluvion had its origin in the maxim de minimis non curat lex.²

3. Considerations of Public Policy.—Another reason which has been assigned is that well-known principle of public policy which urges the expediency of having all property vested in some owner; and in whom, argue the advocates of this theory, could alluvion vest, if not in the contiguous proprietors?³

4. As a Compensation for Risk of Loss.—The weight of authority, however, inclines to the opinion that alluvion is allowed to the owners of the land upon the beach, it was held that this constituted no obstruction to the proprietorship of the beach formation, the entire property, including the beach, having formerly belonged to the individual still owning the main shore. Deerfield v. Arms, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 43, 28 Am. Dec. 276. Mulry v. Norton, 100 N. Y. 426, 53 Am. Rep. 212.

"As Touching Islands Arising in the Sea or in the arms of creeks, or havens thereof, the same rule holds which is before observed, touching acquets by the reliction or recess of the sea, or such arms or creeks thereof. Of common right and prima facie it is true they belong to the crown, but where the interest of such districtus maris, or arm of the sea, or creek or haven, doth in point of property belong to a subject either by charter or prescription, the islands that happen within the precincts of such private propriety of a subject will belong to the subject according to the limits and extent of such propriety." Hargrave Law Tracts (Sir Matthew Hale De Jure Maris) 36, 37. See also Gould on Waters (2d ed.), § 166.

1. Islands in Private Waters.—Middleton v. Pritchard, 4 Ill. 510, 38 Am. Dec. 112; Granger v. Avery, 64 Me. 202; Hopkins Academy v. Dickinson, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 548; Ingraham v. Wilkinson, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 268, 16 Am. Dec. 342; Deerfield v. Arms, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 41, 28 Am. Dec. 276; McCullough v. Wall, 4 Rich. (S. Car.) 68, 53 Am. Dec. 715.

Where a River Changes its Course so as to cut off a point of the property of a landowner, this will not change the ownership; the title to the island thus formed will still be in the original owner. Hopkins Academy v. Dickinson, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 544; Bonewits v. Wygant, 75 Ind. 41.

2. Blackstone's Reason of the Rule.—In 2 Black. Com. 262, it is said, that as to lands gained from the sea by alluvion, where the gain is by little and little, by small and imperceptible degrees, it shall go to the owner of the land adjoining, for de minimis non curat lex; and besides, these owners, being often losers by the breaking in of the sea, or at charges to keep it out, this possible gain is therefore a reciprocal consideration for such charge or loss.

This Reason Criticised.—This passage of Blackstone has been criticised more or less by the authorities. In Atty.-Gen. v. Chambers, 4 De G. & J. 55, Lord Chelmsford is reported to have said: "I am not quite satisfied that the principle de minimis non curat lex is the correct explanation of the rule on this subject; because, although the additions may be small and insignificant in their progress, yet after a lapse of time, by little and little, a very large increase may have taken place which it would not be beneath the law to notice, and of which, if the party who has the right to it can clearly show that it formerly belonged to him, he ought not to be deprived. I am rather disposed to adopt the reason assigned for the rule by Baron Alderson in the case of In re Hull, etc., R. Co., 5 M. & W. 327, viz.: 'That which cannot be perceived in its progress is taken to be as if it never had existed at all;' and, as Lord Abinger said in the same case, 'the principle,' as to gradual accretion, 'is founded on the necessity which exists for some such rule of law for the permanent protection and adjustment of property.' It must always be borne in mind that the owner of lands does not derive benefit alone, but may suffer loss, from the operation of this rule; for if the sea gradually steals upon the land, he loses so much of his property, which is thus silently transferred by the law to the proprietor of the seashore."

3. Public Policy.—The rule governing additions made to land bounded by a river, lake, or sea, has been much discussed and variously settled by usage and positive law. Almost all jurists and legislatures, however, both ancient and modern, have agreed that the owner of the land thus bounded is entitled to these additions. By some the principle has been vindicated on the ground of natural justice, that he who sustains the burden of losses and repairs imposed by the contiguity of the waters ought to receive whatever benefits they may bring by accretion; by others it is derived from the principle of public policy that it is to the interest of the community that all land should have an owner, and it is most convenient that insensible additions to the shore should follow title to the shore itself. Banks v. Ogden, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 57.

which it forms, as a compensation for possible loss from the same source, which in the case of accretions operates to their gain.¹

IV. APPORTIONMENT OF ACCRETIONS—1. In General.—The general principle to be observed in the apportionment of alluvion between adjacent property holders is to make such a division as will give to the proprietors of the new shore line such proportion thereof as they possessed of the former shore before the formation of the alluvion.²

1. Consideration of Natural Justice.—Atty.-Gen. v. Chambers, 4 De G. & J. 55; In re Hull, etc., R. Co., 5 M. & W. 327; New Orleans v. U. S., 10 Pet. (U. S.) 662; Lovington v. St. Clair County, 64 Ill. 56, 16 Am. Rep. 516, affirmed in St. Clair County v. Lovington, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 68; Delachaise v. Maginnis, 44 La. Ann. 1043; Chapman v. Hoskins, 2 Md. Ch. 485; Giraud v. Hughes, 1 Gill & J. (Md.) 249; Smith v. St. Louis Public Schools, 30 Mo. 200; Benson v. Morrow, 61 Mo. 352.

Where the Sea, instead of Retreating, encroaches on the land, property so gradually submerged belongs to the state. Wilson v. Shiveley, 11 Oregon 215.

A Riparian Owner is Entitled to the Alluvion deposited upon his land, upon the principle of compensation for the burdens of his exposed situation and the risk of loss through the agency of the river. Municipality No. 2 v. Orleans Cotton Press, 18 La. 122, 36 Am. Dec. 624. In conformity with this reason for allowing contingent property owners the title in alluvion was the case of Gravier v. New Orleans (referred to in Saulet v. Shepherd, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 508), where the court held that the owner of certain property, along whose water front ran a public road, was not entitled to alluvion, on the ground that, as the public was under an obligation to keep the road in repair, the private individual was not liable to any loss from encroachments of the water.

In respect to the law entitling riparian proprietors to the accretions to their land, the court in Kraut v. Crawford, 18 Iowa 549, 87 Am. Dec. 416, said: "The law is wise and just. If the action of the river had gradually worn away the defendant's land, after the purchase from the United States, the loss would have been his. To compensate him for risk of loss in this manner, as well as to preserve to him the benefits of his water front, the law gives him the advantage of any gains by accretions or alluvial deposits."

In Grants of Lands Lying along the Seashore, the parties act with a knowledge of the variety of changes to which all parts of the shore are subject. The grantee takes no fixed freehold, but one that shifts with the changes that gradually take place. The proprietor of lands having such a boundary is obliged to accept the alteration of his boundary by the gradual changes to which the shore is subject. He is subject to loss by the same means that may add to his territory; and as he is without remedy for his loss, so he is entitled to the gain which may arise from alluvial formations, and in such case he will hold by the same boundary, including the accumulated soil. Tyler on Boundaries, etc., 40; 3 Kent

Com. (13th ed.) 428; New Orleans v. U. S., 10 Pet. (U. S.) 662.

Riparian Owner may Protect Himself from Encroachment of River.—In Gerrish v. Clough, 48 N. H. 9, 97 Am. Dec. 561, 2 Am. Rep. 165, it appeared that for several years a river lying between the property of the plaintiff and the property of the defendant had been encroaching upon the defendant's land and receding correspondingly from the plaintiff's land on the opposite shore. The defendant, to prevent further encroachments, erected certain breakwaters in the river along his land, which the plaintiff complained changed the current of the river and threw it upon his land, washing it away. The court held that the defendant had a right to protect himself against the encroachment of the river in any way so that it did not change the channel of the river to the injury of the neighboring riparian owners. See also Angell on Watercourses (7th ed.), §§ 330-334; Barnes v. Marshall, 68 Cal. 569.

2 Principles of Division—Rules Given.—In Deerfield v. Arms, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 41, 28 Am. Dec. 277, this rule is laid down for the division of alluvion between the contiguous riparian proprietors—First: To measure the whole extent of the ancient bank or line of the river, and compute how many rods, yards, or feet each riparian proprietor owned on the river line. Second: Supposing the former line, for instance, to amount to two hundred rods, to divide the newly formed bank or river line into two hundred equal parts, and appropriate to each proprietor as many portions of this new river line as he owned rods on the old; then, to complete the division, lines are to be drawn from the points at which the proprietors respectively bounded on the old, to the points thus determined as the points of division on the newly formed shore. The new lines thus formed, it is obvious, will be either parallel, or divergent, or convergent, according as the new shore line of the river equals or exceeds or falls short of the old. Commenting on this method of apportionment, the court said: "This mode of distribution secures to each riparian proprietor the benefit of continuing to hold to the river shore, whatever changes may take place in the condition of the river by accretion, and the rule is obviously founded in that principle of equity upon which the distribution ought to be made."

A similar rule of apportionment is stated in Kehr v. Snyder, 114 Ill. 313, 55 Am. Rep. 867. See also Johnston v. Jones, 1 Black. (U. S.) 209; Miller v. Hepburn, 8 Bush (Ky.) 326; Emerson v. Taylor, 9 Me. 43, 23 Am. Dec. 531; Sparhawk v. Bullard, 1

2. Islands in Private Waters.—Where, from accretion or reliction, an island is formed in private waters, the shores and bed of which are owned by different proprietors, their boundary lines may be run as they existed immediately before the formation of the island.¹

Smith, 12 R. I. 370; Manchester v. Point Street Iron Works, 13 R. I. 355.

It has been declared that the Course of the Side Lines of Property in front of which alluvion is formed is of no consequence in the division of the alluvion formed subsequently to the conveyance or grant. The line of such division must be drawn in such manner as that each of the contiguous riparian proprietors shall have such proportion of the alluvial soil as the total extent of his front line bears to the total quantity of the alluvial soil to be divided. Delord v. New Orleans, 11 La. Ann. 699.

In Miller v. Hepburn, 8 Bush (Ky.) 326, the court had occasion to apply a rule of apportionment of accretions, holding that the several shares were to be ascertained by extending the original river frontage of the respective lots at right angles with the course of the river to the thread of the stream. At page 329 of the opinion will be found an illustrative diagram showing the operation of the rule.

For Another Method of Apportionment of Alluvion, with explanatory diagrams, see Emerson v. Taylor, 9 Me. 42, 23 Am. Dec. 531.

In Gould on Waters (2d ed.), § 162, it is stated: "In all cases where practicable, every proprietor is entitled to a frontage of the same width on the new shore as on the old shore, and at low-water mark as well as high-water mark, without regard to the side lines of the upland, unless referred to as guides in particular grants, or established as boundaries by the agreement or conduct of the conterminous proprietors or the acts of public authorities."

In Batchelder v. Keniston, 51 N. H. 496, 12 Am. Rep. 143, certain alluvial deposits were apportioned between contiguous proprietors by ascertaining the length of the shore line before any alluvion had been deposited and that of the shore line since the accretions, and making a division among the riparian owners in proportion to the length owned by them formerly.

Where alluvion begins to form upon the land of one of two contiguous riparian proprietors, and gradually extends in front of the land of the other, the proprietor of the land on which the alluvion first commences is entitled to only that alluvion which lies in front of his own land. Crandall v. Allen, 118 Mo. 403.

Modification of Rules of Apportionment.—The rules of apportionment may require modification under particular circumstances. For instance, in applying the rule to the ancient margin of a river, to ascertain the extent of each proprietor's title on that margin, the general line ought to be taken, and not the actual length of the line on that margin if it happens to be elongated by deep indentations or sharp projections. In such case it should be reduced by an equitable and judicious estimate to the general available line of the land upon the river. Knight v. Wilder, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 209, 48 Am. Dec. 660; Hopkins Academy v. Dickinson, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 552; Wonson v. Wonson, 14 Allen (Mass.) 85; Deerfield v. Arms, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 41, 28 Am. Dec. 277; Batchelder v. Keniston, 51 N. H. 496, 12 Am. Rep. 143. In Kehr v. Snider, 114 Ill. 313, 55 Am. Rep. 868, it was held that, under special circumstances, generally recognized rules of apportionment of accretions may be modified or departed from.

1. Middleton v. Pritchard, 4 Ill. 510, 38 Am. Dec. 112; Hopkins Academy v. Dickinson, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 548; Ingraham v. Wilkinson, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 268, 16 Am. Dec. 342; Deerfield v. Arms, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 41, 28 Am. Dec. 276; McCullough v. Wall, 4 Rich. (S. Car.) 68, 53 Am. Dec. 715.

In Hopkins Academy v. Dickinson, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 548, it is said, in respect to the decision of the court in Ingraham v. Wilkinson, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 268, 16 Am. Dec. 342, that it "recognizes the rule of the common law that the property in the soil of rivers not navigable, subject to public easements, belongs to those whose lands border upon them; and from this right of property in the soil in the bed of the river the court deduce the right of property in an island which gradually arises above the surface and becomes valuable for use as land. Assuming the thread of the river, as it was immediately before such island made its appearance, this rule assigns the whole island, or bare ground formed in the bed of the river, if it be wholly on one side of the thread of the river, to the owner on that side; but if it be so situated that it is partly on one side and partly on the other of the thread of the river, it shall be divided by such line, and held in severalty by the adjacent proprietors."

ACCRUE—ACCRUED—ACCRUING.—These words, in their generally received sense, are used of something which is to be added or attached to something else.¹ Accrued means due and payable,² vested.³

3. Hartshorne v. Ross, 2 Disney (Ohio) 15.
Claims against Railroad.—Notloe.—A statute rendering railroads liable for claims against a contractor for work performed on the railroad required that notice should be given to the road "within thirty days after such claim or demand shall have accrued." Where it was customary for laborers upon a road to receive payment a certain day of each month for the whole of the previous month's work, it was held that the claim did not accrue until the usual day of payment, and notice within thirty days thereof was sufficient. Mundt v. Sheboygan, etc., R. Co., 31 Wis. 451.

In Sense of Existed.—The words "shall have accrued" have in one case been held to mean "shall have existed," where there has been an inchoate right or title, effect to which, however, could not be given until there was some intrusion upon that right. Weber v. Harbor Com'rs, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 57.

Cause of Action. (See also the titles DEATH BY WRONGFUL ACT; DEBTS OF DECEDENTS; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.)—The Missouri statute giving a right of action for wrongful death provides that the suit must be commenced within one year after the cause of action accrues. In Kennedy v. Burrier, 36 Mo. 130, the court said: "The sixth section of the act provides that suit must be brought 'within one year from the time the cause of action accrued.' When, then, did the cause of action accrue? We think the cause of action accrued whenever the defendant's liability became perfect and complete. Whenever the defendant had done an act which made him liable in damages, and there was a person in esse to whom the damages ought to be paid and who might sue for and recover the same, then clearly the cause of action had accrued as against him."

To Accrue in Sense of to Arise.—"Although a cause of action may not, in general, be said to have accrued until the time of credit, if any, has expired, yet in giving a construction to the particular words of a statute we are to look to the whole act, and from it determine the sense in which they are used, so as to give effect to the legislative intent. The verb to accrue is often and properly used to convey the same idea as the verb 'to arise.' Such is evidently the sense in which it is here used. A cause of action may be said to arise when the contract out of which it grows is entered into or made." Emerson v. Steamboat Shawano City, 10 Wis. 435.

Accrued Costs. (See also the titles COSTS; CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT.)—In Petrosky v. Flanagan, 38 Minn. 26, defendant offered judgment in favor of plaintiff and accrued costs instead of judgment "with costs," as provided by statute. Defendant claimed that the offer was insufficient. The court held it sufficient, saying: "But we do not think there is any substantial difference between these terms as applied to the facts of the case." See also Keller v. Allee, 87 Ind. 252; Holland v. Pugh, 16 Ind. 21.

In Tallahassee Mfg. Co. v. Glenn, 50 Ala. 489, it was held that the words "all the costs that have accrued," when used in the compromise of a pending suit or in a private statute providing for such compromise, mean costs that would follow the judgment, and do not include attorney's fees.

Accrue Distinguished from Sustain.—In Adams v. Brown, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 7, the declaration recited as a condition of the bond that the complainant should pay all costs and damages which the defendant should sustain. Upon oyer, the condition set out was for the payment of all costs and damages which might accrue. This was held a material variance. The court said: "But there is still another variance between the condition of the bond as alleged in the declaration, and the condition as set forth upon oyer, in this, that the former is 'to pay to the plaintiff all costs and damages which he should sustain in consequence of the injunction,' and the latter is 'to pay all costs and damages that may accrue in consequence of the injunction.' Now, the word sustain, used in the former, and the word accrue, used in the latter, are not only different terms, but terms of different import, as they are here implied. The word sustain implies a loss; but the word accrue implies a gain or acquisition. The costs, for example, whether extra or legal, expended by the plaintiff in consequence of the injunction, might be said to be sustained by him; but it is only such as were decreed to him that could with propriety be said to have accrued to him in consequence of the injunction. So any damages occasioned by the delay produced by the injunction may be said to be sustained by the plaintiff; but it is only those damages which were adjudged to him by the decree of the court, on a dissolution of the injunction, which can with propriety be said to have accrued to the plaintiff."

Title.—A title accrues when the instrument creating it or the fact constituting it first becomes operative. Reid v. Reid, 31 Ch. Div. 402.

Dues to Accrue Weekly.—In Strasser v. Staats, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 145, it was held that where the constitution of a society provided that "the dues of members of the lodge accrue weekly," the phrase "accrue weekly" was not equivalent to "become payable weekly" or "due weekly." The court said: "It is quite apparent, from the uniform action of the lodge in not exacting weekly payments of dues from its members, that it did not interpret the phrase 'accrue weekly' as equivalent to 'payable weekly' or 'due weekly.' Bou-

ACCRUER, CLAUSE OF.—An express clause frequently occurs in the case of gifts by deed or will to persons as tenants in common, providing that, vier defines accrue as to grow to, to be added to, as the interest accrues on the principal. Applying this definition to the phrase 'dues accrue weekly,' it would not signify that they are payable weekly, but rather that they are estimated or measured weekly, to grow or to be added to each other as interest is added to or increases the amount of a debt."

Accruing Interest.—In Gross v. Partenhimer, 159 Pa. St. 556, it was held that the assumption of a mortgage and the agreement to pay accruing interest thereon did not extend to interest accrued or matured. The court said: "If 'accruing interest' means interest which, according to the terms of the security, was due and payable on February 26, 1893, and remained overdue and unpaid at the date of the contract, the defendant's construction should prevail; but we cannot agree that these words mean any such thing. Such a construction would be strained and wholly unwarranted by the language employed. As generally understood, accruing interest means running or accumulating interest, as distinguished from accrued or matured interest. When we speak of interest which is from day to day accumulating on the principal debt, but which is not yet due and payable, we call it accruing interest. When we refer to interest heretofore payable, but still remaining unpaid, we speak of it as overdue interest, arrears of interest, or interest in arrear, just as we speak of rent in arrear. We are therefore of opinion that the words 'accruing interest' do not refer to or in any manner embrace any part of the six months' interest which was then overdue and unpaid."

Saving Clause of Statute. (See also the title STATUTES.)—A saving clause of rights and liabilities, accruing under the acts repealed, was held not merely to preserve the accrued rights, but rights accruing, and to continue in force the provisions of the repealed statute for their enforcement. The court said: "The language of the proviso is broad and comprehensive. It saves not only rights, with their remedies, which had then accrued, and on which an action could be maintained at that time, but also rights then accruing which might thereafter ripen into an existing cause of action. * * * This right and this liability may be said to have been accruing from the time the bond was executed and the money received, precisely as the right and liability arising upon a promissory note is accruing from its execution and delivery until its maturity. Before due, it is a right accruing; when due it becomes a right accrued." Cochran v. Taylor, 13 Ohio St. 387.

The saving clause in the Ohio Wills Act preserved "all rights that had accrued under the repealed statutes." In Hartshorne v. Ross, 2 Disney (Ohio) 21, it was contended that this included rights of devisees under an executed will, although the testator was alive at the passage of the statute. This was not allowed. The court said: "When the testator died, the Wills Act then existing repealed all prior laws on the same subject, saving, however, by section 79, 'all rights that had accrued' under them, or either of them, which saving, it is claimed, includes the rights of these plaintiffs as devisees, thereby referring the operation of the will to its execution, instead of the time of the testator's death. We suppose the term accrued is equivalent in its meaning to the word 'vested,' which necessarily implies that something has been imparted to or conferred upon a third person, over which he may have the immediate control by possession, or the present right to future possession, of which he cannot be deprived without his assent. It must be a right he can legally assert, independent of any future condition of things as well as any subsequent change of the existing law."

Accrue and Occur Distinguished. (See also the title FIRE INSURANCE.)—A policy of insurance contained a condition that no recovery should be had unless suit was brought within twelve months next after the loss should occur. It was contended that occur in the policy was used in the sense of accrue. The court said: "The word 'occur' means 'to happen' in its general and most popular sense, whilst the word accrue is to be added or attached to something else in its generally received sense; but if we were to substitute the word accrue, then, in its grammatical connection, it would mean that the loss had attached to appellants, and that was when the fire destroyed the property, and would not change the obvious meaning from what it is as written. It would not be construction to say the condition means a suit or action might be commenced within twelve months after an action had accrued. It would not only be to change the grammatical structure of the clause, but it would be to make a new and different contract for the parties." Johnson v. Humboldt Ins. Co., 91 Ill. 95.

Accruing or Owning.— "When the words 'accruing or owing' are used, as they plainly are, to designate two classes of debts, they can receive each a distinct meaning only by taking one as denoting debts which are not yet payable, and the other as denoting those which are." Dresser v. Johns, 6 C. B. N. S. 434, 95 E. C. L. 434, citing Jones v. Thompson, 27 L. J. Q. B. 234, 1 El. Bl. & El. 64, 96 E. C. L. 64.

Mechanic's Lien. (See also the title MECHANIC'S LIEN.)—An Alabama statute provides that the lien of an original contractor is waived and lost unless filed within six months "after the indebtedness has accrued." It was held that where there was an entire contract for building a house, and the house was destroyed by fire before its completion, the balance payable on completion became due and payable at once, if at all, and not at the time when, but for accident, the building would have been completed. The court said: "In this connection the word accrued is evidently used in the upon the death of one or more of the beneficiaries, his or their shares shall go to the survivors or survivor. It is a rule of law that there is "no survivorship upon survivorship;" i.e., that the clause of accruer extends only to the original, not also to the accrued shares, unless in terms it is expressly made to extend to the latter also, which it customarily is made to do.¹

ACCUMULATED SURPLUS (OF A CORPORATION).—This is the fund the corporation has in excess of its capital stock after payment of its debts.²

ACCUMULATIONS.—As to trusts for accumulation, see the title PERPETUITIES.

ACCUSED.—The expression "to accuse" is used to denote the bringing a charge against one before some court or officer.³ And the person against sense of having come to maturity, so as to be due and payable. Or, in other words, it indicates the time when the work contracted for is completed, or the materials furnished, one or both, as the case may be, and the account for the same is past due." Cutcliff v. McAnally, 88 Ala. 509.

1. Brown's Law Dict.; Pain v. Benson, 3 Atk. 80.

2. State v. Parker, 35 N. J. L. 578; State v. Utter, 34 N. J. L. 480; State v. Yard, 42 N. J. L. 359.

3. People v. Braman, 30 Mich. 468.

Whether Charge must be before Legal Tribunal.—"What is meant by the word accused? Though frequently used in that sense, it does not necessarily import the charge of a crime by judicial procedure. In its popular sense it is used to express a charge or imputation merely. In this sense one may be accused of that which is no legal offense; as if he is charged with immoral or disgraceful conduct or official delinquency. It certainly is not synonymous with arrested under criminal process." State v. South, 5 Rich. (S. Car.) 493. To the same effect see Com. v. O'Brien, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 90; Robbins v. Smith, 47 Conn. 188; Robinson's Case, 2 M. & Rob. 141. But to the contrary is State v. Duncan, 9 Port. (Ala.) 260.

Charge and Accuse. (See also CHARGE.)—These are phrases implying certain legal steps. Therefore, a statute against the concealment or carrying away of any slave "charged with a capital crime" could be violated only after legal proceedings were commenced against the slave. State v. Duncan, 9 Port. (Ala.) 260. But see State v. South, 5 Rich. (S. Car.) 489.

And where an indictment charged that the defendants did "falsely charge and accuse him of the crime of adultery, and thereby to extort," etc., the term "charge and accuse" thus used and in this connection does not mean actually charge and accuse before a grand jury or magistrate, but to impute to him these offenses falsely as a means of inducing him to pay money to avoid such actual prosecution. Com. v. O'Brien, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 90.

An indictment charging that the prisoner "did feloniously and maliciously, with intent to extort money, charge and accuse A B with having committed the horrible and detestable crime, etc., and feloniously, etc., menace and threaten to prosecute the said A B, etc.," is not good under the stat. 4 Geo.

IV., c. 54, §5. But if the indictment follow the statute, and the evidence be of a threat to prosecute, the judge will leave it to the jury to say whether that was not a threatening to accuse. Rex v. Abgood, 2 C. & P. 436, 12 E. C. L. 209.

Threat to Accuse. (See also the title THREATS AND THREATENING LETTERS.)—It has been held that a threat to procure witnesses to support a complaint already made is not a threat to accuse. Rex v. Gill, 1 Lew. C. C. 305.

It has been held that a threat to cause process falsely stated to have been issued to be served on a party for a crime was within the statute; the court remarking that "a threat of accusation, in the sense of the statute, comprehends a threat to use any of the preliminary means necessary to cause a person to be proceeded against for a criminal offense." Com. v. Murphy, 12 Allen (Mass.) 449; Com. v. Dorus, 108 Mass. 488.

A threat to accuse need not be a threat to charge before any judicial tribunal; a threat to charge before any third person is sufficient. Robinson's Case, 2 M. & Rob. 14.

Accused and Indicted.—In Com. v. Cawood, 2 Va. Cas. 527, Barbour, J., in his dissenting opinion confines the word accused to persons indicted. He says: "The judge, on the first of May, made a special order for a jury for the trial of a prisoner accused of murder, though, in legal propriety, he could not, after passing an examining court, be said to be accused until he was indicted."

Accusation.—An Alabama statute provided that "all persons to the number of two or more who abuse, whip, or beat any person, upon an accusation real or pretended, or to force such person to confess himself guilty of an offense," shall be guilty of a crime. In Underwood v. State, 25 Ala. 71, the court says: "To make out the offense contemplated by the first part of this section it is essential that the accusation should be the moving cause of the abuse or violence. The term accusation must not be confounded with the act on which it is based. It means something distinct from and independent of it. If two persons were to bring a charge against a third and beat him upon provocation of the act complained of, that is very different from inflicting the same violence upon him, not from the provocation of the act itself, but because they believed him guilty of the accusation brought against him, for the commission of it. The one is simply an act of whom the charge is made is very often referred to as the "accused."¹

ACCUSTOMED.—See note 2.

ACID PHOSPHATE.—Any compound or any phosphoric acid with a base may appropriately be called a phosphate; and if there is present so much acid that it could saturate a greater quantity of the base, it is properly called an "acid phosphate," to distinguish it from a "basic phosphate."²

ACKNOWLEDGE. (As to acknowledgments of deeds, etc., see the title ACKNOWLEDGMENTS. As to the acknowledgment of a debt which will bar the running of the statute of limitations, see the title LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.)—Acknowledge means to own or admit the knowledge of.⁴

private vengeance, while the other implies, to some extent, the usurpation of legal authority—to try and punish upon a charge—what is commonly called lynching."

Accusation—Bastardy. (See also the title BASTARDY.)—Upon the construction of accusation in a statute as to bastardy proceedings, the court said: "The word accusation, as used in the statute, should be considered as having its ordinary meaning, of a declaration by the mother that a certain person is the father of her child, and not a charge made in legal form by means of a complaint to a magistrate. Indeed, it is only as the statute uses the words 'continue constant in her accusation' that any ground is furnished for the idea that such constancy of accusation must follow the institution of a legal complaint. Her continued accusation must necessarily be in itself an informal one, and there is nothing in the statute to suggest the idea that it must follow the birth of the child or the discovery to which she is put in the time of her travail." Robbins v. Smith, 47 Conn. 188.

1. People v. Braman, 30 Mich. 468.

Defendant in Civil Action.—An accused being one who is charged with a crime or misdemeanor, the word cannot well be said to apply to a defendant in a civil action. Castle v. Custer, 19 Kan. 426. This was a civil action for libel, and the state constitution provided that the accused should be acquitted only when the alleged libelous matter, even though true, was published for justifiable ends, which provision was held not to apply to the civil action.

In Mosby v. St. Louis Mut. Ins. Co., 31 Gratt. (Va.) 634, it is said: "If it had been the intention of the legislature to confine the provision to criminal cases alone, it would not have used the words 'the party affected' thereby, but the word accused, or some similar word indicating a criminal offense."

2. Accustomed Way.—Where a deed conveyed a water privilege with the power and appurtenances as they then existed, with the right to rebuild and repair the dam, and to pass and repass, in the use of the same, "over the accustomed way," it was held that the right of way must be regarded as limited to the last accustomed way. Ferriss v. Knowles, 41 Conn. 308.

Accustomed to Bite. (See also the title ANIMALS.)—This formula, used in text-books and in forms given for pleadings, "does not mean that the keeper of a ferocious dog is exempt from all duty of restraint until the dog has effectually mangled or killed at least one person. But, as he is held to be a man of common vigilance and care, if he had good reason to believe, from his knowledge of the ferocious nature and propensity of the dog, that there was ground to apprehend that he would under some circumstances bite a person, then the duty of restraint attached, and to omit it was negligence." Godeau v. Blood, 52 Vt. 251.

Accustomed and Usually.—In Farwell v. Smith, 16 N. J. L. 137, it was held that there was no variance between accustomed to navigate the river and usually navigating the river.

3. Rumford Chemical Works v. Muth, 35 Fed. Rep. 526. And in this case it was held that the name was not meaningless and arbitrary, or such as could be appropriated for a trade-mark.

4. Blythe v. Ayres, 96 Cal. 577. And see this case as to the facts which will constitute the acknowledgment of an illegitimate child within the California Code. See also the titles LEGITIMACY; BASTARDY.

In a Will. (See also the titles HEIR; WILLS.)—"I acknowledge A B to be my heir-at-law," has been held to pass the testator's lands in fee. Parker v. Nickson, 1 De G. J. & S. 177. In giving judgment in this case Lord Westbury said: "Nothing is better settled in our law than that the words 'I make A B my heir,' or 'I declare A B to be my heir,' or even the words 'A B is my heir,' amount to a devise to A B in fee of all the inheritable lands of the testator." See also Taylor v. Webb, Styles 301; Spark v. Purnell, Hob. 75.

Object.—The object of acknowledgment is twofold: first, to entitle a deed to be recorded; and, second, to make it competent evidence without further proof of its execution.²

The Chief Object of a Certificate of Acknowledgment is to admit the deed to registry. It is only where the rights of third persons intervene that recording a deed or other instrument becomes necessary; and due acknowledgment of the instrument, evidenced by a proper certificate thereof, is a condition precedent to registration. Black v. Gregg, 58 Mo. 565.

See further, as to the necessity for acknowledgment in order to admit a deed to record, and the effect of recording an unacknowledged instrument, infra, this title, Origin and Necessity.

Under the Alabama Act of 1828 it was held that in order to admit trust deeds to record it was only necessary that they be proved or acknowledged without regard to the form prescribed by the Act of 1812, which was applicable to absolute deeds only. Hobson v.

Kissam, 8 Ala. 357; followed, though disapproved, in Herbert v. Hanrick, 16 Ala. 581.

Acknowledgment Not Necessary for Recording when Execution is Otherwise Proved.—Texas.—The Texas statute (Sayles' Tex. Civ. Stat., art. 600) making the acknowledgment or proof of execution of a deed by a corporation necessary before such deed can be admitted to record does not affect the validity of a conveyance, the execution of which may be proven otherwise than by the officer's certificate of acknowledgment, or by a subscribing witness, as prescribed by statute. Thus, a conveyance, signed by the president of a railroad company, conveying land certificates issued to the company, was properly recorded, although neither acknowledged nor proven according to the statute. Kimmarle v. Houston, etc., R. Co., 76 Tex. 686. See also infra, this title, Proof by Subscribing Witnesses.

Whether Record Essential to Admission in Evidence.—A deed proved or acknowledged in the manner provided by law is entitled to be received in evidence though it has never been recorded. Keichline v. Keichline, 54 Pa. St. 75. See M'Dill v. M'Dill, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 63; Hamilton v. Galloway, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 93.

It was held in Arkansas that the acknowledgment of the execution of an instrument is not sufficient of itself to authorize the same to be read in evidence. The instrument and certificate of acknowledgment must be recorded. Wilson v. Spring, 38 Ark. 181; Watson v. Billings, 38 Ark. 278, 42 Am. Rep. 1.

Record of Acknowledgment Not Essential.—A sheriff's deed having indorsed upon it the clerk's certificate of acknowledgment taken in open court, may be read in evidence without producing the record entry of the acknowledgment. Chandler v. Bailey, 89 Mo. 641.

Where the validity of a deed as against third parties was contested on the ground that the record thereof failed to show any acknowledgment, it was held that the deed itself, purporting to have been regularly acknowledged and properly certified, was admissible in evidence without further proof of execution. Gardner v. Port Blakely Mill Co., 8 Wash. 1.

A Bill of Sale for live stock is inadmissible in evidence under the Idaho Act of 1889, unless acknowledged before an officer authorized to take acknowledgments, and recorded with the county recorder in the same manner as a deed. Ferbrache v. Martin (Idaho, 1893), 32 Pac. Rep. 252.

A Deed with a Defective Certificate of Acknowledgment may be introduced in evidence, but is not conclusive. Gould v. Woodward, 4 Greene (Iowa) 82.

Acknowledgment Insufficient Proof of Execution where Deed is Produced by Grantee—Indiana.

A deed duly acknowledged and recorded is prima facie evidence without further proof of its execution; but it was held in Indiana that when made immediately to the party who produced it, its execution must be proved as if it had not been acknowledged or recorded. Bowser v. Warren, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 522; Mullis v. Cavins, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 77. See Doe v. Vandewater, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 6.

Acknowledgment of Instrument Not Required to be Recorded, Not Proof of Execution.—The acknowledgment and recording of an instrument not required to be recorded does not prove its execution. Stevens v. Irwin, 12 Cal. 306. Dutton v. Ives, 5 Mich. 515; Wing v. McDowell, Walk. (Mich.) 175. See also Carpentier v. Gardiner, 29 Cal. 160; Rushin v. Shields, 11 Ga. 636, 56 Am. Dec. 436; St. John v. Conger, 40 Ill. 535.

Acknowledgment does Not Cure Defects in Execution.—An acknowledgment does not supersede the necessity of the usual formalities of a deed; and where a deed is void for want of signature or other essential part, it is not made good by acknowledgment. Linsley v. Brown, 13 Conn. 192; Koltenbrock v. Craft, 36 Ohio St. 584; Miller v. Ruble, 107 Pa. St. 395.

Unauthorized Sheriff's Deed Not Validated by Acknowledgment.—The acknowledgment of a sheriff's deed cures irregularities in the process or proceedings, but not a want of authority to sell. St. Bartholomew's Church v. Wood, 61 Pa. St. 96. In delivering the opinion of the court in this case Agnew, J., said: "This was very fully proved by Gibson, C. J., and decided in Cash v. Tozer, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 527, and again considered in Shields v. Miltenberger, 14 Pa. St. 78, where Judge Bell, in an exhaustive opinion, discusses all the authorities and arrives at the same conclusion, that the acknowledgment affirms a voidable but not a void sale. This case was followed by McFee v. Harris, 25 Pa. St. 102, delivered at the same term with Spragg v. Shriver, 25 Pa. St. 282, 64 Am. Dec. 698; and the same judge (Lewis, C. J.), citing Shields v. Miltenberger, 14 Pa. St. 79, says: 'After acknowledgment of the sheriff's deed in open court the title of the sheriff's vendee cannot be affected by mere irregularities, however gross; nothing but fraud in the sale, or a want of authority to sell, can defeat his title.' This makes it very clear Judge Lewis did not intend in Spragg v. Shriver to impute to the acknowledgment the effect sought now to be drawn from his opinion in that case. Gardner v. Sisk, 54 Pa. St. 506, announces the same doctrine, and it certainly should be regarded as now the settled law of the state."

Deed Acknowledged but Not Attested.—It has been held that a deed not attested according to law, but which was subsequently acknowledged, operated when recorded as constructive notice in spite of the want of attestation. Brydon v. Campbell, 40 Md. 331.

Section 27 of the New York Act of 1837 (1 Banks Rev. Stat. N. Y., 7th ed., p. 516), authorizing the loan of certain moneys to the United States deposited with the State of New York, requires mortgages taken on such loans to be executed in the presence of two or more witnesses, who shall subscribe the same as such witnesses. It was held under this act that the reason for an attestation by witnesses fails when the deed is duly acknowledged; and where such mortgage was signed by but one witness, but properly acknowledged, it was held that this was a good execution. U. S. Deposit Fund v. Chase, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 37. See also the title ATTESTATION.

Acknowledgments of Recognizances—Fees of Officer.—Under U. S. Rev. Stat., §§ 828, 847, it has been held that a clerk or a commissioner of the United States courts taking the acknowledgments of parties and sureties to recognizances to appear in court is entitled to only one fee, regardless of the number of persons joining in the same acknowledgment. U. S. v. Ewing, 140 U. S. 142; U. S. v. Barber, 140 U. S. 164; U. S. v. Hall, 147 U. S. 691. But such officer is entitled to separate fees for the oaths of each surety to a recognizance, and the jurors to such oaths. U. S. v. Barber, 140 U. S. 164.

Compare, as to applicability of these sections to recognizances, and necessity for acknowledging such instruments, Strong v. U. S., 34 Fed. Rep. 17; McKinstry v. U. S., 34 Fed. Rep. 211, reversed in 40 Fed. Rep. 813.

ritorial jurisdiction of the officer, his disqualification by reason of interest in the conveyance, his power to amend a defective certificate of acknowledgment, and the effect of the certificate as evidence. The weight of authority seems to be in favor of the view that the act is ministerial, and not judicial.¹ In several of the states, however, the act is regarded as judicial;² and in Missis-

The officer in making the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment acts ministerially, and not judicially. Lewis v. Waters, 3 Har. & M. (Md.) 430.

Why Act Ministerial.—In a case holding that in Massachusetts a justice of the peace might take acknowledgments of conveyances of lands lying outside of his own county, Gray, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "Taking the voluntary acknowledgment of a deed, under our statutes, is a purely ministerial and not a judicial act, nor in any way connected with a judicial proceeding. It may be taken out of the commonwealth by a notary public, who is in no sense a judicial officer. It involves no compulsion or summons of any person who does not appear of his own accord, and rarely, if ever, requires any investigation of the circumstances under which the deed was executed. Even in case of a refusal to acknowledge, the justice, as the law now stands, cannot exercise any coercion over the grantor, or inquire into the reasons of refusal, or receive any testimony to the execution, except from the subscribing witnesses." Learned v. Riley, 14 Allen (Mass.) 109. See also Worcester v. Eaton, 13 Mass. 371, 7 Am. Dec. 155.

In People v. Bartels, 138 Ill. 322, Magruder, C. J., said: "The doctrine that the taking of an acknowledgment is a judicial act, had its origin in the consideration of acknowledgments by married women, where the officer is required to make the privy examination herein referred to; and, as applied to such cases, the doctrine is sound. In Calumet, etc., Canal, etc., Co. v. Russell, 68 Ill. 426, and Kerr v. Russell, 69 Ill. 666, 18 Am. Rep. 634, the acknowledgments were by married women, and the certificates stated that they were examined separate and apart from their husbands, * * * as required by the statute then in force. In those cases the taking of the acknowledgment was correctly held to be a judicial act. But the present statute of this state no longer requires the separate examination of a married woman in order to relinquish her dower or convey her separate estate. She is treated as though she were a feme sole. An ordinary acknowledgment, such as that involved in the present case, cannot be regarded as a judicial act; and those cases which hold that it is a judicial act will be found upon examination to have improperly applied the ruling in regard to acknowledgments by married women where a privy examination is made necessary by statute, to acknowledgments not made by married women, or where there has been no requirement of such an examination."

sippi a distinction has been made between taking the acknowledgment and making the certificate, the former being looked upon as a judicial and the latter as a ministerial act.¹

III. ORIGIN AND NECESSITY—1. Of Statutory Origin.—The practice of acknowledging instruments is a creation of modern statutes, being unknown to the common law. It arose from a desire to prevent fraud and litigation in establishing title to lands, by providing reliable evidence of such title.²

2. How Far Necessary to Validity of Deed.—Acknowledgment has reference to the proof of execution, and not to the force of the deed.³ It is not an essential part of the instrument; and as to the parties and persons with actual notice, neither an imperfect acknowledgment nor a total want of any acknowledgment affects the validity of the conveyance.⁴

In Wasson v. Connor, 54 Miss. 351, the court, by Chalmers, J., said: "It is evident that the taking of an acknowledgment of a grantor is a quasi-judicial act. * * * The officer who takes an acknowledgment acts in a judicial character in determining whether the person representing himself to be, or represented by some one else to be, the grantor named in the conveyance, actually is the grantor. He determines further whether the person thus adjudged to be the grantor does actually and truly acknowledge before him that he executed the instrument." See also Jamison v. Jamison, 3 Whart. 3. In the absence of statute an acknowledgment is unnecessary. An unacknowledged deed executed before there was any statute requiring an acknowledgment may be proved like other writings without an acknowledgment. Stevens v. Griffith, 3 Vt. 448. See also Hill v. Greenwood, 23 U. C. Q. B. 404.

3. Acknowledgment No Part of Deed.—The acknowledgment is no part of the deed itself, but is required by the statute as evidence of execution, or as authority for registration. *Doe v. Acknowledgment is necessary for the admission of the deed to record, but it is not essential to its validity. Acknowledgments Intended to Protect Purchasers and Creditors.—In Sicard v. Davis, 6

third persons of the rights it confers, and is therefore not good against creditors and subsequent purchasers for valuable consideration without notice.¹

Pet. (U. S.) 124, the court by Marshall, C.J., said: "The acknowledgment or the proof which may authorize the admission of the deed to record, and the recording thereof, are provisions which the law makes for the security of creditors and purchasers. They are essential to the validity of the deed, as to persons of that description, not as to the grantor. His estate passes out of him and vests in the grantee, so far as respects himself, as entirely, if the deed be in writing, sealed and delivered, as if it be also acknowledged or attested and proved by three subscribing witnesses, and recorded in the proper court. In a suit between them, such a deed is completely executed, and would be conclusive, although never admitted to record, nor attested by any subscribing witness. Proof of sealing and delivery would alone be required, and the acknowledgment of the fact by the party would be sufficient proof of it." See also Hopping v. Burnam, 2 Greene (Iowa) 39.

Mere Trespasser.—In Missouri an unacknowledged deed is not good against subsequent purchasers without notice, but is valid between the grantee and a mere trespasser. Strickland v. McCormick, 14 Mo. 166.

Plaintiff and Defendant Claiming under Same Unacknowledged Deed.—Where conveyances under which both parties to a suit respecting land claimed were made with reference to a recorded town plat, it was held that the objection that it was not properly acknowledged was of no force. Quinn v. Reimers, 46 Mich. 605. See also Johnstone v. Scott, 11 Mich. 232.

Necessity of Acknowledgment—Miscellaneous Instruments—Map or Plat.—It was held in California that a map or plat is not an instrument affecting the title to real property within the meaning of the statute requiring such instruments to be acknowledged so as to entitle them to be recorded. If deposited in the recorder's office, it may be introduced in evidence without acknowledgment. Colton Land, etc., Co. v. Swartz, 99 Cal. 278.

A Covenant by Adjacent Lot Owners to reserve an open space in front of their lots, and not to build thereon, is not a conveyance within the statutory meaning of that term respecting the acknowledgment of conveyances by married women (1 N. Y. Rev. Stat., p. 758, § 10). It does not purport to grant or convey any estate, and none passes by it, and such a covenant is not affected by defective acknowledgments. Bradley v. Walker (Super. Ct.), 14 N. Y. Supp. 315.

A Lease by the State, of the Surplus Water of Canals, and Lands connected therewith, is not required to be acknowledged under the laws of Ohio, there being no statute in that state requiring state officers to acknowledge deeds and other like instruments executed by them in the performance of their official duties. Emmitt v. Lee, 50 Ohio St. 662, distinguishing Atkinson v. Dailey, 2 Ohio 212.

A Bond of a Commissioner of Sale appointed by a chancery court is valid in West Virginia without being either acknowledged or proven before the clerk. Lytle v. Cozad, 21 W. Va. 183.

As to other instruments requiring acknowledgment, see the titles where those instruments are treated; e.g., CHATTEL MORTGAGES; CONDITIONAL SALES; DEEDS; EASEMENTS; LEASE; MORTGAGES; SHERIFF'S SALES; TAX SALES, etc. See also ASSIGNMENTS; CEMETERIES; DEDICATION.

1. Registration without Acknowledgment is Not Notice.—In most of the states it is held that registration of an unacknowledged or defectively acknowledged instrument without proof of due execution is a mere nullity, and is not notice to creditors and subsequent purchasers of the rights claimed by the grantee.

Deed by Several—Acknowledged by One.—As to the effect of the registration of a deed executed by several grantors and acknowledged by one only, see infra, this title, Who may Make Acknowledgments—Generally.

A Written Contract for the Sale of Land, not acknowledged or filed for record, does not impart constructive notice. Sanford v. Weeks, 38 Kan. 319, 5 Am. St. Rep. 748.

Recording an Unacknowledged Lease of Lands for life does not impart constructive notice. Hoisington v. Hoisington, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 235.

A Deed Not Acknowledged or Recorded is no evidence of seizin or possession in the grantee except as against the grantor and his heirs. Kellogg v. Loomis, 16 Gray (Mass.) 48.

A Sheriff's Certificate for the Sale of Land when recorded will be notice, although not acknowledged, under the California statute requiring such instruments to be recorded, but not providing for their acknowledgment (Cal. Pol. Code, § 4237). Foorman v. Wallace, 75 Cal. 552.

Mortgage—Arkansas.—In Arkansas a mortgage recorded without proper acknowledgment constitutes no lien on the mortgaged property as against a stranger, notwithstanding he may have actual knowledge of its existence. Main v. Alexander, 9 Ark. 112, 47 Am. Dec. 732; Hannah v. Carrington, 18 Ark. 105; Jacoway v. Gault, 20 Ark. 190, 73 Am. Dec. 494; Haskill v. Sevier, 25 Ark. 152; *Martin v. Chattel Mortgage—Illinois—Colorado.—It is so held as to chattel mortgages in Illinois under the statute requiring such instruments to be acknowledged and recorded (Starr & Curtis Illinois Annot., Stat. 1630). Forest v. Tinkham, 29 Ill. 141; Porter v. Dement, 35 Ill. 478; Frank v. Miner, 50 Ill. 444; Sage v. Browning, 51 Ill. 217 (explaining Hathorn v. Lewis, 22 Ill. 395); Long v. Cockern, 128 Ill. 29. The law is the same in Colorado as to chattel mortgages, unless possession of the personal property be delivered to and remain with the mortgagee. Crane v. Chandler, 5 Colo. 21; Wilcox v. Jackson, 7 Colo. 521. See 1 Mills Colo. Annot. Stat. (1891), § 385.

Unacknowledged Deed Good against One Not a Purchaser for Value.—One not a purchaser for value cannot avail himself of a defective the parties thereto;¹ and except where changed by recent statutes, this is the general rule in case of deeds executed by married women.²

Constructive Notice.—In a few states, statutes have been enacted by which the recording of an unacknowledged deed is made to impart constructive notice to third persons.³

acknowledgment. Moore v. Little Rock, 42 Ark. 66; Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 165; Chouteau v. Burlando, 20 Mo. 482; Bishop v. Schneider, 46 Mo. 472, 2 Am. Rep. 533; *Mastin v. ENCYC. OF LAW, 1st ed., 154, 158); McCaskle v. Amarine, 12 Ala. 17.

The grantor's heirs and their grantees are not such purchasers. Strough v. Wilder, 119 N. Y. 530.

Actual Notice.—Nor can a person having actual notice of the existence of the deed take advantage of a defective acknowledgment. Le Moynes v. Braden, 87 Iowa 739; Johnson v. Badger Mill, etc., Co., 13 Nev. 351; Irwin v. Welch, 10 Neb. 479; Parker v. Wood, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 436.

If the subsequent grantee had seen the record an unauthorized record would operate as notice. Musgrove v. Bonser, 5 Oregon 313, 20 Am. Rep. 737. See also Sumner v. Rhodes, 14 Conn. 135; Musick v. Barney, 49 Mo. 458.

Correction by Recording Officer.—Where the record of a deed was improper on account of a defective certificate of acknowledgment, it was held that it did not impart constructive notice although the certificate was corrected by the clerk in making the record. Newman v. Samuels, 17 Iowa 528.

1. Acknowledgment Held Essential to Pass Title.—In Alabama a deed without a subscribing witness, or a certificate of acknowledgment, is inoperative as a conveyance of the legal title to lands. Hendon v. White, 52 Ala. 597; Lord v. Folmar, 57 Ala. 615; Stewart v. Beard, 69 Ala. 470; Doe v. Richardson, 76 Ala. 329; Chadwick v. Carson, 78 Ala. 116; Caperton v. Hall, 83 Ala. 171. See also Kentucky Bank v. Jones, 59 Ala. 123; Eureka Lumber Co. v. Brown (Ala., 1894), 15 So. Rep. 518.

In Ohio unacknowledged or defectively acknowledged deeds have been held insufficient to convey title. Roads v. Symmes, 1 Ohio 281, 13 Am. Dec. 621; Richardson v. Bates, 8 Ohio St. 257; Smith v. Hunt, 13 Ohio 260, 42 Am. Dec. 201; Hout v. Hout, 20 Ohio St. 119; Reynolds v. Clark, Wright (Ohio) 656.

Unacknowledged Deed Good as a Contract.—But while such an instrument does not pass the legal title, if fair and just and founded on a valuable and adequate consideration, in the absence of a superior equity, it may be enforced in equity as a contract to convey. Caperton v. Hall, 83 Ala. 171; Pollard v. Maddox, 28 Ala. 321; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Boykin, 76 Ala. 560; Reynolds v. Clark, Wright (Ohio) 656. See also Eureka Lumber Co. v. Brown (Ala., 1894), 15 So. Rep. 518.

Where a deed executed by husband and wife was defectively acknowledged by the wife, and therefore inoperative to convey the legal title, it was held in Virginia that the deed might be good as an executory contract and enforced in equity. Virginia Coal, etc., Co. v. Roberson, 88 Va. 116; Clinch River Veneer Co. v. Kurth, 88 Va. 222.

In Washington a deed not sealed or acknowledged is good as a contract, and will pass the equitable title. Edson v. Knox, 8 Wash. 642.

2. See infra, this title, Who may Make Acknowledgments—Married Women.

3. Recording Unacknowledged Deed Made Notice by Statute—Alabama.—Under Alabama Code 1886, § 1797, the recording in the proper office of any conveyances of property which may be legally admitted to record operates as notice of the contents of the conveyance without any acknowledgment or probate thereof. Merritt v. Phenix, 48 Ala. 87; Bickley v. Keenan, 60 Ala. 293.

Illinois.—The law in this state relating to the record of deeds and other instruments affecting real estate differs materially from that of nearly every other state in the Union. The statute is as follows: "Deeds, mortgages, and other instruments of writing relating to real estate shall be deemed, from the time of being filed for record, notice to subsequent purchasers and creditors; though not acknowledged or proven according to law; but the same shall not be read as evidence unless their execution be proved in manner required by the rules of evidence applicable to such writings, so as to supply the defects of such acknowledgment or proof." Illinois Annot. Stat. 1885, c. 30, par. 32, § 31. See Carpenter v. Dexter, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 513; Gillispie v. Reed, 3 McLean (U. S.) 377; Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 32; Reed v. Kemp, 16 Ill. 445.

Under the Illinois Act of 1822, a conveyance made and acknowledged in another state would be admissible to record in Illinois, but if not so acknowledged, registration in the latter state would not be notice. By the Act of 1837, a recorded deed is notice without acknowledgment or proof. Choteau v. Jones, 11 Ill. 300, 50 Am. Dec. 460; Deininger v. McConnel, 41 Ill. 227.

This is not the law as to deeds of chattel mortgages. They must be acknowledged and recorded in order to be notice. Illinois Annot. Stat. 1885, c. 95, par. 1; Davis v. Ransom, 18 Ill. 396; Hunt v. Bullock, 23 Ill. 320; Henderson v. Morgan, 26 Ill. 432; Forest v. Tinkham, 29 Ill. 141; Porter v. Dement, 35 Ill. 478; Frank v. Miner, 50 Ill. 444; Sage v. Browning, 51 Ill. 217; Long v. Cockern, 128 Ill. 29.

Kansas.—Under the former laws of Kansas, the record of an unacknowledged deed was notice to subsequent purchasers. Simpson

IV. WHO MAY TAKE ACKNOWLEDGMENTS—1. In General—a. COMPETENCY DEPENDS ON STATUTE.—As has been already stated, the practice of taking acknowledgments is regulated entirely by statute. Each state has enacted statutes prescribing the forms to be observed in taking and certifying acknowledgments, and designating the officers by whom acknowledgments of conveyances affecting property situated within its limits may be taken, both within the state and in other states and foreign countries. While there is a general uniformity in these statutory regulations, the statutes of the several states vary considerably in matters of detail, both as to the officers who may take acknowledgments and the formalities to be observed. For these details and peculiarities of local legislation, reference must be made to the statutes of the respective states.

b. CIRCUMSTANCES AFFECTING QUALIFICATION OF OFFICER—(1) Interest.—It is a general rule that an officer who is a party to a conveyance or interested therein may not take the acknowledgment of the grantor, and an acknowledgment so taken would be a nullity so far as third persons are concerned.¹

v. Mundee, 3 Kan. 166; affirmed in Brown v. Simpson, 4 Kan. 64.

Michigan.—The record of a deed defectively acknowledged is not evidence of the original instrument, but if the instrument is made in good faith for valuable consideration, and intended to be a conveyance, the record is made by statute to operate as notice of the rights the deed conveys. Brown v. McCormick, 28 Mich. 215.

But the record cannot be changed to conform to a subsequent acknowledgment. Burton v. Martz, 38 Mich. 761.

See further, infra, this title, Curing Defective Acknowledgments—By Statute.

1. An Officer Who is Grantee or Mortgagee in a conveyance or mortgage is disqualified to take the acknowledgment of the instrument. Hogans v. Carruth, 18 Fla. 587; West v. Krebaum, 88 Ill. 263; Hubble v. Wright, 23 Ind. 322; Wilson v. Traer, 20 Iowa 231; Beaman v. Whitney, 20 Me. 413; Groesbeck v. Seeley, 13 Mich. 329; Laprad v. Sherwood, 79 Mich. 520; Wasson v. Connor, 54 Miss. 351; Hainey v. Alberry, 73 Mo. 427. See also Bennett v. Shipley, 82 Mo. 448; Hannah v. Davis, 112 Mo. 599.

See also Wells v. Wood, 28 Kan. 400; Freeman v. Person, 106 N. Car. 251; Benson Bank v. Hove, 45 Minn. 40.

As to the validity between the parties of an instrument so acknowledged, see supra, this title, Origin and Necessity.

A clerk is not empowered to act as judge in any matter affecting his personal interest, and where the clerk of the superior court adjudged the certificate of acknowledgment of an instrument to which he was a party to be in due form, admitted the instrument to probate, and ordered registration, it was held that such registration was unauthorized and invalid as to third parties. White v. Connelly, 105 N. Car. 65; Turner v. Connelly, 105 N. Car. 72; Freeman v. Person, 106 N. Car. 257.

Where the Only Officers Competent to Take Acknowledgments are Interested Parties.—The acknowledgment of a mortgage taken before a justice of the peace, who was also the mortgagee, is void as to third parties, notwithstanding the fact that he is the only justice in the township qualified to take acknowledgments. In such a case the parties would be remitted to their rights at common law. Hammers v. Dole, 61 Ill. 307. See Brereton v. Bennett, 15 Colo. 254.

But where the county clerk and his deputies were the only persons authorized to take acknowledgments of deeds, it was held in Kentucky that the clerk might take the acknowledgment of a deed in which he was the grantee. Stevenson v. Brasher, 90 Ky. 23.

Under the North Carolina statute (Rev. Code, c. 37, § 2) allowing a deputy clerk to take the probate of a deed, the fact that the clerk was grantee was held not to invalidate a probate so taken. Piland v. Taylor, 113 N. Car. 1.

Mortgage Sale by Deputy Sheriff—Acknowledgment by Sheriff.—Under the Michigan statute (Mich. Rev. Stat., §§ 8501, 8505) providing that a mortgage sale may be made by a sheriff or his deputy, and the deed be executed by the officer who makes the sale, a deed executed by the deputy making such a sale may be acknowledged before the sheriff who is also a notary. Cook v. Foster, 96 Mich. 610.

It is no objection to a sheriff's deed that it was acknowledged in the court of which one of the grantees was judge. Lewis v. Curry, 74 Mo. 49.

An Officer Who is Trustee in a Deed of Trust may not take the acknowledgment of the deed. Green v. Abraham, 43 Ark. 420; Darst v. Dale, 83 Ill. 136; Stevens v. Hampton, 46 Mo. 404; Dail v. Moore, 51 Mo. 589; Black v. Gregg, 58 Mo. 565; Brown v. Moore, 38 Tex. 645; Rothschild v. Daugher, 85 Tex. 332; Clinch River Veneer Co. v. Kurth, 88 Va. 222; Bowden v. Parrish, 86 Va. 67 (citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.), p. 145). See also Corey v. Moore, 86 Va. 721; Tavener v. Barrett, 21 W. Va. 658.

Where a deed of trust was acknowledged before a trustee, but its execution was duly proved, it was held that it was good between the parties and those claiming under them,

(2) Relationship.—It is generally held that the acknowledgment of a deed is not invalidated by the fact that the officer taking it is related to the parties to the instrument. The courts so holding have usually based their decisions upon the ground that the officer taking acknowledgments acts ministerially, and not judicially.¹

(3) Officer also Attesting Witness.—An officer who is an attesting witness and might be read in evidence. Bennett v. Shipley, 82 Mo. 448.

The acknowledgment of a deed of foreclosure made by a sheriff as trustee under a deed of trust may be taken by a notary who is also deputy sheriff. Ewing v. Vannewitz, 8 Mo. App. 602.

Where a deed, originally drawn so as to include a notary as beneficiary, was changed for acknowledgment so as to make the notary a trustee, it was held that the notary was not qualified thereby to take the acknowledgment, and the deed so acknowledged was invalid as to all persons without actual notice. Haney v. Alberry (Mo., 1880), 12 Cent. L. J. 39.

In Fredericksburg Nat. Bank v. Conway, 1 Hughes (U. S.) 37, it was held that a notary who was one of the beneficiaries under a deed of trust might take the grantor's acknowledgment.

An Officer Who is Bound to Make Title through a third person is so far interested in the conveyance as to be disqualified to take the acknowledgment of the wife of the grantor. Withers v. Baird, 7 Watts (Pa.) 227, 32 Am. Dec. 754.

Officer Who is Grantor.—The grantor in a deed cannot take his own acknowledgment of it before himself in his official capacity. Davis v. Beazley, 75 Va. 491. See also Penn v. Garvin, 56 Ark. 511.

Officer Who is Attorney or Agent of Grantor.—A notary who identifies himself with the transaction by placing his name on the face of a deed of trust as the avowed agent of one of the parties cannot acknowledge the instrument. Sample v. Irwin, 45 Tex. 567.

A notary who is also attorney for the mortgagor cannot take his client's acknowledgment of the mortgage. Nichols v. Hampton, 46 Ga. 253. Compare Bierer v. Fretz, 32 Kan. 329.

A notary who acted as agent of a mortgagor in obtaining the loan secured by the mortgage is not so interested as to be disqualified to take the acknowledgment of the mortgage. Penn v. Garvin, 56 Ark. 511.

The acknowledgment of a mortgage is not invalidated by the fact that the officer before whom it was made negotiated the loan secured by the mortgage, and was a partner of the mortgagee, there being no evidence to show that he was a party in interest. Brereton v. Bennett, 15 Colo. 254.

A married woman's acknowledgment taken by a notary who was the attorney of her husband, but not beneficially interested in the deed, his name nowhere appearing on the face of the instrument as the agent of either of the parties, is valid. Kutch v. Holley, 77 Tex. 220; Romanes v. Fraser, 16 Grant Ch. (Canada) 97.

Mortgage to Firm, Acknowledged before Partner.—The acknowledgment of a chattel mortgage, made to a partnership, before a notary who is one of the partners, is void as to third persons without actual notice. City Bank v. Radtke, 87 Iowa 363.

Preferred Creditor.—The attempted acknowledgment of a trust deed before a notary who is a preferred creditor therein, being taken before an officer disqualified to act, is a nullity, and is not cured by probate before the county clerk upon such acknowledgment and subsequent registration. Long v. Crews, 113 N. Car. 256 (citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.), p. 145, note 6); Baxter v. Howell (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 26 S. W. Rep. 453. See also White v. Connelly, 105 N. Car. 65; Tittle v. Vanleer (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 27 S. W. Rep. 736.

A Person Owning an Undivided Interest in a tract of land is not thereby disqualified to take in his official capacity the acknowledgment of a deed conveying a separate and distinct interest in the same land to a third party. Dussaume v. Burnett, 5 Iowa 95.

1. Acknowledgment before Officer Related to Parties.—Penn v. Garvin, 56 Ark. 511; Gibson v. Norway Sav. Bank, 69 Me. 579. See Wilson v. Traer, 20 Iowa 231.

A commissioner of deeds may take the acknowledgment of a deed although so related to the makers as to be disqualified to act as judge or juror in a trial where they are parties. Lynch v. Livingston, 6 N. Y. 422.

A justice of the peace may take the acknowledgment of a deed in which his father is grantor and his wife grantee. Remington Paper Co. v. O'Dougherty, 81 N. Y. 474. See Welsh v. Lewis, 71 Ga. 387.

But wherever the officer is beneficially interested, the acknowledgment of a relative would be void on that ground. So the acknowledgment of a deed before the husband of the grantee is void. Jones v. Porter, 59 Miss. 628. Compare Kimball v. Johnson, 14 Wis. 674, in which the acknowledgment of a mortgage before the husband of the mortgagee was held valid.

A notary who is the attorney and nephew of a party to a deed is not so interested as to be disqualified to take the acknowledgment of the deed. Helena First Nat. Bank v. Roberts, 9 Mont. 323.

Disqualification Not Appearing on Instrument.—Where it did not appear from the instrument that the officer was disqualified to act by reason of interest, it was held that the instrument was entitled to record, and that the record was notice to subsequent creditors and encumbrancers. Benson Bank v. Hove, 45 Minn. 40. See also Heilbrun v. Hammond, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 474; Banks v. Ollerton, 26 Eng. L. & Eq. 508.

to a deed is not for that reason incompetent to take the acknowledgment of its execution.¹

(4) De Facto and Ex Officio Officers.—An acknowledgment taken by a de facto officer is valid, and cannot be questioned in a collateral proceeding.² Where a person holding one office is also ex officio an officer authorized to take acknowledgments, acknowledgments taken by him are valid.³

1. Acknowledgment before Attesting Witness.

—A clerk may take the acknowledgment of a deed to which he is an attesting witness. Trenwith v. Smallwood, 111 N. Car. 132.

A notary public who is the officer of a corporation and whose duty it is to countersign and register its deeds, and whose signature is not essential to their validity, and is of no more effect than the signature of a witness, may take the acknowledgment of a deed signed by himself. Sawyer v. Cox, 63 Ill. 130. See also Winsted Sav. Bank, etc., Assoc. v. Spencer, 26 Conn. 195.

An acknowledgment before a commissioner who is also an attesting witness is valid. Baird v. Evans, 58 Ga. 350. See also Hall v. Redson, 10 Mich. 21.

Where the Mortgagee was the Identifying Witness before the commissioner taking the acknowledgment of the mortgage, it was held that the acknowledgment was defective, and no proof of execution. Goodhue v. Berrien, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 630.

2. De Facto Officer may Take Acknowledgments.—Davidson v. State, 135 Ind. 254; Brown v. Lunt, 37 Me. 423; Farmers', etc., Bank v. Chester, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 458, 44 Am. Dec. 318; Thompson v. Johnson, 84 Tex. 548; Bullene v. Garrison, 1 Wash. Ter. 587. See also Thompson v. Johnson, 84 Tex. 548.

Officer with Defective Commission.—An acknowledgment taken by a de facto officer is good and sufficient in a collateral proceeding although there may have been a defect in his commission. Hamilton v. Pitcher, 53 Mo. 334.

Alien Officer.—Where a duly commissioned notary public was disqualified to hold such office on account of his being an alien, it was held that he was nevertheless a de facto officer, and that acknowledgments taken by him were valid, and could not be impeached collaterally. Wilson v. Kimmel, 109 Mo. 260.

Officer pro Tempore.—An acknowledgment taken by one describing himself in his certificate as clerk pro tempore is good. It is sufficient if the person taking acknowledgments is a clerk de facto without reference to the temporary character of his appointment. Woodruff v. McHarry, 56 Ill. 218. See also Cocke v. Halsey, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 71.

Officer Removing to Another State.—Where a justice of the peace, commissioned for and residing in New Hampshire, moved with his family to Maine, but continued to transact business in the former state, where he still had his office, it was held that he was an officer de facto, and acknowledgments taken by him were good, and could not be inquired into in proceedings to which he was not a party. Prescott v. Hayes, 42 N. H. 56.

Officer of an Unrecognised Government.—The acknowledgment of a deed taken by a county clerk placed in office by the "Provisional Government of Kentucky," a government not recognized as de facto by the United States or the State of Kentucky, was held invalid. Simpson v. Loving, 3 Bush (Ky.) 458, 96 Am. Dec. 252.

Acknowledgment before an Officer after the Expiration of His Term.—An acknowledgment taken by a person ten months after the expiration of his commission as notary public is void, such officer being neither a de jure nor a de facto officer. Bernier v. Becker, 37 Ohio St. 72.

But in Brown v. Lunt, 37 Me. 423, an acknowledgment taken by a justice of the peace after the expiration of his commission was held valid, it appearing that he had frequently acted as justice until after he took the acknowledgment, believing that he was still qualified, and the parties to the deed knowing well that he so acted. See also Parker v. Wood, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 436; New Hampshire Land Co. v. Tilton, 19 Fed. Rep. 73.

After Resignation.—An acknowledgment purporting to have been taken by a clerk of court, and attested by the seal of the court, is not invalidated by the production of a record entry showing that he had resigned, where there is nothing to show when the resignation took effect or that his successor had assumed the duties of the office prior to the time when the acknowledgment was taken. Macey v. Stark, 116 Mo. 481; Macey v. Pitillo, (Mo., 1893), 21 S. W. Rep. 1004.

After the Abolition of His Office.—Where the incumbent of the office of county judge became, under a statute abolishing that office, ex officio county auditor and clerk of the board of supervisors, such officers not being authorized to take acknowledgments, it was held that his power to take acknowledgments ceased with the abolition of his office as judge. Goodykoontz v. Olsen, 54 Iowa 174. See also the title DE FACTO OFFICERS.

3. Acknowledgment before Ex-officio Officer.—An acknowledgment of a conveyance of a wife's paraphernal property, made by husband and wife in Texas in 1837, before an officer describing himself as chief justice and ex officio notary public, was held good. Harvey v. Hill, 7 Tex. 591.

Under the Texas Act of 1841, the acknowledgment of a power of attorney before a primary judge who was by the law of that state ex officio notary public, was sufficient to admit the deed to record without other acknowledgment or proof. Butler v. Dunagan, 19 Tex. 559. See also Dennistoun v. Potts, 26 Miss. 13; Doe v. Mosher, 15 New Bruns. 355.

A deed to land in Texas, acknowledged in Louisiana before an officer in that state styling himself recorder and ex officio notary public, is admissible in evidence in Texas. Willson v. Simpson, 68 Tex. 306.

(5) Deputy.—A deputy appointed under proper authority may take acknowledgments for his principal;¹ and while it is undoubtedly more regular in

Under the Alabama statutory provisions regulating the proof and acknowledgment of conveyances and powers of attorney in other states, the acknowledgment of a power of attorney taken in Texas by an officer describing himself in his certificate as justice of the peace and ex officio notary public is sufficient to render the deed admissible in evidence in Alabama. Goree v. Wadsworth, 91 Ala. 416.

Under the laws of Vermont authorizing a justice of the peace to take acknowledgments of deeds, it was held that an acknowledgment before a judge of a supreme court of that state was good, although he failed to designate himself in his certificate as justice of the peace, the constitution of the state making such judge ex officio justice of the peace. Middlebury College v. Cheney, 1 Vt. 336. See also Touchard v. Crow, 20 Cal. 150, 81 Am. Dec. 108.

Where a deed to property in Virginia was acknowledged before two aldermen of New York City, and their certificate described them as aldermen, but did not state further that they were justices of the peace, it was held that the deed was properly admitted to record in Virginia. Welles v. Cole, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 645.

Certificate of Conformity.—Under the New York statute authorizing deeds executed and acknowledged in other states to be recorded when accompanied by a certificate of a county clerk that the acknowledgment was made in conformity with local laws, it was held, where such certificate purported to be by a clerk of the circuit court, that the recording officer properly refused to admit the deed to record, and that he was not required to consult the laws of the state where the acknowledgment was made, to ascertain that a clerk of a circuit court was there ex officio clerk of the county court. People v. Register, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 180. See also the title EX OFFICIO.

1. Acknowledgment Taken by Deputy—Alabama.—Kemp v. Porter, 7 Ala. 138.

California.—Emmal v. Webb, 36 Cal. 197.

Illinois.—Hope v. Sawyer, 14 Ill. 254.

Iowa.—Abrams v. Ervin, 9 Iowa 87; Grea-sons v. Davis, 9 Iowa 219.

Kansas.—Babbitt v. Johnson, 15 Kan. 252.

Kentucky.—Talbott v. Hooser, 12 Bush (Ky.) 408; Drye v. Cook, 14 Bush (Ky.) 459.

Mississippi.—McRaven v. McGuire, 9 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 34 (affirmed on this point in 23 Miss. 100).

Missouri.—Gibbons v. Gentry, 20 Mo. 468; Springer v. McSpadden, 49 Mo. 299; Small v. Field, 102 Mo. 104.

New York.—Lynch v. Livingston, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 463.

North Carolina.—Coltrane v. Lamb, 109 N. Car. 209; Piland v. Taylor, 113 N. Car. 1.

Tennessee.—Farmers', etc., Bank v. Chester, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 458, 44 Am. Dec. 318.

Texas.—Rose v. Newman, 26 Tex. 131, 80 Am. Dec. 646; Cook v. Knott, 28 Tex. 85;

Frizzell v. Johnson, 30 Tex. 31 (the last three cases overruling a dictum to the contrary in Miller v. Thatcher, 9 Tex. 482, 60 Am. Dec. 172); Wert v. Schneider, 64 Tex. 327; Thompson v. Johnson, 84 Tex. 548.

See also Wood v. James (Ky., 1888). 9 S. W. Rep. 513; Gordon v. Leach, 81 Ky. 229; Jefferson County Bldg. Assoc. v. Heil, 81 Ky. 513; Ralston v. Moore, 83 Ky. 571; Ansaldia v. Schwing, 81 Tex. 198; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Carter, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 675. Compare Tatom v. White, 95 N. Car. 453.

In Abrams v. Ervin, 9 Iowa 87, a certificate of acknowledgment signed by "J. S. D., clerk, by J. W. W., deputy," was held good. The court, by Stockton, J., said: "From the certificate in this case it may fairly be presumed that the deed was acknowledged before the clerk and his name signed by the deputy. Without regard to his principal it is not intended to be held that the deputy has any power. It might be doubted whether a certificate that the deed was acknowledged before the deputy, and signed with his own name, without showing his principal, would be good. The taking and certifying the acknowledgment of a deed is, however, so far a ministerial act, that it may be done by the deputy in the name of the principal, as other acts of a ministerial nature are authorized to be performed by him."

A deed of trust to secure a debt due to a firm of which the county clerk was a member was properly acknowledged before his deputy. Tipton v. Jones, 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 564.

Presumption as to Authority and Appointment of Deputy.—The certificate of acknowledgment of a deed to land in Illinois, made in Missouri and signed "A. B., clerk, by C. D., deputy clerk," and authenticated by the seal of a court of record, is prima facie sufficient, the presumption being that the clerk was authorized by the laws of Missouri to take acknowledgments through a deputy, and that the deputy was regularly appointed as such. Hope v. Sawyer, 14 Ill. 254. See also Piper v. Chippewa Iron Co., 51 Minn. 495, 499; Small v. Field, 102 Mo. 104.

Where a deed to land in Florida is acknowledged in another state before a deputy clerk of a court, signing himself as such, and affixing his seal of office, it will be presumed, prima facie, that his appointment as deputy clerk was valid. Summer v. Mitchell, 29 Fla. 179. See also Coltrane v. Lamb, 109 N. Car. 209; Piland v. Taylor, 113 N. Car. 1. See, as to certificate of probate by unauthorized deputy, Suddereth v. Smyth, 13 Ired. (N. Car.) 452.

A certificate of acknowledgment purporting to be taken by a clerk, but signed by the deputy as deputy, is valid, the law presuming that the acknowledgment was made before the clerk, and that he authorized the deputy to sign the certificate. Ament v. Brennan, 1 Tenn. Ch. 431.

A Deputy Recorder, in some states, may point of form for the acknowledgment to be taken in the name of the principal,¹ acknowledgments taken by a deputy, in his own name as deputy, without naming the principal, have been held good in some jurisdictions.²

take acknowledgments in the name of his principal. Muller v. Boggs, 25 Cal. 175; Stewart v. Perkins, 110 Mo. 660.

Kentucky—Deputy Clerk.—The Kentucky Act of 1854 (Gen. Stat. 1888, c. 24, § 38) provides that "if the deputy of any county clerk shall take the acknowledgment of a deed or other instrument of writing, and indorse a memorandum thereof on such deed or instrument of writing, but shall fail from any cause to write out and sign the certificate thereof, it shall be lawful for the clerk to write out and sign the certificate, setting forth in such certificate the facts, including the indorsement, and thereupon record such deed or instrument and certificate, and the deed or instrument and the certificate shall be as good and effectual as if certified and signed by such deputy." It was held under this act, where the clerk set forth in his certificate the fact of acknowledgment, but failed to include the indorsement by the deputy, or to state that an indorsement had been made by the deputy, that the certificate was fatally defective. Franklin v. Becker, 11 Bush (Ky.) 595; Waters v. Davis (Ky., 1887), 2 S. W. Rep. 695.

See also, for the further construction of this provision, McCormack v. Woods, 14 Bush (Ky.) 73; Drye v. Cook, 14 Bush (Ky.) 463; Gordon v. Leech, 81 Ky. 229; Jefferson County Bldg. Assoc. v. Heil, 81 Ky. 514; Ralston v. Moore, 83 Ky. 571; Wood v. James, 87 Ky. 511; Withers v. Pugh, 91 Ky. 522.

Signature by Deputy Not Essential.—A certificate of acknowledgment in the regular form, purporting to have been signed in person by B. M. H., clerk of the county court, but in fact taken by R. E. H., a regularly appointed and qualified deputy, though a minor, was held good, notwithstanding the deputy failed to sign his own name as deputy. Talbot v. Hooser, 12 Bush (Ky.) 414.

Statutory Change.—The Kentucky Act of 1884 provides: "No conveyance of real estate heretofore made by a married woman or other person shall be adjudged to be void or invalid because of a failure by the county clerk to incorporate in his certificate to such conveyance the indorsement of acknowledgment which may have been made by his deputy thereon." Kentucky Statutes 1894, § 571. This act does not apply to acknowledgments upon which there has already been a judgment. Ralston v. Moore, 83 Ky. 571. But it may be applied to cure a defective acknowledgment upon which suit was brought before the passage of the act. Edmunds v. Leavell (Ky., 1887), 3 S. W. Rep. 134.

See also infra, this title, Curing Defective Acknowledgments—By Statute.

1. McCraven v. Doe, 23 Miss. 100. See Summer v. Mitchell, 29 Fla. 179.

In Beuley v. Curtis, 92 Ky. 505, Holt, C. J., said: "Undoubtedly the proper course for a deputy is to act in the name of his principal. He should always do so. * * *

Any official act done by him should be done in the name of his principal. In certifying the acknowledgment or recording of a deed it should be in the name of the clerk, by him as the deputy. The authority given by law to a ministerial officer is to the incumbent of the office. It is not to the deputy, but to the principal, and is exercised by the latter by himself or deputy."

Compare Beaumont v. Yeatman, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 542. In this case Turley, J., said: "How this acknowledgment of the execution of the mortgage made before the deputy clerk could have been taken in the name of the principal clerk, it seems very difficult to conceive. How would the entry of the acknowledgment be indorsed? 'This day personally appeared before A B the principal clerk of the County Court of Montgomery, by his deputy C D.' This is not so; for an appearance before the deputy is not an appearance before the principal, and cannot possibly be. Well, let us see again: 'This day personally appeared before A B the deputy, and acknowledged to C D the principal.' This will not do, for an acknowledgment to A B is not and cannot be an acknowledgment to C D; it not being a case where the acknowledgment inures upon the relation of principal and agent, there being nothing acknowledged for the benefit of the principal. Well, again: 'This day personally appeared before A B the principal clerk C D, and acknowledged. Test, E F, deputy.' This is not true; the appearance was not before A B, the principal, but E F, the deputy; and if it had been before the principal, the principal must have certified. Then it seems to us that an acknowledgment of deed can only be taken in the name of the person before whom the acknowledgment is made, and that there is no sense in talking about taking it in the name of a person before whom it is not made. It is true the signature to the certificate might be A B principal clerk, by his deputy C D; but cui bono? The signature by the deputy binds the principal to nothing; it is not like a contract, where the agent must bind the principal by his signature, or there is no obligation on his part; the act is merely ministerial on the part of the deputy, and is good by law, independent of the statute, which makes no new rule, except it be (as is contended) by implication." See also MacKenzie v. Jackson, 82 Ga. 80.

2. Deputy may Take Acknowledgments in His Own Name.—Touchard v. Crow, 20 Cal. 150, 81 Am. Dec. 108; Waddingham v. Dickson, 17 Colo. 223; Summer v. Mitchell, 29 Fla. 179; Moore v. Farrow, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 41; Willamette Falls Canal, etc., Co. v. Gordon, 6 Oregon 175; Beaumont v. Yeatman, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 542; Herndon v. Reed, 82 Tex. 647; Ballard v. Carmichael, 83 Tex. 355, overruling, as to power of deputy to take acknowledgments, a dictum in Miller v. Thatcher, 9 Tex. 482, 60 Am. Dec. 172.

c. EXTRA-TERRITORIAL AUTHORITY OF OFFICER.—In the absence of statutory provision, the question as to the validity of acknowledgments taken by an officer outside of the territorial division within which his commission runs will be determined mainly by the position taken by the court before which the question arises as to whether the act of taking acknowledgments is ministerial or judicial. The courts which have denied the validity of such acknowledgments are generally those holding that the act is judicial, and as such incapable of being performed without the officer's jurisdiction. Most courts, however, consider the act as a ministerial one, personal to the officer taking the acknowledgments, and therefore valid, although performed beyond the officer's appropriate territorial jurisdiction.¹

And in Some Jurisdictions must Use His Own Name.—It has been held in several instances that where a deputy clerk certifies an instrument he must certify over his own name, and not that of his principal. MacKenzie v. Jackson, 82 Ga. 80; Beaumont v. Yeatman, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 542. See also the title DEPUTY.

1. Extra-territorial Acknowledgments Held Valid — Arkansas.—A justice of the peace may take acknowledgments anywhere within the state, and so an acknowledgment of a deed conveying land in one county may be taken by a justice of the peace of another county. Biscoe v. Byrd, 15 Ark. 655.

California.—A justice of the peace may take an acknowledgment in his own county of a conveyance of lands lying in another county. Colton v. Seavy, 22 Cal. 496.

Illinois.—Notaries public appointed in towns and cities are county officers, and may take acknowledgments anywhere within the limits of the county. Hill v. Bacon, 43 Ill. 477.

It was held under the act in force in Illinois in 1872 that a notary public might take acknowledgments in a different county from that in which he resided. Guertin v. Mombleau, 144 Ill. 32. See also Harding v. Curtis, 45 Ill. 252; Hardin v. Kirk, 49 Ill. 153, 95 Am. Dec. 581; Doe v. Miles, 3 Ill. 315.

Iowa.—A deed conveying lands in one county may be acknowledged before any officer in the state who is authorized to take acknowledgments. Henderson v. Robinson, 76 Iowa 603. See also Buckley v. Early, 72 Iowa 289.

Kentucky.—Since the passage of the Kentucky Act of 1810, clerks of county courts may take the acknowledgment or proof of deeds regardless of the county in which the land lies, and such deeds may be recorded in the proper county. Moore v. Farrow, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 41; Ford v. Gregory, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 175. But they had no such power prior to the passage of that act. McCulloch v. Myers, 1 Dana (Ky.) 522; Hedger v. Ward, 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 106.

The clerk of a district court was authorized to take the acknowledgment of deeds conveying lands within the district only. Dickerson v. Talbot, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 49.

Maryland.—A deed by a citizen of the District of Columbia conveying land lying in Somerset county, Maryland, acknowledged in Prince George county before an officer represented to be the chief judge of the first judicial district in Maryland, was admitted to be read in evidence without further evidence of the officer's authority to take acknowledgments. Teackle v. Nicols, 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 574.

A deed conveying land in Maryland, acknowledged by the grantor, a citizen of another state, before two justices of the peace of a different county in Maryland from that in which the land lay, is valid under the Act of 1766, a temporary residence in the county in which the deed was acknowledged being sufficient. Sim v. Deakin, 2 Har. & M. (Md.) 46; Fouke v. Fleming, 13 Md. 392. See also Gittings v. Hall, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 14, 2 Am. Dec. 502; Hall v. Gittings, 2 Har. & J. (Md.) 380.

But an acknowledgment of a deed before two justices of the peace of a county of which the grantors were not residents, and in which the land did not lie, was held invalid. Johns v. Reardon, 3 Md. Ch. 57, following Hall v. Gittings, 2 Har. & J. (Md.) 380.

Where the place of residence of the person making the acknowledgment does not appear on the face of the acknowledgment, it will be presumed, in the absence of proof of residence elsewhere, that he resided in the county where the acknowledgment was taken. Carroll v. Tyler, 2 Har. & G. (Md.) 54.

See, as to the power of a justice of the peace of Maryland to take acknowledgments out of the state, Cowan v. Beall, 1 McArthur (D. C.) 270.

Massachusetts.—A justice of the peace may take acknowledgments of deeds conveying lands in any county in the state, and the acknowledgment may be taken by the justice while outside of his county. Learned v. Riley, 14 Allen (Mass.) 109. But see Howard Mut. Loan, etc., Assoc. v. McIntyre, 3 Allen (Mass.) 571.

Minnesota.—The jurisdiction of a notary to take acknowledgments extends throughout the entire state. Roussain v. Norton, 53 Minn. 560.

Mississippi.—Under the Mississippi Acts of 1833 and 1836 a justice of the peace of one county may take an acknowledgment of a conveyance of lands lying in another county. Dennistoun v. Potts, 26 Miss. 13; Love v. Taylor, 26 Miss. 567. Compare, as to previous law, Hughes v. Wilkinson, 37 Miss. 482.

New Hampshire.—A justice may take acknowledgments outside of his county as well

2. Within the State.—The statutes of the several states vary somewhat as as within it, the place being wholly immaterial. Odiorne v. Mason, 9 N. H. 24.

Ohio.—A deed made in 1802 conveying lands in Ohio was acknowledged in New Jersey before a judge of the Northwest Territory, of which Ohio was then a part. The acknowledgment was held good. Moore v. Vance, 1 Ohio 1; Kinsman v. Loomis, 11 Ohio 475.

It is the settled law in Ohio, that a justice may take acknowledgments of conveyances of lands lying outside of his county. Crumbaugh v. Kugler, 2 Ohio St. 373.

The mayor of a city in Ohio may take acknowledgments outside the city limits. Moore v. Moore, 3 Ohio St. 155.

Pennsylvania.—Under the Pennsylvania Act of 1715, providing for the acknowledgment of deeds before "one of the justices of the peace of the proper county or city where the lands lie," it was held, in conformity with the constant practice of the province, that an acknowledgment, before an associate judge of Bedford county, of a deed to lands in Westmoreland county, was valid. McFerran v. Powers, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 102.

Under the same act it was held that a deed acknowledged before one of the justices of the supreme court of the province was properly recorded in the county in which a part of the land lay. M'Keen v. Delancy, 5 Cranch (U. S.) 22.

But it has been held that a justice of the peace could not take an acknowledgment of a deed out of his own proper county. Share v. Anderson, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 43, 10 Am. Dec. 421. See 1 Brightley's Purdon's Pennsylvania Digest 636, § 40.

West Virginia.—A county clerk may take acknowledgments outside of his office anywhere within his county. Janesville Hay Tool Co. v. Boyd, 35 W. Va. 240.

Wisconsin.—A notary public may take acknowledgments anywhere in the state. Maxwell v. Hartmann, 50 Wis. 660.

Such Acknowledgments Held Invalid—Alabama.—A justice cannot take acknowledgments outside of his county. Edinburgh American Land Mortg. Co. v. Peoples (Ala., 1894), 14 So. Rep. 656, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.), p. 146.

Under the Alabama Act of 1831, a notary may take acknowledgments of deeds conveying lands situated anywhere in the state, but the acknowledgments must be taken within the county for which he is commissioned. Johnson v. McGehee, 1 Ala. 186.

Delaware.—A notary of Delaware cannot while out of the state take acknowledgments of deeds conveying lands within the state. Harris v. Burton, 4 Harr. (Del.) 66.

Florida.—The acknowledgment of a deed taken by a justice when out of his county may be void, but yet the deed is good inter partes. Stewart v. Stewart, 19 Fla. 846.

Michigan.—Where a justice of the peace went into another county to take the acknowledgment of a deed to land lying in his own county, it was held that the acknowledgment was invalid, a justice of the peace having no authority to take acknowledgments outside of his county. Brown v. McCormick, 28 Mich. 215.

Missouri.—It has been held that a justice cannot take acknowledgments of deeds conveying lands outside of his county. Bishop v. Schneider, 46 Mo. 472, 2 Am. Rep. 533; Musick v. Barney, 49 Mo. 458. Compare, as to authority of a justice of the peace of the territory of Missouri, Duly v. Brooks, 30 Mo. 515.

New York.—A notary may take acknowledgments of deeds anywhere within his own county, and, when accompanied by a certificate by the county clerk of the official character of the notary, such deeds may be recorded anywhere within the state; but an acknowledgment taken by a notary out of his own county is invalid. People v. Hascall, 18 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 118; Utica, etc., R. Co. v. Stewart, 33 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 312; People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co., 65 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 239.

The proof of the execution of a deed to lands in New York, made by a judge of that state while in Canada, is extra-judicial and invalid. Jackson v. Humphrey, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 498. See also Hopkins v. Menderback, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 234; Jackson v. Colden, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 266; Van Cortlandt v. Tozer, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 338, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 423; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Corey (Ct. App.), 48 N. Y. St. Rep. 247, reversing same case, 54 Hun (N. Y.) 495.

North Carolina.—The separate examination of a married woman, taken in one county before a justice of another county, is invalid. Dixon v. Robbins, 114 N. Car. 102; Ferebee v. Hinton, 102 N. Car. 99.

Acknowledgment before Clerk of Another County than That of Registration.—The North Carolina statute (N. Car. Code, § 1246, subsec. 6) requiring the certificate of probate of a deed, made by a clerk of the superior court of a county other than that in which the deed is to be registered, to be passed on by the clerk of the superior court of the county of registration before it can be registered, is directory only, and a registration upon a probate not so passed on is valid. Holmes v. Marshall, 72 N. Car. 37; Young v. Jackson, 92 N. Car. 444; Darden v. Neuse, etc., Steamboat Co., 107 N. Car. 437.

But such adjudication is essential where the probate is before a commissioner of affidavits resident in another state. Todd v. Outlaw, 79 N. Car. 235; Evans v. Etheridge, 99 N. Car. 43.

When Jurisdiction need Not be Shown.—In Louisiana it has been held that where the capacity of an officer taking the acknowledgment of an act of sale in another state is admitted, the fact that it does not appear that the act was executed and signed within the officer's jurisdiction is immaterial. Morrison v. White, 16 La. Ann. 100.

Effect of Division of County on Jurisdiction of Officer.—At a time when a county clerk in Kentucky was not authorized to take the acto the persons who may take acknowledgments within their own territory.¹ The persons most usually named are notaries public,² justices of the peace,³ judges and clerks of superior courts, courts of record, or courts having a seal,⁴ knowledge of, and to record, a conveyance of land lying in any other county, a deed to land situate in one county was executed in that county and afterwards acknowledged and recorded in the same place, but in a different county, the new county having been in the mean time established by a division of the original county. It was held that the acknowledgment and record of the deed by the clerk of the original county was not valid. Garrison v. Haydon, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 222, 19 Am. Dec. 70.

Acknowledgment under United States Statutes.

—In all cases in which, under the laws of the United States, oaths or acknowledgments may now be taken or made before any justice of the peace of any state or territory, or in the District of Columbia, they may hereafter be also taken or made by or before any notary public duly appointed in any state, district, or territory, or any of the commissioners of the circuit courts, and, when certified under the hand and official seal of such notary or commissioner, shall have the same force and effect as if taken or made by or before such justice of the peace. U. S. Rev. Stat. 1888, § 1778.

The Act of Aug. 15, 1876, provides that notaries public of the several states, territories, and the District of Columbia are authorized to take acknowledgments and affidavits in the same manner and with the same effect as commissioners of the United States Circuit Court. Supp. to Rev. Stat., 2d ed., p. 123.

2. See the title NOTARY PUBLIC.

Under the Illinois statute (Annot. Stat. 1885, c. 95, par. 2), prescribing that chattel mortgages executed within the state shall be acknowledged before a justice of the peace of the town or precinct where the mortgagor resides, or, if there be there no acting justice of the peace, before the county judge of the county, it was held that an acknowledgment of a chattel mortgage taken by a notary public of the county in which the mortgagors resided, and in the form appropriate to conveyances of real property, was void. Long v. Cockern, 128 Ill. 29.

In Illinois, prior to the revision of 1874, a notary public could not take the acknowledgment of a town plat. Gould v. Howe, 131 Ill. 490.

Under the Missouri Act of 1859, authorizing the transfer of a railroad pre-emption claim to land, and requiring it to be acknowledged before a justice of the peace, an acknowledgment before a notary public is void. Cravens v. Moore, 61 Mo. 178.

So also a notary's acknowledgment of a tax deed is void under an act requiring such deed to be acknowledged before a county clerk. Dunlap v. Henry, 76 Mo. 106.

A notary public was competent in Missouri in 1857 to take a married woman's acknowledgment of a conveyance of her real estate. Siemers v. Kleeburg, 56 Mo. 196.

Under the Ohio Act of 1856, authorizing notaries public to take acknowledgments, a notary has no power to take the acknowledgment of certificates of incorporation which a subsequent statute provides shall be made before a justice of the peace. State v. Lee, 21 Ohio St. 662.

As to authority of notary to take the probate of a deed proved by subscribing witnesses in Tennessee, see McGuire v. Gallagher (Tenn., 1895), 32 S. W. Rep. 209.

3. See the title JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

Justice of the Peace Holding an Incompatible Office.—An acknowledgment taken by a justice of the peace, who was also the duly commissioned and acting clerk of the county court of oyer and terminer, is not invalid under the Pennsylvania Act of 1874, declaring the two offices to be incompatible, that act containing no provision declaring which office shall be forfeited. Adam v. Mengel (Pa., 1887), 8 Atl. Rep. 606.

Under the Missouri Act of 1855 prescribing that a married woman may convey her real estate by acknowledging the conveyance and having it certified by some court having a seal, or some judge, justice, or clerk thereof, it was held that such acknowledgment might be taken by a justice of the peace. Mitchell v. Peoples, 46 Mo. 203, overruling West v. Best, 28 Mo. 551.

Acknowledgment before One Justice Insufficient.—It was held under the Maryland Act of 1766, requiring a deed to be acknowledged before two or more justices, that a deed of a nonresident grantor acknowledged by an attorney under a letter of attorney proved before one justice of the peace only, is invalid. Beall v. Lynn, 6 Har. & J. (Md.) 336.

Other statutes containing similar provisions have received similar constructions. Malloy v. Bruden, 88 N. Car. 305; Loree v. Abner, 6 C. C. A. 302.

4. A Circuit Judge in Lower Canada has authority, under 7 Vict., c. 18, to examine married women as to their consent to convey their estate. Doe v. Henderson, 5 U. C. Q. B. 208.

Judges of Courts of Claims.—Judges and clerks of the courts of claims may take acknowledgments of instruments in writing, and give certificates of the same. U. S. Rev. Stat. 1878, § 1071.

Probate Judges.—Prior to the Act of 1852, declaring probate courts of the Territory of Minnesota courts of record, the judges of such courts had no authority to take acknowledgments. Baze v. Arper, 6 Minn. 220. See also Lynde v. Williams, 68 Mo. 360.

Clerks of Courts of Probate may take acknowledgments. McCraven v. Doe, 23 Miss. 100; Young v. Boardman, 97 Mo. 181. See also People v. Bartels, 38 Ill. App. 428, 138 Ill. 322.

It is held in Alabama that clerks of probate may take acknowledgments in the name of the judge under a statute giving that authority to probate judges. Halso v. Seawright.

county recorders or registers of deeds, and the chief officers of cities and towns.¹

3. In Other States—By Officers of Other States.—All the states have enacted statutes providing that deeds conveying property situated within their territory may be acknowledged before designated officers of other states, or before officers authorized by the laws of those states to take acknowledgments, and when accompanied by proper certificates of acknowledgment may be admitted to record in the state where the property affected is situated.²

65 Ala. 431; Shelton v. Aultman, etc., Co., 82 Ala. 315.

In Mississippi, probate clerks have been held empowered to take acknowledgments under a statute giving that authority to clerks of courts of record. James v. Fisk, 9 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 144, 47 Am. Dec. 111.

County Clerks are authorized in Nebraska to take acknowledgments of deeds to real estate. Franklin v. Kelley, 2 Neb. 79; Davis v. Huston, 15 Neb. 28.

Clerk of District Court.—Under the Missouri statute (Mo. Rev. Stat. 1835 (2d ed.), p. 120, § 8), the clerk of the district court, who is also ex officio recorder of deeds, may take acknowledgments as clerk, but not as recorder. Owen v. Baker, 101 Mo. 407, 20 Am. St. Rep. 618. See also Durst v. Daugherty, 81 Tex. 650.

A Vice-chancellor was not authorized to take acknowledgments in New York in 1840. Ridabock v. Levy, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 197, 35 Am. Dec. 682.

County Judge.—It was held in Alabama in 1823 that a county court, acting judicially, had no authority to take the acknowledgment of a deed to land. Munn v. Lewis, 2 Port. (Ala.) 24.

1. County Auditors may take acknowledgments under Iowa Rev. Code 1888, § 277, although they do not come within the provisions of § 1955, requiring deeds conveying real estate to be acknowledged before a court having a seal or certain designated officers. Chapter 164 of the Acts of 1878, legalizing acknowledgments previously made by them, is not necessarily a legislative declaration that they were not authorized to take acknowledgments. Long v. Schee, 86 Iowa 619.

The Superintendent of Washington City has been held competent to take acknowledgments of deeds to lands within the city. Peltz v. Clarke, 2 Cranch (C. C.) 703.

A Mayor of a Town cannot take acknowledgments under a statute authorizing the mayor of a city to do so. Dundy v. Chambers, 23 Ill. 369.

A deed acknowledged before the mayor of Cincinnati in 1818 was held good on the authority of a previous decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio, the court, however, independently of this decision, being inclined against the power of a mayor to take the acknowledgment. Shults v. Moore, 1 McLean (U. S.) 520, Wright (Ohio) 280.

A Provost Marshal, as the chief officer of a town under military authority, may take the acknowledgment of deeds. Paul v. Carpenter, 70 N. Car. 502.

A Police Magistrate may take acknowledgments of chattel mortgages under the Illinois

Act of 1854. Herkelrath v. Stookey, 58 Ill. 21.

2. Acknowledgment before Officers of Other States—United States.—Gordon v. Hobart, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 401; Morton v. Smith, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 316; Doe v. Smith, 3 McLean (U. S.) 362; *Gillespie v. Illustrations.—A deed to land in Alabama, acknowledged before a notary of the city of New York and properly certified by him, may be received in evidence under the Acts of 1803 and 1812. Toulmin v. Austin, 5 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 410.

Under the provisions of the Alabama Code of 1867, § 1546, authorizing judges of courts of record to take acknowledgments without the state, a certificate of acknowledgment purporting to be taken by a judge of a superior court of a sister state without showing that such court was a court of record, is defective as an acknowledgment, although the certificate of acknowledgment appended may operate as an attestation by the officer as a subscribing witness. Torrey v. Forbes, 94 Ala. 735.

The acknowledgment of a deed to lands in Arkansas before a justice of the peace of a sister state is invalid in the absence of a statute authorizing acknowledgments by such officers. Elliott v. Pearce, 20 Ark. 508; Wentworth v. Clark, 33 Ark. 432. But it was held that the curing act of 1883 cured the defect in an acknowledgment so taken. Apel v. Kelsey, 47 Ark. 413.

A Master in Chancery was not one of the officers authorized by the laws of California in force in 1864 to take acknowledgments in other states. Kimball v. Semple, 25 Cal. 441.

A certified copy of a contract to convey land in Illinois, purporting to have been acknowledged before a county judge in the state of New York, without evidence that he was authorized by the laws of that state to take acknowledgments of deeds, or that he was a judge authorized by the laws of Illinois to take such acknowledgments, is not sufficient proof of the execution of the contract. McCormick v. Evans, 33 Ill. 328.

A deed to land in Kentucky acknowledged before the mayor of Richmond, Virginia, the grantor being only a temporary resident of that city, may be recorded in the county where the land lies. McCulloch v. Myers, 1 Dana (Ky.) 522.

Under the Kentucky statute (Ky. Gen. Stat., c. 24, § 16) providing that deeds executed out of the state may be admitted to record when certified by a notary under his official seal, a recorded deed executed and acknowledged in another state, and certified under a notarial seal, takes priority over a previously recorded deed, also executed out of the state, the acknowledgment of which was not so certified. Herd v. Cist (Ky., 1889), 12 S. W. Rep. 466. See also, for a similar decision under the North Carolina statutes, Evans v. Etheridge, 99 N. Car. 43.

Under the Maryland Act of 1856 (General Laws 1888, art. 21, § 4) providing that acknowledgments may be taken in other states by notaries public, judges of the United States courts, judges of state courts having a seal, or commissioners of the state of Maryland, the acknowledgment of a conveyance of personal property before two justices of the peace of the District of Columbia is not a proper acknowledgment. Berry v. Matthews, 13 Md. 537.

A deed to lands in Maryland, acknowledged in 1782 according to the laws of Pennsylvania, of which state the grantors, husband and wife, were residents, was held inoperative as to the wife, the laws of Maryland not authorizing the husband, though a nonresident, to acknowledge a deed to lands in that state before an officer of another state. Lawrence v. Heister, 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 371.

It was held in Massachusetts in 1853, that where a deed had been recorded for fifty years upon an acknowledgment before the mayor of the city of Hudson, New York, it might be presumed to have been properly acknowledged before such officer, and a registered copy might be read in evidence without any proof of the laws of New York at the time of acknowledgment showing the extent of authority of the mayor of Hudson. Palmer v. Stevens, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 147.

Under the Minnesota statute (Minn. Gen. Stat. 1878, c. 40, § 77) providing for the acknowledgment of deeds before the clerks of courts of record of sister states, the acknowledgment before a deputy clerk, certified by him in the name and under the seal of his principal, is valid. Piper v. Chippewa Iron Co., 51 Minn. 495, 499.

Under the Missouri Territory Act of 1815, providing for the acknowledgment of deeds in other states, a notary public of another state was not one of the officers authorized to take acknowledgment. Lamarque v. Langlais, 8 Mo. 328.

Under the Missouri act providing for the recording of conveyances of military bounty lands executed in other states, when acknowledged or proved according to the laws of such states (Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 2433), such a deed acknowledged before a notary public of another state was inadmissible in evidence without proof that the notary was authorized by the laws of his own state to take such acknowledgment. Crispen v. Hannavan, 50 Mo. 415. See also, as to the acknowledgment of conveyances of military bounty lands, Wright v. Taylor, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 23; Barton v. Murrain, 27 Mo. 235; Tully v. Canfield, 60 Mo. 99; Ferguson v. Bartholomew, 67 Mo. 212.

A deed to lands in Nebraska, executed in another state and acknowledged there before a notary, is sufficiently proven by his certificate and official seal. Green v. Gross, 12 Neb. 117; Galley v. Galley, 14 Neb. 174.

Under the New York Act of 1829 the mayor of Philadelphia was authorized to take the acknowledgment of deeds to be recorded in New York. Fryer v. Rockefeller, 63 N. Y. 268.

An instrument executed by a married woman and acknowledged before a justice of the peace in Pennsylvania is not entitled to be recorded in New Jersey, and will not bar the wife's right of dower. Earle v. Earle, 16 pose of taking the acknowledgments of instruments relating to property situated in the state by which they are appointed.¹

N. J. L. 273; Chandler v. Herrick, 11 N. J. Eq. 497.

Under the Oregon statute acknowledgments taken without the state, unless before a commissioner appointed by the governor for that purpose, must be supported by the certificate of the clerk, or other certifying officer of a court of record. Knighton v. Smith, 1 Oregon 276.

A deed to lands in Pennsylvania, acknowledged in 1799 before two justices of the peace of Baltimore county, Maryland, with a certificate by the county clerk under his official seal, stating that there were at that time no superior officers in the county, may be received in evidence. M'Intire v. Ward, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 424, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 296, 6 Am. Dec. 417. But it would not be good without such certificate that they were the chief officers of the place. Cassell v. Cooke, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 268, 11 Am. Dec. 610; Rhoades v. Selin, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 715.

Under the registry laws in force in South Carolina in 1820, a deed to lands in that state could not be admitted to record upon acknowledgment before a justice of the peace of another state. Woolfolk v. Graniteville Mfg. Co., 22 S. Car. 333. See also Wings v. Parker, 19 S. Car. 9.

The Texas statute authorizing clerks of courts of record having a seal, commissioners of deeds, and notaries public to take acknowledgments without the state, does not give that power to judges of courts of record. Talbert v. Dull, 70 Tex. 675.

A deed to lands in Vermont, acknowledged before a justice of the peace of a neighboring state, is valid without evidence that the justice had power to take acknowledgments, the court possessing sufficient knowledge of the laws of that state to dispense with further proof upon that point. Middlebury College v. Cheney, 1 Vt. 336.

By the Virginia Act of 1814 the certificates of magistrates of other states were made sufficient evidence of the execution of a married woman's deed, and, by the Act of 1819, of the deeds of other persons also. Sexton v. Pickering, 3 Rand. (Va.) 468.

Where the laws of another state required three justices to constitute a court, an acknowledgment before two was not before the persons authorized to take it under the Virginia Act of 1785. Loree v. Abner, 6 C. C. A. 302, 6 U. S. App. 649.

It was held in 1873 that a deed with a certificate of acknowledgment by the grantor from the mayor of Staunton, Virginia, and also a certificate of acknowledgment from the clerk of the Circuit Court of Richmond, that the deed had been admitted to record in his office, and also a certificate from the clerk of the County Court of Augusta county, Virginia, that the said deed, with the certificates, had been admitted to record in his office, was not sufficiently authenticated to be read in evidence in West Virginia, the laws of that state not authorizing the acknowledgment of a deed before the mayor of a city or town in another state. Fleming v. Ervin, 6 W. Va. 215.

Presumption of Correctness of Official Act.—A deed by a nonresident conveying lands in Kentucky or Virginia, acknowledged before the mayor of a city in another state, accompanied by a certificate of acknowledgment in all respects formal, and made by the mayor in his official capacity and under his seal, is presumed without further proof to be authenticated in a manner usual with such officer. Hassler v. King, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 115; Cales v. Miller, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 6; Ewing v. Savary, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 235. See also McCulloch v. Myers, 1 Dana (Ky.) 522; Loree v. Abner, 6 C. C. A. 302. See the title PRESUMPTIONS.

Strict Compliance with Statute Required.—The requirements of the statute providing for acknowledgments of deeds without the state must be strictly complied with. Knighton v. Smith, 1 Oregon 276.

1. Acknowledgments before Commissioners of Deeds.—Keller v. Moore, 51 Ala. 340; Grider v. Williams, 25 Ark. 1; Woods v. Polhemus, 8 Ind. 60; Langley v. Burrows, 15 La. Ann. 392; Leibe v. Hebersmith, 39 La. Ann. 1050; Gray v. Waldron, 101 Mich. 612; Simmons v. Gholson, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 401; James, etc., Buggy Co. v. Pegram, 102 N. Car. 540; Brannon v. Brannon, 2 Disney (Ohio) 224; Hultz v. Ackley, 63 Pa. St. 142; Monroe v. Arledge, 23 Tex. 478.

See also Steeple v. Downing, 60 Ind. 478; Johnson v. Badger Mill, etc., Co., 13 Nev. 351; Bason v. King's Mountain Min. Co., 90 N. Car. 417; Jaques v. Weeks, 7 Watts (Pa.) 261; Davis v. Roosevelt, 53 Tex. 305.

Proof of Official Character.—A commissioner appointed by the governor of a state to take acknowledgments in another state is an officer of the state from which he derives his appointment. The courts of that state are bound to take judicial notice of his official acts, and these require no other authentication than his certificate and seal of office. Smith v. Van Gilder, 26 Ark. 527; Johnson v. Cocks, 12 Ark. 672; Kaufman v. Stone, 25 Ark. 336.

In Illinois it has been held that acknowledgments of deeds taken before, and certified by, commissioners of deeds of other states, were valid without proof of official character of such commissioners. Vance v. Schuyler, 6 Ill. 160; Thompson v. Schuyler, 7 Ill. 271; Irving v. Brownell, 11 Ill. 402. It is to be noted that these decisions were made before the statute (Illinois Laws of 1869, c. 2) authorizing the appointment of commissioners for the state of Illinois to reside in other states. See Vance v. Schuyler, 6 Ill. 160.

In Pennsylvania the acknowledgment of a deed to lands in that state, taken before a commissioner of another state, is defective if the certificate does not state that the commissioner is authorized by the governor of Pennsylvania to take acknowledgments. Uhler v. Hutchinson, 23 Pa. St. 110.

See further, as to proof of official character, infra, this title, The Certificate.

Formalities Required.—It is an established principle of the common law, that real property can pass only in the manner and by the forms allowed by the law of the place where the property is situated. It follows that each state has the exclusive right to determine by what law acknowledgments affecting property situated within its territory shall be governed, and the laws of one state have no force in another state except so far as acknowledgments made in accordance therewith have been recognized by the statutes of the latter state.¹ The statutory regulations in the several states as to the form of the acknowledgments of deeds which are intended to pass title to lands within the limits of such states, but which are executed and acknowledged in other states, vary considerably.² In some states it is provided that the acknowledgment must be made according to the laws of the state where the property is situated ;³ in

Where a married woman's deed to land in Indiana was acknowledged in Queens county, New York, before an officer who described himself in his certificate as commissioner of deeds for Virginia, but who subsequently, after the death of the woman, and while acting as commissioner of the state of Ohio and notary public for the county of New York, indorsed on the deed another certificate of acknowledgment, of the same date and in the same words as the first, it was held that the deed was never acknowledged in conformity with the laws of Indiana, and was therefore wholly void as a conveyance of lands in that state. Woods v. Polhemus, 8 Ind. 60.

Acknowledgment before Witnesses—Louisiana.—Acts acknowledged before commissioners of Louisiana, resident in other states, have no effect as authentic acts unless the acknowledgment takes place also before two competent witnesses; otherwise they remain acts under private signature, and are inadmissible in evidence without proof of signature. Langley v. Burrows, 15 La. Ann. 392; Leibe v. Hebersmith, 39 La. Ann. 1050. See also Botto v. Berges, 47 La. Ann. 959.

The Term of Office of a commissioner of deeds appointed by the governor of one state to reside in another state, to continue in office "during the pleasure of the governor," does not expire with that of the appointing governor, and he may continue to take acknowledgments until removed by the governor's successor. Kaufman v. Stone, 25 Ark. 336; Thorn v. Frazer, 60 Tex. 259.

Commissioner Witnessing Deed.—A deed acknowledged in Florida, before the Georgia commissioner of deeds, with his certificate as commissioner, although he subscribed his name as a witness without adding that he was commissioner, was properly acknowledged. Baird v. Evans, 58 Ga. 350.

Place of Residence of Person Making Acknowledgment.—It was held under the former laws of North Carolina that a commissioner appointed by the governor to take acknowledgments in other states could take acknowledgments of those persons only who were nonresidents of North Carolina. De Courcy v. Barr, Busb. Eq. (N. Car.) 181. But it is now held, to be immaterial whether the person making acknowledgment is a resident of the state of North Carolina or domiciled in the state in which the acknowledgment is made. James, etc., Buggy Co. v. Pegram, 102 N. Car. 540; Maphis v. Pegram, 107 N. Car. 505.

But under the New Jersey law he must reside in the state where the acknowledgment is made. If the residence of the grantor appears on either the face of the deed or the certificate of acknowledgment, this is sufficient prima facie evidence of the officer's jurisdiction, and if it does not so appear, it may be shown by evidence aliunde. Graham v. Whitely, 26 N. J. L. 254.

Adjudication by Clerk of Court.—The execution of a deed acknowledged in another state, before a commissioner of affidavits for North Carolina, must be properly adjudicated by the clerk of the Superior Court of North Carolina, to entitle the deed to be recorded in that state. Evans v. Etheridge, 99 N. Car. 43; Todd v. Outlaw, 79 N. Car. 235. See also James, etc., Buggy Co. v. Pegram, 102 N. Car. 540; Simmons v. Gholson, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 401.

Substantial Adjudication Sufficient.—Where the acknowledgment of a deed in another state was before an officer authorized to take it, and the probate was in fact in due form, it was held that the omission of the clerk of the superior court to adjudge in so many words that the probate was "in due form," when he did in substance so adjudge, was not sufficient ground to exclude the deed. Deans v. Pate, 114 N. Car. 194. See also Devereux v. McMahon, 102 N. Car. 284.

1. Validity of Acknowledgment Determined by Lex Loci Rei Sitæ.—U. S. v. Crosby, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 115; McDaniel v. Grace, 15 Ark. 465; Brannon v. Brannon, 2 Disney (Ohio) 224; Griffith v. Black, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 160; Bone v. Greenlee, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 29; Sartor v. Bolinger, 59 Tex. 411; Harman v. Taft, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 6. See also Root v. Brotherson, 4 McLean (U. S.) 230; Butterfield v. Beall, 3 Ind. 203.

The laws of the state where the land lies must govern the courts of another state in determining the validity and operation of a deed conveying such land, but in the absence of proof of such laws the courts must decide these questions according to the laws of the state where suit is brought. Haney v. Marshall, 9 Md. 194. See also the title CONFLICT OF LAWS.

2. See the various local statutes.

3. The question is dependent entirely upon statutes, and the latest local statutes should others, it will be sufficient if the laws of the foreign state be observed.¹ Again, under some of the statutes the acknowledgment may be made according to the laws of either state, but in such case the laws of both cannot be combined to make valid an acknowledgment void when tested by either.²

Certificate of Magistracy or Conformity.—Where the certificate is taken by an officer of the foreign state, in addition to the certificate by the officer a second certificate by a clerk of a court of record that the officer is authorized to take acknowledgments, or that the acknowledgment is in conformity with the laws of the state, is usually required.³

4. In Foreign Countries.—Among the officers authorized by the statutes of the several states of the Union to take acknowledgments in foreign countries of instruments affecting lands in this country, are notaries public;⁴ ministers, be carefully examined. The following cases, decided under statutes of various dates, present rulings to the effect that the acknowledgment must be in accordance with the requirements of the law of the state where the property is situated: Clark v. Graham, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 577; Woods v. Polhemus, 8 Ind. 60; Bone v. Greenlee, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 29; Harmon v. Taft, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 6; Sumner v. Wentworth, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 42. See also McGuire v. Hay, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 419; Townsend v. Downer, 27 Vt. 119.

Commissioners of Deeds were required under certain statutes to take acknowledgments according to the laws of the state by which they were appointed. Keller v. Moore, 51 Ala. 340; Brannon v. Brannon, 2 Disney (Ohio) 224; Winkler v. Higgins, 9 Ohio St. 599. See also Farrel Foundry v. Dart, 26 Conn. 376.

A Deed Acknowledged in Another State, according to the laws of the state where the land lies, is admissible in evidence. Dawson v. Hayden, 67 Ill. 52; Post v. Springfield First Nat. Bank, 138 Ill. 559; Knight v. Leary, 54 Wis. 459.

A deed conveying lands in another state, defectively acknowledged according to the laws of Maryland, is not admissible in the courts of that state without proof that it was properly acknowledged according to the laws of the state where the land is situated. Haney v. Marshall, 9 Md. 194. See also Harper v. Hampton, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 622.

1. See the local statutes. The following cases are instances of rulings under statutes requiring only a conformity with the laws of the state where the deed is executed and acknowledged: Secrist v. Green, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 744; Farmers' Loan, etc., Co. v. McKinney, 6 McLean (U. S.) 1; Little v. Hernndon, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 26; Shepard v. Carriel, 19 Ill. 313; Deininger v. McConnel, 41 Ill. 227; Garrick v. Chamberlain, 97 Ill. 620; Kreuger v. Walker, 80 Iowa 733; Galpin v. Abbott, 6 Mich. 17; Hoadley v. Stephens, 4 Neb. 431; Green v. Gross, 12 Neb. 117; Murdock v. Memphis, etc., R. Co., 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 557. See also Harrington v. Fish, 10 Mich. 415; Brown v. Cady, 11 Mich. 535.

Presumption as to Foreign Law.—In the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed that the requirements of another state in which an acknowledgment is taken are the same as those of the home state. Hewitt v. Morgan, 88 Iowa 468.

2. Acknowledgment according to Either Law.

—Where the validity of an acknowledgment is based on the laws of the foreign state, a substantial compliance with such laws must be shown; if based on the laws of the home state, a like compliance with their provisions must appear. The laws of both cannot be invoked to aid an acknowledgment defective when tested by either. Adams v. Bishop, 19 Ill. 395; Montag v. Linn, 19 Ill. 399.

The acknowledgment of a deed to land in Connecticut before a commissioner of that state in New York city, attested by only one witness, is defective, and is not cured by the Connecticut Act of 1855 validating all "deeds and other conveyances of real estate in this state, which have been executed and acknowledged in any other state or territory in conformity with the laws of such state or territory relative to the conveyance of lands therein situated." Although a deed so attested, if acknowledged before a proper officer, would be sufficient to convey land in New York, such acknowledgment is not according to the laws of that state, for a Connecticut commissioner has no power to take acknowledgments of deeds to land situated in that state, and, consequently, any deed there acknowledged before him would not be acknowledged in conformity with the laws of New York. Farrel Foundry v. Dart, 26 Conn. 376.

3. See infra, this title, The Certificate.

4. Notary Public.—See the statutes.

A notary public is authorized by the laws of New Brunswick to take the acknowledgment of deeds without the province. Torrence v. Currie, 22 New Bruns. 342.

The acknowledgment of a deed or power of attorney before a notary public of the republic of Texas was not sufficient to admit these writings to record in Virginia. Randolph v. Adams, 2 W. Va. 519.

The acknowledgment of a deed to lands in the republic of Texas, taken by a notary public of another state or country, who was not authorized by the laws of Texas to take acknowledgments of such deeds, is invalid. Baker v. Westcott, 73 Tex. 129; Birdseye v. Rogers (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 26 S. W. Rep. 841. See also infra, this title, Curing Defective Acknowledgments—By Statute.

The Pennsylvania Act of 1705, providing for the sale of lands by attorneys for owners living out of the state, directs that proof of the power shall be made by two or more of envoys, and consular, diplomatic, or commercial agents of the United States resident abroad;¹ mayors and chief officers of cities and towns; and judges of superior courts, courts of record, or courts having a seal.²

the witnesses before any mayor or chief magistrate or officer of the city, town, or place where the letter of attorney shall be made or executed, and certified accordingly under the seal of the place where proved. It was held under this act that the certificate of a notary public of the city of Rotterdam, of such proof before him, was insufficient. Griffith v. Black, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 160.

1. Consular Officers.—A United States consul in a foreign country is a "magistrate" within the meaning of the Massachusetts statute of 1783, authorizing such officers to take acknowledgments of deeds. Scanlan v. Wright, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 523, 25 Am. Dec. 344. See also Palmer v. Stevens, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 147.

The acknowledgment of a deed to land in Nevada, made before the vice-consul-general of the United States in London, certified under his official seal, is valid. Evans v. Lee, 11 Nev. 194.

A married woman's acknowledgment of a deed to land in Pennsylvania, taken before a United States commercial agent in Canada, was held valid. Moore v. Miller, 147 Pa. St. 378.

In 1859, and prior thereto, a consular agent of the United States was not one of the officers authorized by the laws of California to take and certify acknowledgments in foreign countries. McMinn v. O'Connor, 27 Cal. 238.

A deed acknowledged in the Hawaiian Islands before an officer describing himself in his certificate as "the principal notary public" of the islands, and another by the "vice-consul of the United States of America at Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands," under the respective seals of these officers, were admitted in evidence in California, the language of the statute providing that acknowledgments in foreign countries might be taken by "any notary public, etc., or consul of the United States," being sufficiently comprehensive to embrace consuls and notaries of every grade. Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 533.

It was held in New York that the execution of a power of attorney was sufficiently proven by the acknowledgment before a United States consul in a foreign country without evidence aliunde of the genuineness of the signature or seal of the consul. St. John v. Croel, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 573.

The United States Statute provides that every secretary of legation and consular officer may perform within his jurisdiction any notarial act which any notary public is required or authorized by law to do within the United States, and such notarial act, certified under his hand and seal of office, shall be as valid within the United States as if done there by any person authorized and competent so to act. U. S. Rev. Stat. 1888, § 1750.

"Consular officer" shall be deemed to include consuls-general, consuls, commercial agents, deputy consuls, vice-consuls, vicecommercial agents, and consular agents, and none others. U. S. Rev. Stat. 1888, § 1674.

2. Mayors of Cities, etc.—A deed conveying land in Kentucky, acknowledged before the mayor of London, certified by him and having his official seal annexed, being duly recorded in the county where the land was situated, was good as evidence, and, under the Act of 1795, to pass title. Bell v. Fry, 5 Dana (Ky.) 341.

It was held in Mississippi that a certificate of probate of a power of attorney purporting to be by the mayor of Liverpool, and bearing his official seal, but not signed by him, but by the town clerk for him, was sufficient. Sessions v. Doe, 7 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 130.

A deed to land in Pennsylvania, executed under a power of attorney, acknowledged before the chief magistrate of Edinburgh, is admissible in evidence under the common law, notwithstanding the Act of 1705, requiring such powers to be proved by witnesses before such magistrates. Milligan v. Dickson, Pet. (C. C.) 433.

Under the same act the certificate of acknowledgment of a power of attorney before a magistrate describing himself as a "magistrate in the chief office of said town of Carlo, in the county of Carlo, Ireland," and signed "E. B., sovereign of Carlo, Ireland," and attested with the seal of the town, was held sufficient to entitle the instrument to be recorded. Bowser v. Cravener, 56 Pa. St. 132.

An acknowledgment of a deed taken in Germany by an officer designated as "Kanzlei Director" of the city of Stuttgart, is not entitled to be recorded in Texas, such officer not being authorized by the statutes of that state to take acknowledgments; and the acknowledgment is not aided by a consular certificate that this officer was authorized to take acknowledgments. Sartor v. Bolinger, 59 Tex. 411.

The record of a deed to land in Ohio, purporting to have been acknowledged before "a public auditor" in France, an officer unknown to the laws of Ohio, is inadmissible in evidence in that state without proof that the officer was authorized to take acknowledgments. De Segond v. Culver, 10 Ohio 188.

An acknowledgment before a deputy-mayor of a borough in Great Britain, under the seal of the borough, is sufficient in New Brunswick. Blair v. Armour, 3 Kerr (New Bruns.) 341.

City Clerk.—An acknowledgment taken before a clerk of a foreign city, an officer unknown to the statute, and failing to show that the grantor was known to the officer to be the person whose name was subscribed to the instrument, was held invalid in Missouri. Callaway v. Fash, 50 Mo. 420.

District Judges.—A deed acknowledged in 1842 "before an associate judge of the sixth judicial district of the state of Maryland" cannot be received in evidence under a

V. WHO MAY MAKE ACKNOWLEDGMENTS—1. Generally.—The person who executes a deed is the proper one to acknowledge its execution.¹ The acknowledgment of a deed executed by an incompetent grantor is void.²

Several Grantors.—In the absence of statutes providing otherwise, a deed executed by two or more grantors must be acknowledged by each one in order to be binding on him.³ But where there is nothing on the face of a deed exe-statute of the republic of Texas, providing that deeds may be acknowledged without the republic, before "any judge of a superior court of record," for the court cannot judicially know that such judge was a judge of a superior court of record. Hill v. Taylor, 77 Tex. 295.

1. Acknowledgment must be by Grantor.—A deed purporting to be made by husband and wife, stating that the husband, with the consent of the wife, granted, etc., duly acknowledged by both, was held invalid as to the wife, she not being a grantor. Hawkins v. Gould, 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 243. See infra, this title. The Certificate: What it must Certify.

Acknowledgment by Strangers a Nullity.—A deed can be acknowledged only by those who have executed it. Hunter v. Bryan, 2 Murph. (N. Car.) 178, 5 Am. Dec. 526. See also Hendon v. White, 52 Ala. 597.

Where certain persons are named in a deed as grantors, but do not sign the instrument, it is not made their deed by their subsequent acknowledgment of it as their act and deed; and a deed in which certain persons are named as grantors, and which is signed and acknowledged by other persons also, is not the deed of the other persons not named therein. Adams v. Medsker, 25 W. Va. 127.

A Deed of Trust need not be acknowledged by the trustee and cestui que trust; it is sufficient if the grantor acknowledge it. Williams v. Jones, 2 Ala. 314. See Bradford v. Dawson, 2 Ala. 203.

Mutual Covenant must be Acknowledged by Both Parties—Iowa.—A lease containing mutual covenants as between the parties is valid without acknowledgment, but cannot be read in evidence under the Iowa Code unless acknowledged by both parties. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Lewis, 53 Iowa 101.

2. Acknowledgment by Infant Feme Covert is Void.—Ross v. Adams, 28 N. J. L. 160; Porch v. Fries, 18 N. J. Eq. 204; Sandford v. McLean, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 117; Priest v. Cummings, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 617; Schrader v. Decker, 9 Pa. St. 14, 49 Am. Dec. 538. See also Doe v. Player, 72 N. Car. 94; Jones v. Cohen, 82 N. Car. 75; Epps v. Flowers, 101 N. Car. 158.

Where the certificate of acknowledgment fails to state that the feme covert was of full age, the presumption is that she was of age, until the contrary is proved. Battin v. Bigelow, Pet. (C. C.) 452.

Where the magistrate is not required to certify as to the full age of the person making the acknowledgment, his certificate of that fact is not conclusive. Williams v. Baker, 71 Pa. St. 476. See also Thompson v. New England Mortg. Security Co. (Ala., 1895), 18 So. Rep. 315.

Acknowledgment by Deranged Grantor Void.—

A married woman's acknowledgment taken while she was suffering from mental disorder is void. Owing's Case, 1 Bland (Md.) 370. See also Woodbourne v. Gorrel, 66 N. Car. 82.

Whether Officer should Ascertain Mental Capacity of Grantor.—In an action on a bill to set aside assignments of mortgages procured by the transferee under suspicious circumstances, it was held that where the officer summoned to take the acknowledgment of the transfers neglected to investigate the condition of things, in the absence of the beneficiary, his testimony that the donor was in full possession of his faculties and gave an intelligent assent to the transfers is less satisfactory than if he had taken such precautions. Duncombe v. Richards, 46 Mich. 166.

The officer is not required to ascertain the mental capacity of a married woman to give her voluntary assent to a mortgage, and his certificate of her acknowledgment is, therefore, not conclusive as to her capacity, and parol evidence is admissible to show that she was insane when she affixed her name to the instrument and made the acknowledgment. Thompson v. New England Mortg. Security Co. (Ala., 1895), 18 So. Rep. 315, following Williams v. Baker, 71 Pa. St. 476.

3. The record of a deed executed by several grantors, but not acknowledged by one of them, is not constructive notice to a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer from him. Farmers', etc., Bank v. Bronson, 14 Mich. 361. See also Hall v. Redson, 10 Mich. 21; Weeping Water v. Reed, 21 Neb. 261.

When Acknowledgment by One of Several Grantors Valid—Massachusetts.—A deed executed by husband and wife need be acknowledged by the husband only, it not being necessary for both grantors to acknowledge the deed. Mass. Pub. Stat. 1882, c. 120, § 6; Perkins v. Richardson, 11 Allen (Mass.) 538.

It was held, prior to the enactment of this statute, that a recorded deed properly executed by two persons, but acknowledged by one only, is at least presumptive evidence of notice to creditors and subsequent purchasers, and the notice is the same whether the grantors are seized as tenants in common of the whole land conveyed, or are separately seized of distinct parts. Shaw v. Poor, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 86, 17 Am. Dec. 347, followed in Palmer v. Paine, 9 Gray (Mass.) 56, where it was held that a deed by husband and wife, of the wife's estate, acknowledged by the husband only, was properly recorded, and constituted notice as if acknowledged by both.

In Catlin v. Ware, 9 Mass. 218, 6 Am. Dec. 56, it was held that a deed executed by husband and wife need be acknowledged by the husband only. The court said: "As to cuted by several grantors showing that it was not intended to operate or have any effect unless it was so executed by all the parties as to be valid and binding on all, it has been held that the fact that the acknowledgment of some of the grantors was defective will not render the deed invalid as to the others.¹

2. Agent or Attorney.—Acknowledgments of deeds and other instruments may be made by an agent or attorney in fact who has authority to execute the same for his principal; but it must appear from the certificate that the acknowledgment is the act of the principal, and not of the agent or attorney.²

the want of acknowledgment by the wife, we think an acknowledgment unnecessary in the case. One party to a deed acknowledging it gives notoriety to it, and that is the whole that is necessary." See also Dudley v. Sumner, 5 Mass. 438.

Missouri.—Under the Missouri law as it stood in 1821 the only object of acknowledgment was to authorize the recording of a deed, and thus to impart notice, and for this purpose acknowledgment by one of the grantors only was sufficient. It was therefore held that a deed by husband and wife executed at that time and acknowledged by the wife only was properly admitted to record. Meyer v. Campbell, 12 Mo. 603.

The acknowledgment of a deed certified as follows: "Personally appeared * * * J. A. S. by his attorney in fact, J. S. F., known to me to be the person who executed the within instrument of writing, who acknowledged * * * that he signed, sealed, and delivered the same as his voluntary act," is a valid acknowledgment. Talbert v. Stewart, 39 Cal. 602; followed in McAdow v. Black, 9 Mont. 601. See Bigelow v. Livingston, 28 Minn. 57.

Prior to the Iowa Act of 1858 (Iowa Rev. Code 1888, §1962) the acknowledgment by an attorney in fact, as such, of a chattel mortgage as his own act and deed, the deed being afterwards signed by the principal, would be considered in law as the acknowledgment of his principal. Sowden v. Craig, 26 Iowa 156, 96 Am. Dec. 125.

And the acknowledgment by an attorney, as attorney, that a deed is the voluntary act and deed of his principal, would probably be good under the provisions of § 1963 of the same act (Iowa Rev. Code 1888). Clark v. Connor, 28 Iowa 311.

A deed executed by an attorney in fact as attorney, and acknowledged by him "on part and behalf of his principal," is valid. Onion v. Hall, 1 Har. & M. (Md.) 173.

Acknowledgment in Court.—A deed by husband and wife, acknowledged in open court by an attorney, as attorney, in pursuance of a power annexed to the deed, is valid. Elliot v. Osborn, 1 Har. & M. (Md.) 146.

Several Attorneys.—A deed executed by several attorneys in fact must be acknowledged by them, all as the act and deed of their principal, and not as their own. Peters v. Condron, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 80. See also Hevner v. Matthews (D. C. App.), 22 Wash. L. Rep. 745.

Several Principals.—Where an attorney in fact executed a deed for his principals and acknowledged it for the said principals (naming them) as his own act and deed, the acknowledgment was held valid. Fulweiler v. Baugher, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 45. It was so held in the case of an acknowledgment by a deputy sheriff for the sheriff. Wilson v. Russell, (Dakota, 1887), 31 N. W. Rep. 645. Compare Clarke v. Courtney, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 319.

Sheriff's Deed.—A deed executed by the deputy sheriff in the name of the sheriff was acknowledged by the deputy, the certificate stating that "Personally appeared J. M. H., sheriff, * * * by W. T. S., deputy, * * * and acknowledged that he executed the foregoing deed for the purposes and consideration and in the capacity therein set forth and expressed." The acknowledgment was held sufficient. Tegrell v. Martin, 64 Tex. 121. See also Huey v. Van Wie, 23 Wis. 613; Scheiber v. Kaehler, 49 Wis. 291; Ward v. Walters, 63 Wis. 39; Marx v. Hanthorn, 30 Fed. Rep. 579.

It has been held in Missouri that the acknowledgment of a sheriff's deed by the deputy sheriff in his own name as deputy was void. Samuels v. Shelton, 48 Mo. 444.

Acknowledgment by Guardian.—A deed executed by a guardian for his ward, and acknowledged by him "to be his act and deed, as guardian as aforesaid, and thereby the act and deed of said M.," was held valid. Van Ness v. U. S. Bank, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 17.

Agent of Corporation.—Under a statute which provided that any corporation authorized to hold real estate might convey the same by an agent appointed for that purpose, the acknowledgment of a deed from the corporation by a duly appointed agent, who as agent of the corporation acknowledged the instrument to be his free act and deed, was a valid acknowledgment. McDaniels v. Flower Brook Mfg. Co., 22 Vt. 274.

Acknowledgment by Husband as Attorney for Wife.—Where the husband executed a mortgage for himself and as attorney in fact for his wife, and the certificate, after the usual recital of the appearance and acknowledgment of the instrument by him, continued: "And I do further certify that personally appeared P. V., personally known to me to

3. Partners.—Conveyances executed by a partnership may be acknowledged by any member of the firm signing the instrument in the name of the firm,¹ but an acknowledgment purporting to have been made by the firm with-

be the same person whose name is subscribed to the within instrument as the attorney in fact of M. A. V., his wife, and the said P. V. duly acknowledged to me that he subscribed the name of M. A. V. thereto as principal, and his own name as attorney in fact," it was held that the certificate showed a sufficient acknowledgment by the husband in behalf of his wife, as well as for himself. Richmond v. Voorhees (Wash., 1894), 38 Pac. Rep. 1014.

Where Separate Examination Required, Husband Cannot be Attorney for Wife.—Under Texas Civil Statutes (Sayles), art. 559, a married woman cannot convey her separate property by her husband as her attorney unless she herself join in the deed and acknowledge it upon separate examination. Mexla v. Oliver, 148 U. S. 664; Cannon v. Boutwell, 53 Tex. 626; Peak v. Brinson, 71 Tex. 310.

But she may jointly with her husband make a valid conveyance of her separate property by an attorney in fact, duly authorized by power of attorney executed and acknowledged in the manner prescribed by law for the execution and acknowledgment of her deeds of conveyance. Patton v. King, 26 Tex. 685, 84 Am. Dec. 596; Warren v. Jones, 69 Tex. 462. See also Cannon v. Boutwell, 53 Tex. 626; Jones v. Robbins, 74 Tex. 615. See infra, this title, Married Women—Examination must be Personal.

Wife as Attorney for Husband.—As to a wife's executing and acknowledging a deed as attorney for her husband, see Fowler v. Shearer, 7 Mass. 14.

Acknowledgment for an Undisclosed Principal.

—A deed executed by an attorney in fact in his own name, and acknowledged by him for the purposes therein mentioned, the name of the principal and the fact that the attorney was an attorney nowhere appearing in the certificate or deed, was held void as a deed of the principal although the deed was subsequently altered so that it purported to be executed by the principal by his attorney in fact. North v. Henneberry, 44 Wis. 306.

Dedication of Town Plats—Illinois.—Under the Illinois statute in force in 1833, providing for the record of town plats, it was held that an attorney in fact was not authorized to acknowledge such plats, and a plat so acknowledged would not vest the legal title of the streets in the city. Gosselin v. Chicago, 103 Ill. 623.

Proof of Agent's Authority.—A certificate of acknowledgment showing only an acknowledgment of the professed agent of the grantor of his execution of the deed in the name of the said grantor, without the exhibition of any evidence of his authority to represent him in that behalf, is insufficient. Job v. Tebbetts, 9 Ill. 143. See also Elliott v. Pearce, 20 Ark. 508.

The power of attorney to convey lands should be proved or acknowledged, and recorded in the same manner as the conveyance itself. Moore v. Farrow, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 41; McDaniels v. Grace, 15 Ark. 465; Citizens' F. Ins., etc., Co. v. Doll, 35 Md. 89, 6 Am. Rep. 360. See also the titles AGENCY; RECORDING ACTS.

1. Acknowledgment by Member of Partnership.—Klumpp v. Gardner, 114 N. Y. 153; Hooper v. Baillie, 118 N. Y. 413; Troy Nat. Bank v. Scriven (Supreme Ct.), 18 N. Y. Supp. 277.

A mortgage deed of a partnership, executed by both members of the firm and acknowledged by one only, is not sufficiently acknowledged to be admitted to record under the Florida recording acts, one partner not being competent to acknowledge for the other member of the firm. Sanders v. Pepoon, 4 Fla. 465. See also Treadwell v. Sackett, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 440.

But it was held in McCoy v. Boley, 21 Fla. 803, that a mortgage executed by one member of a firm and legally binding upon it may be acknowledged for the firm by the partner executing it. In this case Raney, J., in distinguishing Sanders v. Pepoon, 4 Fla. 465, said: "Without questioning in the least the correctness of the position that, where two partners actually join in the execution of an instrument of which a record is contemplated by our recording acts, each must acknowledge for himself, and that one cannot for the other, we do not think there is any inconsistency between such position and the one that where an instrument covered by our recording statutes is executed by one partner in the firm name as a partnership act, and is such as under the law of partnership it is competent for him to execute, he may also acknowledge it for record. In the former case one cannot, of course, acknowledge as having done for his partner that which his copartner did for himself, but in the latter case when, acting as a partner, he has himself done that which is as binding on all the partners as it would be had each acted, he can, we think, certainly acknowledge the act, and the fact that the law of his relation to the others makes the act binding upon them does not change the fact that he did the act, nor should it, for any reason that we can see, restrain his power under the statute to acknowledge that he did it."

A mortgage by a partnership, signed with the firm name by one of the partners, may be acknowledged by any one of the firm so signing, although his name does not appear in the style of the firm. Keck v. Fisher, 58 Mo. 532; Leon, etc., Land Co. v. Dunlap, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 315.

To a partnership deed of trust signed "W. K. & Co." was appended a notary's certificate that it was acknowledged by "E. W., one of the firm of W. K. & Co., the grantors." It was held that this was a sufficient acknowledgment. McNeal Pipe, etc., Co. v. Wolman, 114 N. Car. 178; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 79 Iowa 290.

Surviving Partner.—A certificate of acknowlout anything to show by which member of the firm it was made is void.¹

4. Corporations.—The acknowledgment of deeds and other instruments by corporations should be made by some representative of the corporation who has authority to execute such instruments in its behalf.² In the absence of statutory provisions the officer affixing the corporate seal is the proper person to make the acknowledgment.³ Acknowledgments may be made by the president, vice president, secretary, treasurer, cashier of a bank, or other authorized officer or agent of the corporation.⁴ An instrument may be edgment of an assignment executed by "D. F." and "D. F. as surviving partner," reciting that "D. F." acknowledged the instrument, is sufficient, without showing that he acknowledged it "as surviving partner" also. Hanson v. Metcalf, 46 Minn. 25.

Proof of Authority to Acknowledge.—A partner has no authority to execute and acknowledge a deed in the name of a firm, without the previous consent or subsequent ratification of the other members of the firm; and where a deed purporting to be executed by a firm was signed in the firm's name and was acknowledged by one of the partners "as his act and deed, and the act and deed of said firm," but no authority or subsequent adoption of the deed was shown, it was held that the execution thereof as a deed of the firm was not sufficiently proven. Shirley v. Fearn, 33 Miss. 653, 69 Am. Dec. 375.

1. Sloan v. Owens, etc., Mach. Co., 70 Mo. 206. In this case the court by Norton, J., said: "The proper form of a certificate of acknowledgment to a deed executed in the partnership name relating to personal property is given in the case of Keck v. Fisher, 58 Mo. 532. In that case the instrument was signed 'H. H. & Co.,' the form of the certificate was as follows: 'Be it remembered that H. H. & Co., by C. B., of the firm of H. H. & Co., who is personally known * * * to be the person who subscribed the foregoing as a party thereto, appeared before me and acknowledged that he executed and delivered the same for the uses and purposes therein mentioned.' This certificate was held to be sufficient. We apprehend that if the certificate of the officer in that case had simply stated that 'H. & Co.' personally appeared and acknowledged the same, it would have been held insufficient." Followed in Hughes v. Morris, 110 Mo. 306.

Proof of Existence of Partnership.—It has been held that § 1185 of the California Civil Code does not require the notary taking the acknowledgment of a partnership instrument to know who are members of the firm, and that a power of attorney executed by a partnership cannot be admitted in evidence upon a notary's certificate to the effect that the instrument was "acknowledged by the therein named A. B. & Co. by C. B. (personally known to me), a member of that firm," etc., without outside evidence of the existence of the partnership, and of the fact that the person named in the certificate as the party making the acknowledgment is a member thereof. Malloye v. Coubrough, 96 Cal. 649.

Form of Partnership Acknowledgment—California.—Under the California statute (Cal. Civ. Code, § 2468) no particular form of acknowledge of certificates of partnership is required, any form being sufficient which indicates that the partners have acknowledged, before the proper officer, that the instrument is theirs. Fabian v. Callahan, 56 Cal. 159. See also the title PARTNERSHIP.

Lee*, 11 Nev. 194; Bason v. King's Mountain Min. Co., 90 N. Car. 417. See also the title CORPORATIONS (PRIVATE).

3. Acknowledgment by Officer Affixing Seal.—Kelly v. Calhoun, 95 U. S. 710; Murphy v. Welch, 128 Mass. 489; Merrill v. Montgomery, 25 Mich. 73; Bowers v. Hechtman, 45 Minn. 238; Lovett v. Steam Saw Mill Assoc., 6 Paige (N. Y.) 54; Sheehan v. Davis, 17 Ohio St. 571. See also Jinwright v. Nelson (Ala., 1895), 17 So. Rep. 91; Johnson v. Bush, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 207; Isham v. Bennington Iron Co., 19 Vt. 230.

In Bowers v. Hechtman, 45 Minn. 238, the court by Mitchell, J., said: "The officer or agent who, in behalf of the corporation, affixes the common seal to an instrument, is, in the absence of any statutory provision, deemed the party executing it. He also stands in the relation of a subscribing witness to the execution of the deed by the corporation, and is the proper party to be examined or to make affidavit to prove that the seal affixed by him was the corporate seal, and that it was affixed by authority of the board of directors."

Where the Corporate Seal was Not Confided to the Care of Any Particular Officer, a deed of a corporation signed by all the directors present at the meeting, and sealed with the corporate seal, was properly acknowledged by such directors as officers empowered to affix the seal of the corporation. Gordon v. Preston, 1 Watts (Pa.) 385, 26 Am. Dec. 75. See also Benedict v. Denton, Walk. (Mich.) 336; Den v. Tunis, 25 N. J. L. 633.

acknowledged as the act of the corporation as such,¹ or in the name of the officer as his own act and deed where it appears that he is acting for the corporation.²

New Hampshire.—Tenney v. East Warren Lumber Co., 43 N. H. 343.

New York.—Hoopes v. Auburn Water Works Co., 37 Hun (N. Y.) 572.

Texas.—Muller v. Boone, 63 Tex. 91; Ballard v. Carmichael, 83 Tex. 355.

Vermont.—McDaniels v. Flower Brook Mfg. Co., 22 Vt. 274.

Municipality.—A deed executed by the president pro tempore of a city council and acting mayor of the city, and acknowledged by him as the voluntary act and deed of such president and mayor, was properly admitted in evidence without further proof of the officer's character as such. Middleton Sav. Bank v. Dubuque, 19 Iowa 467.

Acknowledgment by Trustees of Corporation.—A deed purporting on its face to be the deed of a corporation, sealed with a corporate seal, and signed by the trustees of the corporation as such, and duly acknowledged by them, was held good as the deed of the corporation. Miners' Ditch Co. v. Zellerbach, 37 Cal. 543, 99 Am. Dec. 300.

Corporate Mortgage without Seal—North Carolina.—Where a mortgage by a corporation was signed by the president, secretary, and two stockholders, but not sealed under the common seal, and the secretary had no power to execute the instrument, it was held that a probate reciting that it was acknowledged by the secretary, and proven on his oath and examination as to the president and the two stockholders, was insufficient, and did not authorize registration, and was ineffectual to pass title as to creditors. Duke v. Markham, 105 N. Car. 131, 18 Am. St. Rep. 889.

Acknowledgment by President and Secretary where there is no Special Provision.—There being in Alabama no statutory provisions regulating the manner in which conveyances by corporations may be acknowledged, the provisions of the code, sections 1799-1804, in regard to the acknowledgment of conveyances by individuals, apply to those of corporations as well, and it was accordingly held in that state that a deed by a corporation, sealed with the corporate seal and signed in the name of the corporation by the president and secretary, accompanied by a certificate of acknowledgment of execution, in due form, purporting to have been made before the United States consul for Leith at Edinburgh, Scotland, by the president and secretary of the corporation, who were certified by the consul to be known to him, and to have made the acknowledgment in their official capacity, was sufficiently acknowledged. Jinwright v. Nelson (Ala., 1895), 17 So. Rep. 91.

Missouri: Sufficient Corporation Acknowledgment.—The Missouri statute (Acts of 1883, p. 20) prescribing the form of acknowledgments by corporations has been held to be simply additional to the statutory requirements existing at the time, so that an acknowledgment, good under the law as it existed before the passage of that act, would still be good. Thus where a notary public, in certifying an acknowledgment by a corporation, attempted to follow the form prescribed by the Act of 1883, but omitted the words "by authority of its board of directors" where they appeared in the form immediately after the words "and that said instrument was signed and sealed in behalf of said association," the acknowledgment following the form given in all other respects, it was held that the acknowledgment, being sufficient under Missouri Rev. Stat. 1879, § 743, was good. Huse v. Ames, 104 Mo. 91.

Acknowledgment Not Showing Official Character of Officers.—An assignment of a judgment purporting to be executed by a bank was executed and acknowledged by persons designating themselves to be the president and cashier of the bank, but the certificates did not state that they were such officers. It was held that it was not sufficient proof of the official character of a person to designate him as an officer, and that the acknowledgment was insufficient in the absence of further proof of their authority. Klemme v. McLay, 68 Iowa 158.

Acknowledgment before an Officer of the Corporation.—The acknowledgment of a deed of a corporation may be made by the vice president, before a notary who is also the secretary of the corporation and who countersigned the deed, his signature as secretary not being necessary to its validity, and his signing as witness not disqualifying him as notary. Sawyer v. Cox, 63 Ill. 130. See also Benson Bank v. Hove, 45 Minn. 40; Horton v. Columbian Bldg. Assoc., 6 Cinc. L. Bull. (Ohio) 141.

1. Acknowledgment as Act of Corporation.—Bowers v. Hechtman, 45 Minn. 238; Missouri Fire Clay Works v. Ellison, 30 Mo. App. 67; Chouteau v. Allen, 70 Mo. 290.

2. Acknowledgment by Officer as His Own Act.—A certificate of acknowledgment stating that designated individuals (being the same persons whose names are signed to the conveyance) holding specified offices in the grantor corporation acknowledged the instrument as their own act for the uses and purposes mentioned has been held valid. Eppright v. Nickerson, 78 Mo. 483; Descombes v. Wood, 91 Mo. 196, 60 Am. Rep. 239; Kansas City v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 77 Mo. 180; Muller v. Boone, 63 Tex. 91; Ballard v. Carmichael, 83 Tex. 355. But compare Brinley v. Mann, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 337, 48 Am. Dec. 669.

Where the deed of a corporation was signed by "F., the president of the L. Company," and "C., the treasurer of the L. Company," and acknowledged by F. and C. as individuals, the acknowledgment was held to be sufficient. Tenney v. East Warren Lumber

5. Married Women—a. GENERALLY—Disabilities of Married Women Removed by Statute.—At common law a married woman could not convey her property by deed. This disability has been removed in all of the states by statutes regulating the manner of making such conveyances and prescribing the formalities to be observed in taking and certifying the acknowledgment thereof.¹

Acknowledgment Essential Part of Married Woman's Deed.—Except where the practice is changed by recent statutes, a married woman's deed is absolutely void unless accompanied by a certificate showing an acknowledgment before an authorized officer in strict or at least substantial conformity with the statutory regulations.²

Co., 43 N. H. 343; Fitch v. Lewiston Steam Mill Co., 80 Me. 34. See Hoopes v. Auburn Water Works Co., 37 Hun (N. Y.) 572.

Acknowledgment by Attorney for Corporation.

—In Frostburg Mut. Bldg. Assoc. v. Brace, 51 Md. 508, the certificate of the justice stated that the attorney of the corporation appeared and acknowledged the mortgage to be his act and deed, instead of "the act and deed of the corporation." It was held that the acknowledgment was aided by intentment, and that it should be read and understood as the acknowledgment of the corporation by its attorney, according to what was the manifest intention. But compare Howe Mach. Co. v. Avery, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 555.

Acknowledgment of Articles of Incorporation.

—Under the California act (Cal. Civ. Code, § 292) providing that articles of incorporation must be subscribed by five or more persons and acknowledged by each before some officer authorized to take and certify acknowledgments of conveyances of real property, an acknowledgment by four out of five of such subscribers was held insufficient. People v. Montecito Water Co., 97 Cal. 276, distinguishing Larrabee v. Baldwin, 35 Cal. 155, where a similar defective acknowledgment was held to be cured by statute.

Under the New York act (Laws 1844, c. 158, § 1) providing that a certificate of incorporation may be acknowledged before "any officer authorized to take acknowledgments or proofs of conveyances of real estate," it was held that a county commissioner of deeds could take such an acknowledgment. The official character of the officer need not appear in the subscription to the certificate if it is shown in the body thereof. Second M. E. Church v. Humphrey (Supreme Ct.), 21 N. Y. Supp. 89, 66 Hun (N. Y.) 628. Compare as to former law First Baptist Soc. v. Rapalee, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 605. See also Humphreys v. Mooney, 5 Colo. 283; Sword v. Wickersham, 29 Kan. 746; Riker v. Cornwell, 113 N. Y. 115; State v. Lee, 21 Ohio St. 662; Spinning v. Home Bldg., etc., Assoc., 26 Ohio St. 483.

Under Indiana Rev. Stat. 1881, § 3851, requiring persons who desire to organize a corporation to "make, sign, and acknowledge before some officer capable to take acknowledgments of deeds, a certificate in writing," etc., it was held that merely signing the articles of association, without acknowledgment thereof, did not make one a stockholder of a corporation and bind him to its articles of association. *Coppage v. Deed from Husband and Wife to Wife's Lands Acknowledged by Husband Only.—Unless otherwise provided by statute, a deed conveying the wife's lands, executed by both

New York.—Gillett v. Stanley, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 121; Martin v. Dwelly, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 9; 21 Am. Dec. 245; Jackson v. Stevens, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 110; Jackson v. Cairns, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 301; Doe v. Howland, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 277, 18 Am. Dec. 445; Knowles v. McCamly, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 342.

North Carolina.—Den v. Lewis, 8 Ired. (N. Car.) 70, 47 Am. Dec. 338.

Ohio.—Kilbourn v. Fury, 26 Ohio St. 153.

Tennessee.—Perry v. Calhoun, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 551.

Texas.—Berry v. Donley, 26 Tex. 737; Cross v. Everts, 28 Tex. 523; Coffey v. Hendricks, 66 Tex. 676; Norton v. Davis, 83 Tex. 32; Stiles v. Japhet, 84 Tex. 91; Stone v. Sledge (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 24 S. W. Rep. 697.

West Virginia.—Renick v. Renick, 5 W. Va. 285.

See also Perdue v. Aldridge, 19 Ind. 290; Grapengether v. Fejervary, 9 Iowa 163, 74 Am. Dec. 336; McNair v. Com., 26 Pa. St. 388; Waltee v. Weaver, 57 Tex. 569; and cases cited in notes infra.

Certificate of Acknowledgment Not Essential—California.—Under the provisions of the California Civil Code, §§ 1186, 1187, the certificate of acknowledgment is not, as formerly, an essential part of a married woman's conveyance. An acknowledgment, according to the code, is sufficient of itself to pass the estate. The certificate is simply record proof of the fact of acknowledgment. Wedel v. Herman, 59 Cal. 507. See also Danglarde v. Elias, 80 Cal. 65.

But the deed has no validity until acknowledged in conformity with the statutory provisions. Ewald v. Corbett, 32 Cal. 493.

It is held in Healdsburg Bank v. Bailhache, 65 Cal. 327, in apparent conflict with Wedel v. Herman, 59 Cal. 507, that the deed must be acknowledged and certified to be valid. The deed in question, however, had not been acknowledged at all, which of itself would be sufficient to prevent its being valid, the question as to the necessity for the certificate being, therefore, not directly involved.

Acknowledgment through a Telephone.—Where the notary's certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment is in due form, and neither fraud nor duress is alleged, it is no objection to the sufficiency of the acknowledgment that the woman was not personally present before the notary, but, being three miles distant from him, made the acknowledgment through a telephone. Banning v. Banning, 80 Cal. 271, 13 Am. St. Rep. 156.

Evidence of Acknowledgment.—The certificate of acknowledgment of a deed executed by husband and wife stated the fact of the wife's acknowledgment, but not that of the husband's. On the minutes of the court was this entry: "Deed from A B and C B to D E was acknowledged." It was held that the deed could be read as being acknowledged by the husband. Hunter v. Bryan, 2 Murph. (N. Car.) 178, 5 Am. Dec. 526.

Acknowledgment to Bind Wife, of Deeds Executed by Both Husband and Wife.—In Illinois, prior to 1869, a married woman could not dispose of her right to dower, nor of any other interest she might have in land, by merely joining her husband in the deed, unless the deed was duly acknowledged by her, as required by statute. Ayres v. Doe, 3 Ill. 307; Heinrich v. Simpson, 66 Ill. 57; Bute v. Kneale, 109 Ill. 652. But she may do so under the Act of 1869. Bute v. Kneale, 109 Ill. 652.

Under the laws of Massachusetts (Mass. Pub. Stat. 1882, c. 124, § 6) it was held that a deed executed by husband and wife was sufficient to bind the wife, although acknowledged by the husband only. Dudley v. Sumner, 5 Mass. 438; Catlin v. Ware, 9 Mass. 218, 6 Am. Dec. 56; Perkins v. Richardson, 11 Allen (Mass.) 538.

Under the Michigan Laws of 1838, a deed by husband and wife of the wife's real estate must be acknowledged by both, and the wife must be separately examined. Dewey v. Campau, 4 Mich. 565.

Acknowledgment by Husband and Wife need Not be at Same Time.—It was held under the Ohio statute of 1831, that while a deed executed by husband and wife was not binding on the wife until acknowledged by both, it was not necessary that they should both acknowledge at the same time or place, or before the same officer, or that their acknowledgment should be certified by a single certificate. Williams v. Robson, 6 Ohio St. 510; Ludlow v. O'Neil, 29 Ohio St. 181. So also in Kentucky. Ford v. Gregory, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 175. See also infra, this title, Time when Acknowledgment must be Made.

Lands of Husband and Wife Embraced in the Same Conveyance.—Where lands owned by the husband and those owned by the wife are embraced in the same conveyance, it is not necessary under the Missouri statute of 1855 that the wife should make two acknowledgments, one for her own lands and one relinquishing dower in the lands of her husband; nor need the single acknowledgment contain distinct references to the lands thus severally owned. Barker v. Circle, 60 Mo. 258.

Deed from Wife to Husband.—Under the North Carolina statute (N. Car. Code, § 1835) providing that a conveyance of a married woman to her husband shall be acknowledged according to the rules of conveyances to married women, and that the officer shall certify that the conveyance is not unreasonable or injurious to her, a deed without such certificate is void. Sims v. Ray, 96 N. Car. 87.

Deed from Husband to Wife.—It was held in Texas that it was not necessary to the validity of a deed executed by a husband to his wife, that he should acknowledge it. Frank v. Frank (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 25 S. W. Rep. 819.

Assent of Husband.—Under the statutes in husband and wife and acknowledged by the husband only, is valid as to him, and passes his interest in the land to the grantee.¹

b. REFUSAL TO ACKNOWLEDGE—POWER OF COURT TO ORDER.—If a married woman, after the execution of a deed which requires an acknowledgment in order to convey or release her own rights, refuses to acknowledge it pursuant to the statute, it seems that she cannot be compelled by a court of equity to acknowledge the instrument.² But when the legal title to land in trust was cast by descent upon a married woman, and the law required that a deed executed by her should be acknowledged as executed voluntarily, and she refused so to acknowledge it, the court compelled her by decree.³

c. SEPARATE EXAMINATION—(1) In General.—It is, or has been, provided by statute in most of the states, that the acknowledgment of a married woman could be taken only upon her examination separate and apart from her husband.⁴ In some of the states, however, the provision just referred to has force in Virginia and Ohio in 1837, a deed by husband and wife conveying the latter's land, and duly acknowledged by her, is inoperative to convey her title unless the husband in her lifetime, by a proper acknowledgment in the form prescribed by law, signifies his assent to such conveyance. Sewall v. Haymaker, 127 U. S. 719.

Such assent is sufficiently signified by his signing and acknowledging his wife's deed, although he is not named therein as grantor. Evans v. Summerlin, 19 Fla. 858.

Deed to Lands of Husband Not Acknowledged by Wife.—Where a deed by husband and wife was duly executed and acknowledged by the husband, but the wife's acknowledgment was defective, it was held that the deed nevertheless passed the title subject to the contingent right of dower, and was properly recorded as the deed of the husband. Rayner v. Lee, 20 Mich. 384. See also Hall v. Redson, 10 Mich. 21.

Where husband and wife join in the execution of a deed conveying the husband's lands, the deed is good though not acknowledged by the wife, and where she hands it to the grantee, saying that the signature was hers, she will be bound thereby. Mays v. Hedges, 79 Ind. 288. See Hubble v. Wright, 23 Ind. 322.

Where the Wife Unnecessarily Joins with the husband in the conveyance of his property, the fact that her acknowledgment is defective is immaterial. Bassett v. Martin, 83 Tex. 339; Jack v. Dillon, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 192; Sampson v. McArthur, 8 Grant's Ch. (Canada) 72. See also Edens v. Simpson (Tex., 1891), 17 S. W. Rep. 788.

Mull*, 91 N. Car. 203; Newcomb v. Smith, Wright (Ohio) 208; James v. Lyon, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 471; Churchill v. Monroe, 1 R. I. 209; Merchants', etc., Bank v. Thomas, 69 Tex. 237; Harris v. Wells, 85 Tex. 312; Knapper v. Wooster, Brayt. (Vt.) 50.

Deed from Husband and Wife, of Wife's Lands, Not Acknowledged by Husband.—A deed by husband and wife conveying the wife's lands, and acknowledged by the wife but not by the husband, is void. Den v. Hunter, 2 Hayw. (N. Car.) 401.

But under the Tennessee Act of 1833, where a husband joined in his wife's deed conveying her land, acknowledgment by the wife only was held sufficient. Mount v. Kesterson, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 452. See Montgomery v. Hobson, Meigs (Tenn.) 437.

2. Where a married woman joined with her husband in a mortgage deed to secure the purchase price of land, but refused to acknowledge that she had voluntarily executed the deed, it was held that, while she could not be compelled to acknowledge it, the contract was binding upon her, and she could hold the land only on condition of paying the purchase price. Burns v. McGregor, 90 N. Car. 222. But see Martin v. Dwelly, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 9.

4. Cases construing statutes to this effect, either existing now or formerly in force in the states named, are here collected. In several of these states the statutes are no longer in force. See infra, this title, Under Recent Statutes. As statutory changes in this respect are constantly being made, the latest local statutes should be consulted.

For additional cases holding that the wife must be separately examined, see notes immediately following, and infra, this title, Under Recent Statutes.

Contract to Convey Land Void unless Duty Acknowledged.—Where a married woman's contract to convey her separate real estate was not acknowledged by her own separate examination as required by law, it was held that her contract was void both at law and in equity. Rumfelt v. Clemens, 46 Pa. St. 455; Kirk v. Clark, 59 Pa. St. 479; Glidden v.

been abolished by the force of more recent statutes.¹

(2) Origin and Object of the Practice.—The separate examination of married women is designed as a substitute for the common-law method of conveying lands belonging to married women by the process of fine and recovery.²

Strupler, 52 Pa. St. 400; Colburn v. Kelly, 61 Pa. St. 314; Innis v. Templeton, 95 Pa. St. 262, 40 Am. Rep. 643; Miltenberger v. Croyle, 27 Pa. St. 170; Caldwell's Appeal (Pa., 1886), 7 Atl. Rep. 211; Stivers v. Tucker, 126 Pa. St. 74; Kirkland v. Hepselgefer, 2 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 84; Knowles v. McCamy, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 342. See also Martin v. Dwelly, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 9, 21 Am. Dec. 245; Clark v. Thompson, 12 Pa. St. 274.

Unacknowledged Executory Contract cannot be Enforced.—It was held under California Civ. Code, §§ 1093, 1116, that a specific performance of an unacknowledged executory contract of a married woman to convey her separate real property could not be compelled. Jackson v. Torrence, 83 Cal. 521.

It was so held under the Pennsylvania Act of 1848. Roseburgh v. Sterling, 27 Pa. St. 292.

And in Banbury v. Arnold, 91 Cal. 606, it was held that a married woman could not enforce against the vendee such an unacknowledged executory contract for the sale of her estate.

Acknowledgment of Deeds Executed before Marriage.—The acknowledgment by a married woman of a deed executed by her before marriage, made as a feme sole without separate examination, is a nullity. Johnson v. Walton, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 258.

But it was held in North Carolina that separate examination was not necessary where a married woman acknowledged a lease of land made by her while sole, as the executrix under the will of a former husband. Darden v. Neuse, etc., Steamboat Co., 107 N. Car. 437.

When Separate Examination is Not Necessary—Miscellaneous Cases.—Separate examination is not necessary in the absence of a statute requiring it, and an acknowledgment without separate examination was good in Texas prior to the Act of 1841. Harvey v. Hill, 7 Tex. 591. See also Groesbeck v. Bodman, 73 Tex. 287.

Prior to the enactment of the California statute requiring the declaration of a homestead selected from the separate property of a married woman (Cal. Civ. Code, §§ 1239, 1262, 1186) a married woman might acknowledge such declaration as if sole. Clements v. Stanton, 47 Cal. 60.

Where, by the Terms of the Conveyance Creating an Estate in a married woman, she is authorized to dispose of the same without privy examination, no such examination is necessary. Sharpe v. McPike, 62 Mo. 300; Sherman v. Turpin, 7 Coldw. (Tenn.) 382; Peterson v. Richman, 93 Tenn. 71. See also Small v. Field, 102 Mo. 104; Clayton v. Rose, 87 N. Car. 106.

There are decisions in colonial times in Pennsylvania holding conveyances good which failed to show a privy examination of the wife, the error in so taking acknowledgments being so common that the court applied the maxim communis error facit jus. Davey v. Turner, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 11; Lloyd v. Taylor, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 17. See Watson v. Bailey, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 470, 2 Am. Dec. 462; Kirk v. Dean, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 341.

Examination by a Commission.—Under the former laws of North Carolina requiring the examination of the wife to be made before a judge or court, if the wife by reason of infirmity was unable to attend, the judge or court might issue a commission to examine her elsewhere; but in case of a deed by husband and wife such commission could not be issued until the conveyance had been first acknowledged by the husband or proved by witnesses. Den v. Sutton, 1 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 582. See also Joyner v. Faulcon, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 386; Den v. Wilson, 2 Dev. (N. Car.) 306; Woodbourne v. Gorrel, 66 N. Car. 82.

Where neither the commission nor the order of record for issuing it sets forth that the woman was either so infirm or aged that she could not travel to court, an acknowledgment taken under a commission is inoperative to convey the wife's interest in the land. Fenner v. Jasper, 1 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 34.

Under the Kentucky Acts of 1785 and 1796 providing that the acknowledgment of a feme covert might be taken by two justices of the peace, when a commission was issued to them for that purpose, it was held that an acknowledgment taken without such commission would not pass title. Phillips v. Green, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 7, 13 Am. Dec. 124; Still v. Swan, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 155; Stansberry v. Pope, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 492; Smith v. White, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 16.

Acknowledgment in Open Court.—It was held in North Carolina that the probate of a deed by husband and wife, showing that it had been duly acknowledged in open court, and that the court had appointed a certain person to take the privy acknowledgment of the wife, who certified that he had examined her separate and apart from her husband, and that she had declared that she signed the deed freely and voluntarily, without any coercion or compulsion on the part of her husband, was sufficient. Robbins v. Harris, 96 N. Car. 557.

See also, as to acknowledgment in open court, Joyner v. Faulcon, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 385; Den v. Lamb, 13 Ired. (N. Car.) 400; Den v. Ferebee, 9 Ired. (N. Car.) 312; Den v. Wilson, 2 Dev. (N. Car.) 306; Den v. Hunter, 2 Hayw. (N. Car.) 401; Den v. Sutton, 1 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 582.

2. Origin of Separate Examination—United States.—Hitz v. Jenks, 123 U. S. 297. See also Sewall v. Haymaker, 127 U. S. 719.

Arkansas.—McGehee v. McKenzie, 43 Ark. 156.

Dakota.—Wambole v. Foote, 2 Dakota 1.
Florida.—Hart v. Sanderson, 18 Fla. 103.

The object of the separate examination and acknowledgment is to enable the wife to act freely, and without fear or coercion.¹

(3) General Requirements—(a) Certification.—There is some diversity in the statutory requirements respecting the separate examination, but it is generally provided that the officer's certificate must show that the wife was separately examined.²

Illinois.—Kerr v. Russell, 69 Ill. 666, 18 Am. Rep. 634; Ennor v. Thompson, 46 Ill. 214; Russell v. Rumsey, 35 Ill. 362.

Iowa.—Simms v. Hervey, 19 Iowa 273; Heaton v. Fryberger, 38 Iowa 185.

North Carolina.—McGlennery v. Miller, 90 N. Car. 216.

Ohio.—Brown v. Farran, 3 Ohio 140; Good v. Zercher, 12 Ohio 364; Chesnut v. Shane, 16 Ohio 599, 47 Am. Dec. 387.

Pennsylvania.—Roseburgh v. Sterling, 27 Pa. St. 202; Rumfelt v. Clemens, 46 Pa. St. 455; Miller v. Wentworth, 82 Pa. St. 280.

Rhode Island.—Churchill v. Monroe, 1 R. I. 209.

Texas.—Hollis v. Francois, 5 Tex. 196, 51

Am. Dec. 760; Womack v. Womack, 8 Tex. 397, 58 Am. Dec. 119; Mullins v. Weaver, 57 Tex. 5; Coombes v. Thomas, 57 Tex. 321; Angier v. Coward, 79 Tex. 551.

Virginia.—Countz v. Geiger, 1 Call (Va.) 191.

It was held in Moorman v. Board, 11 Bush (Ky.) 135, that unless a married woman acknowledges her deed and consents to its being recorded upon an examination separate and apart from her husband, the presumption that she did not act freely and without constraint arises as a matter of law, and is conclusive of the question.

2. Fact of Separate Examination must Appear in Certificate—Alabama.—Cox v. Holcomb, 87 Ala. 589, 13 Am. St. Rep. 79.

Arkansas.—Stillwell v. Adams, 29 Ark. 346; Shryock v. Cannon, 39 Ark. 434.

California.—Bours v. Zachariah, 11 Cal. 281, 70 Am. Dec. 779; Ewald v. Corbett, 32 Cal. 493; McLeran v. Benton, 43 Cal. 467; Wedel v. Herman, 59 Cal. 507; Muir v. Galloway, 61 Cal. 498; Hutchinson v. (b) Explanation of Contents.—It must also appear that the contents and legal effect of the deed were fully explained to her.¹

Who may Make the Explanation.—This explanation is generally made by the officer himself, but it has been held by some courts that the source of the wife's knowledge is immaterial, and that a certificate showing that the contents of the instrument were explained, without stating by whom the explanation was made, is sufficient.²

West Virginia.—Laughlin v. Fream, 14 W. Va. 322.

Canada.—Stayner v. Applegate, 8 U. C. C. P. 133, 451. See also Buck v. McCallum, 13 U. C. C. P. 163; Grant v. Taylor, 28 U. C. Q. B. 234.

Where the Certificate Shows on its Face that the acknowledgment was made in the presence of the husband, the acknowledgment is void, although it may not appear that the husband used any influence to induce his wife to make the acknowledgment, or even though it may be inferred that he was opposed to her doing so. Allen v. Shortridge, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 35. See also McMullen v. Eagan, 21 W. Va. 233.

Examination must Precede Acknowledgment.

—The acknowledgment must be after the examination, and where the certificate shows that the wife was personally examined after she had executed the acknowledgment, it is fatally defective. McMullen v. Eagan, 21 W. Va. 233; Laidley v. Knight, 23 W. Va. 735; Hockman v. McClanahan, 87 Va. 33; Virginia Coal, etc., Co. v. Roberson, 88 Va. 116.

1. It must Appear that the Contents of the Deed were Explained.—Alabama.—Roney v. Moss, 76 Ala. 491.

California.—Pease v. Barbiers, 10 Cal. 436; McLeran v. Benton, 43 Cal. 467; Hutchinson v. Ainsworth, 63 Cal. 286; Beck v. Soward, 76 Cal. 527; Bollinger v. Manning, 79 Cal. 7; Kennedy v. Gloster, 98 Cal. 143.

Sabin (Tex. Civ. App., 1895), 30 S. W. Rep. 568. See also Edens v. Simpson (Tex., 1891), 17 S. W. Rep. 788.

Virginia.—Hairston v. Doe, 12 Leigh (Va.) 445; Bolling v. Teel, 76 Va. 487; Virginia Coal, etc., Co. v. Roberson, 88 Va. 116.

West Virginia.—Bartlett v. Fleming, 3 W. Va. 163; Watson v. Michael, 21 W. Va. 568; Tavenner v. Barrett, 21 W. Va. 566.

Statute Requiring Explanation Not Applicable to Deed by Widow.—The statutory requirement that the contents of a deed shall be read and explained by the officer taking the acknowledgment applies only to cases of acknowledgments by married women; and although it would be eminently proper for the officer taking the acknowledgment of a widow, where she is known to him to be illiterate, aged, or mentally weak, to read or explain the contents of the instrument, failure to do so will not invalidate the acknowledgment. Beville v. Jones, 74 Tex. 148.

Explanation of an Instrument Referred to in the Deed Not Necessary.—Where a married woman conveys her property by a deed of trust, upon conditions stated in a separate instrument referred to in the deed, the notary taking her acknowledgment is not required to explain to her the contents of the document referred to. Bull v. Coe, 77 Cal. 54, 11 Am. St. Rep. 235.

2. Source of Wife's Knowledge Immaterial.—Unless so required by statute, the certificate need not state that the explanation was made

Interpreters.—Where an officer and the woman making the acknowledgment are ignorant of each other's language, the examination and explanation may be conducted by an interpreter, who shall be properly sworn.¹

Whether Explanation must be Private.—It is held in some states that the contents of a deed may be explained in the presence of the husband, as well as during the separate examination;² but in others the courts hold that the explanation must be made during the separate examination.³

When Explanation Unnecessary.—It is held in Missouri that no explanation is necessary where the wife is already informed,⁴ nor is it necessary as to immaterial points.⁵

by the officer himself. It is sufficient if the wife be made acquainted with the contents of the instrument, and a certificate showing that fact, without stating by whom the explanation was made, is good. Jansen v. McCahill, 22 Cal. 563, 83 Am. Dec. 84; La Société Française, etc., v. Beard, 54 Cal. 480; Thomas v. Meier, 18 Mo. 573.

It is immaterial whether the wife obtains her knowledge from her own examination of the instrument, from her husband, or from the officer taking the acknowledgment. Talbot v. Simpson, Pet. (C. C.) 188. See also Jett v. Rogers, 12 Bush (Ky.) 564.

A certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment of a deed of lands in Illinois in 1856, which showed that she, "fully understanding the contents of the foregoing instrument, acknowledged," etc., was held, by the Supreme Court of the United States to be sufficient under the statutes of Illinois in force at the time of the acknowledgment. Schley v. Pullman's Palace Car Co., 120 U. S. 575.

In Texas, under Tex. Civ. Stat. (Sayles) 1889, art. 4310, a certificate which fails to show that the instrument was explained by the officer is fatally defective. Ruleman v. Pritchett, 56 Tex. 482; Langton v. Marshall, 59 Tex. 296; Johnson v. Bryan, 62 Tex. 623. But see Miller v. Yturria, 69 Tex. 549.

Presumption of Knowledge.—Where a deed by husband and wife is executed after due consultation and deliberation, and then acknowledged, it will be presumed that the grantors had read the deed, and that the wife executed it freely and voluntarily, with a full knowledge of its contents. Massey v. Huntington, 118 Ill. 80.

1. Explanation by Means of an Interpreter.—Norton v. Meader, 4 Sawy. (U. S.) 603.

Where the deed of a married woman who did not speak English was explained to her by the officer through an interpreter of her own selection, she cannot be heard to say that he was incompetent or corrupt, or failed to interpret correctly. The proper practice in such cases is for the interpreter to be sworn. Waltee v. Weaver, 57 Tex. 569.

Where the wife claimed that the interpreter did not correctly interpret the contents of the deed conveying her land, but told her it was a mortgage, it was held that the certificate was conclusive of the facts recited. De Arnaz v. Escandon, 59 Cal. 486; Herring v. White, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 249. See also Spurigin v. Traub, 65 Ill. 170.

But it was held in Michigan, that the acknowledgment of an Indian squaw taken through an interpreter was not authorized by the laws of that state. Dewey v. Campau, 4 Mich. 565. See also Fisher v. Meister, 24 Mich. 447.

A notary's certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment, where she does not understand English, is of little worth as evidence in the absence of proof that the deed was explained to her in her own language, by the notary himself. Harrison v. Oakman, 56 Mich. 390.

Woman Who is Deaf and Dumb.—A certificate of acknowledgment of a married woman's deed, stating that the woman was deaf and dumb and that the nature of the transaction had been duly explained to her by signs, in the presence of the officer, by a person accustomed to converse with her in that manner, and that she had by the same means signified her assent, was allowed by the court. In re Harper, 6 M. & G. 732, 7 Scott N. R. 431.

2. Explanation in the Husband's Presence.—It is held in Missouri and Kentucky that the contents of the deed may be explained to a married woman in the presence of her husband as well as during her separate examination. Belo v. Mayes, 79 Mo. 67 (criticising on this point Wannell v. Kem, 57 Mo. 478); Webb v. Webb, 87 Mo. 540; Moorman v. Board, 11 Bush (Ky.) 135.

3. In California the explanation as well as the acknowledgment must be made upon separate examination, and a deed whose contents were explained to a married woman in her husband's presence, though afterwards separately acknowledged by her, is void. Hutchinson v. Ainsworth, 63 Cal. 286; Beck v. Soward, 76 Cal. 527; Bollinger v. Manning, 79 Cal. 7.

It was held in West Virginia that the explanation must be made during the separate examination, and a certificate showing that the instrument was explained before such examination is fatally defective. Watson v. Michael, 21 W. Va. 568.

4. No Explanation Required Where Wife is Already Informed—Missouri.—It is held in Missouri that it is not essential for the notary to read or explain the deed where the woman says she is already acquainted with its contents, provided she gives such a description thereof as to show that she properly understands the nature and effect of the instrument. Bohan v. Casey, 5 Mo. App. 101; Ray v. Crouch, 10 Mo. App. 321; Morrison v. McKee, 11 Mo. App. 594; Thomas v. Meier, 18 Mo. 573; Chauvin v. Wagner, 18 Mo. 532; Drew v. Arnold, 85 Mo. 128.

5. Immaterial Points need Not be Explained.—It is not necessary that the wife be in-

Whether Certificate must Show Explanation.—Under statutes requiring the officer taking the acknowledgment to read or otherwise make known to the wife the contents of the instrument, but not expressly requiring him to certify that he has done so, it has been held that the acknowledgment is not invalidated by the failure of the certificate to state that such explanation was made.¹ In some states the certificate must show that the wife understood the contents and effect of the instrument.²

(c) Act Free from Compulsion.—It must appear that the wife acknowledged the instrument to be her voluntary act and deed, without fear or compulsion,³ and that she did not wish to retract it.⁴

formed of every detail or formality contained in the instrument. Ray v. Crouch, 10 Mo. App. 321.

Nor need the officer explain to her the title by which the property is held, Morrison v. McKee, 11 Mo. App. 594; unless by some special covenant the title is made a part of the contents of the deed, Ray v. Crouch, 10 Mo. App. 321.

1. Fact of Explanation need Not be Stated unless So Required—Illinois.—Coleman v. Birlings, 89 Ill. 183.

Indiana.—Stevens v. Doe, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 475; Fleming v. Potter, 14 Ind. 486.

2. Certificate must show that the Wife Understood.—Lyon v. Kain, 36 Ill. 362; Vaughn v. Carlisle, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 525; Anderson v. Bewley, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 29; Wright v. Dufield, 2 Baxt. (Tenn.) 218.

3. It must appear that it was Her Voluntary Act and Deed—Alabama.—Boykin v. Rain, 28 Ala. 332, 65 Am. Dec. 349; Alabama L. Ins., etc., Co. v. Boykin, 38 Ala. 510; Cox v. Holcomb, 87 Ala. 589, 13 Am. St. Rep. 79.

Pennsylvania—Ohio.—Although the certificate does not expressly state that the wife acted without any fear or coercion, this is sufficiently shown when it is certified that she acknowledged the deed to be her voluntary act. Brown v. Farran, 3 Ohio 140; Shaller v. Brand, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 435, 6 Am. Dec. 482. In Miller v. Wentworth, 82 Pa. St. 280, it was held that an acknowledgment "without any fear or compulsion from her said husband" was a sufficient declaration of free will.

North Carolina.—A certificate stating that the wife acknowledged upon privy examination that she signed the deed "with her own free will and accord, and without any compulsion of her husband," was sufficient without adding "and doth voluntarily assent thereto." Robbins v. Harris, 96 N. Car. 557. See also Joyner v. Faulcon, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 386, in which a similar certificate passed without objection.

Virginia.—Grove v. Zumbro, 14 Gratt. (Va.) 501.

(d) Examination Apart from Husband.—An examination separate and apart means an examination out of the presence of the husband, so that he cannot communicate by word or look or motion.¹ But it has been held not necessary to the validity of the examination that the husband go entirely out of the wife's presence. It is sufficient if he be so far separated from her as to leave her at liberty to express her will and desire in the matter freely and voluntarily.²

(e) Examination must be Personal.—The private examination of a married woman, being designed for her protection from the influence of fear or coercion, is in its nature personal, and is therefore not a matter in which she may be represented by another, and, under statutes requiring such examination, acknowledgments made by a married woman through an attorney in fact have been held void.³

(4) Exceptions and Qualifications of Rule—(a) Estoppel.—Where a married woman represented herself to be unmarried and sold her real estate as a feme sole, it was held that she could not set up in equity the want of examination and certificate thereof, as required in case of conveyances by married women, so as to avoid her conveyance.⁴

(b) Separation, Abandonment, Divorce.—It has been held that the statutory requirements as to the separate examination and acknowledgment of married women do not apply to deeds executed by a woman who has left her husband,⁵ or

Prior to the Ohio Act of 1831 it was not necessary for the certificate to state that the woman did not wish to retract. Brown v. Farran, 3 Ohio 140.

Nor is it required by the statutes of Illinois. Hughes v. Lane, 11 Ill. 123, 50 Am. Dec. 436; Stuart v. Dutton, 39 Ill. 91; Tourville v. Pierson, 39 Ill. 446. See also Chauvin v. Wagner, 18 Mo. 531; Chauvin v. Lownes, 23 Mo. 223.

In Texas the wife's declaration, in a certificate of acknowledgment, that she does not wish to retract, does not apply to the acknowledgment of an executory contract to convey the homestead. Jones v. Goff, 63 Tex. 248.

1. What Constitutes a Separate Examination.—Steffen v. Bauer, 70 Mo. 399; Belo v. Mayes, 79 Mo. 67; McCandless v. Engle, 51 Pa. St. 309. See also Kavanaugh v. Day, 10 R. I. 393, 14 Am. Rep. 691.

The presence of a third person, not her husband, will not invalidate the acknowledgment. Jones v. Maffet, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 523. See also Deery v. Cray, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 795; Bernard v. Elder, 50 Miss. 336.

The separate examination may as well take place in open court as before a single officer. It need not be privy in any legal or other sense, except as it is separate and apart from and without the presence of the husband. Rainey v. Gordon, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 345.

2. Hall v. Castleberry, 101 N. Car. 153; Donahue v. Mills, 41 Ark. 421. But see Webb v. Webb, 87 Mo. 540.

An acknowledgment made on horseback, where the husband was on another horse only six or eight feet away, but not near enough to hear what was said was held sufficient. Meyer v. Gossett, 38 Ark. 377.

3. Acknowledgment must be Personal.—Wamble v. Foote, 2 Dakota 1; Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 534; Dawson v. Shirley, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 531; Sumner v. Conant, 10 Vt. 9; Holladay v. Daily, 19 Wall. (U. Rep. 913.

4. Graham v. Meneilly, 16 Grant's Ch. (Canada) 661.

5. Where a married woman left her husband in England, and came to the United States, where for more than twenty years she lived separate from her husband, who had never been in the United States, during which time she formed a meretricious union with another man, and was known as his wife, and executed and acknowledged as if sole a deed conveying her separate property from him, it was held in California that she could not set up the fact of her former marriage to avoid the deed on the ground that the acknowledgment was not taken on separate examination, as required in conveyances of married women. Hand v. Hand, 68 Cal. 135, 58 Am. Rep. 5.

But in Danglarde v. Elias, 80 Cal. 65, it was held that the provisions of the civil code requiring conveyances by married women to be acknowledged on separate examination apply without exception to all married women, whether living apart from their husbands or not, and to their separate property as well as any other, and that where a married woman had been abandoned by her husband, and they had been living apart for forty years, and she had for many years assumed and been known by her maiden name, a deed executed during the lifetime of her husband conveying property paid for by her own earnings was void unless acknowledged on separate examination, as required by the code.

who has been separated from him by a decree of divorce;¹ and where a married woman so separated from her husband resumed her maiden name, and continued to act and represent herself as a feme sole, a deed executed and acknowledged by her as such was held binding on her, although the decree of divorce was invalid.²

d. UNDER RECENT STATUTES.—The tendency of recent legislation has been to remove the disabilities of married women in executing and acknowledging deeds conveying their property. This is especially true in cases where their separate estate is concerned. In many states the separate examination has been abolished, and a married woman may now acknowledge her deed as if sole.³ Whereas acknowledgment was formerly regarded as an essential

The Texas statute requiring separate examination does not apply to the case of deeds executed by a married woman who has been abandoned by her husband. Wright v. Hays, 10 Tex. 130, 60 Am. Dec. 200.

2. Reis v. Lawrence, 63 Cal. 129, 49 Am. Rep. 83, and note, p. 85.

3. Arizona.—Conveyances and transfers of a married woman's separate estate may be acknowledged by her without a separate examination as though she were unmarried. Arizona Rev. Stat. 1887, § 2581; Miller v. Fisher, 1 Arizona 232; Charauleau v. Woffenden, 1 Arizona 243.

Arkansas.—Since the adoption of the Constitution of 1874 (Ark. Dig. of Stat. 1884, § 648) a married woman may convey her separate estate in all respects as if unmarried. The acknowledgment need not be made upon separate examination. Roberts v. Wilcoxson, 36 Ark. 355; Bryan v. Winburn, 43 Ark. 28; Stone v. Stone, 43 Ark. 160; Criscoe v. Hambrick, 47 Ark. 235. See also Donahue v. Mills, 41 Ark. 421.

Georgia.—A married woman may dispose of her separate estate in real property by the ordinary deed of conveyance. The Act of 1760 (Ga. Code 1882, § 2706a), prescribing the mode of acknowledgment for married women, does not apply to conveyances of a married woman's separate estate, but only to conveyances by the husband of real estate in which the wife has an interest. Brown v. Kimbrough, 55 Ga. 41; Haines v. Fort, 93 Ga. 24. See also Hicks v. Johnston, 24 Ga. 194; Wynn v. Bryce, 59 Ga. 529.

Illinois.—Prior to the Act of 1869 (Ill. Annot. Stat., c. 30, par. 20) a married woman could not convey her real estate without acknowledgment upon privy examination. See supra, this title, Married Women—Separate Examination. Nor was this disability removed by the Act of 1861. Hawes v. Mann, 8 Biss. (U. S.) 21; Hogan v. Hogan, 89 Ill. 427.

The law was changed by the Act of 1869. A married woman may now acknowledge her deed as if sole. Hawes v. Mann, 8 Biss. (U. S.) 21; Knight v. Paxton, 124 U. S. 552; Spurgin v. Traub, 65 Ill. 170; Stiles v. Probst, 69 Ill. 382; Hogan v. Hogan, 89 Ill. 427; Bradshaw v. Atkins, 110 Ill. 323; Snell v. Snell, 123 Ill. 403, 5 Am. St. Rep. 526.

Indiana.—A married woman may acknowledge her deed as if sole. Indiana Annot. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 3358; Hubble v. Wright, 23 Ind. 322. See also Brown v. Corbin, 121 Ind. 455.

Iowa.—No separate examination required. Iowa Annot. Rev. Code 1888, § 1935. Prior to the Code of 1851 a married woman's acknowledgment could be taken only upon separate examination. Now conveyances of married women are placed upon the same footing as those of other persons. Simms v. Hervey, 19 Iowa 273, distinguishing Westfall v. Lee, 7 Iowa 12, and McHenry v. Day, 13 Iowa 445. 81 Am. Dec. 438; Grapengether v. Fejervary, 9 Iowa 163, 74 Am. Dec. 336; Morris v. Sargent, 18 Iowa 90.

Kansas.—A married woman may convey her real and personal property, and contract with reference to the same, in the same manner, to the same extent, and with like effect as a married man may in relation to his property. Kansas Gen. Stat. 1889, par. 3753.

No separate examination is required. Munger v. Baldrige, 41 Kan. 236, 13 Am. St. Rep. 273.

Maine.—A married woman may convey her separate real estate as if sole. Maine Rev. Stat. 1883, c. 61, § 1; Springer v. Berry, 47 Me. 330; Brookings v. White, 49 Me. 479; Allen v. Hooper, 50 Me. 371.

Michigan.—Under the Act of 1877 (How. Stat., §§ 5662, 5662a) conveyances of real property executed by married women may be acknowledged in the same manner as if they were sole. The same has been true of deeds conveying separate estate since the Act of 1855 (How. St. 6295), no separate examination being necessary. Watson v. Thurber, 11 Mich. 457.

Minnesota.—No separate examination is required. Statutes 1894, § 5651. It was held in 1857 that a married woman's deed conveying her separate real estate need not be acknowledged by her separate and apart from her husband. Merril v. Nelson, 18 Minn. 366.

A married woman's contract to convey her real estate need not be acknowledged. Kingsley v. Gilman, 15 Minn. 59.

Missouri.—No separate examination is required. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 2408. Prior to the passage of this act it was held under statutes requiring separate examination that where a deed conveying land to a trustee for the sole and separate use of a married woman authorizes him at her written request to convey or mortgage the property, a conveyance made in accordance with such request is good, although the woman's acknowledgment of the deed was taken in the presence of her husband. Sharpe v. McPike, 62 Mo. 300.

part of a married woman's deed, without which title could not pass,¹ it is now held by some courts to be no more essential to the validity of such deeds than of conveyances by other competent grantors.² In some states, however, separate examination is still required.³

In Small v. Field, 102 Mo. 104, it was held that a married woman's deed conveying her separate estate, created "for her sole use," was good to pass the equitable fee without any acknowledgment, just as much so as if she had been a feme sole.

Montana.—The acknowledgment of a married woman must be taken the same as that of any other person. Montana Civ. Code 1895, § 1606. A conveyance by a married woman may be acknowledged as if she were unmarried. Montana Civ. Code 1895, § 1607.

New York.—No separate examination is required. Laws of 1879, c. 249; Banks' Statutes (7th ed.), p. 2233.

The Act of 1848 as amended by the Act of 1849 authorized married women to convey their real estate "in the like manner" and "with the like effect" as if unmarried. It was held under this act that no separate examination was required. Richardson v. Pulver, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 67; Allen v. Reynolds, 36 N. Y. Super. Ct. 297; Blood v. Humphrey, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 660; Andrews v. Shaffer, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 441; Yale v. Dederer, 18 N. Y. 265, 72 Am. Dec. 503. See also McIlvaine v. Kadel, 3 Robt. (N. Y.) 429; Wiles v. Peck, 26 N. Y. 42.

These acts were not repealed, nor their effect impaired, by the Acts of 1860 and 1862. Allen v. Reynolds, 36 N. Y. Super. Ct. 297.

The former statutes requiring separate examination did not apply to married women residing without the state. Andrews v. Shaffer 12 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 441.

Tennessee.—Where real estate is conveyed to a married woman by a deed investing her with power to dispose of the same as if sole, there is no necessity that her conveyance of such property should be privately acknowledged by her. Sherman v. Turpin, 7 Coldw. (Tenn.) 382; Peterson v. Richman, 93 Tenn. 71, distinguishing Robinson v. Queen, 87 Tenn. 445, 10 Am. St. Rep. 690, where a privy examination was held necessary under Tennessee Code 1884, § 3347. In this case the instrument creating the separate estate did not in terms give her the power to convey it as a feme sole. See also Young v. Young, 7 Coldw. (Tenn.) 461.

Wisconsin.—No separate acknowledgment required. Annot. Stat. 1889, §§ 2221-2224. The provisions of Rev. Stat. 1849, c. 59, § 12, requiring the acknowledgment of a deed executed by husband and wife to be acknowledged by the wife on separate examination, was repealed by Laws of 1850, c. 229, § 2, and impliedly as to all conveyances of real estate made by a married woman by c. 44, § 3. Hayes v. Frey, 54 Wis. 503.

For a list of states in which the separate examination is still required see note infra, where it is believed that all the present statutes prescribing such examination are cited.

Missouri.—Siemers v. Kleeburg, 56 Mo. 196.

A mortgage executed by a married woman jointly with her husband is valid as to her without being acknowledged. Hubble v. Wright, 23 Ind. 322; Mays v. Hedges, 79 Ind. 288.

While the acknowledgment of a married woman's deed is necessary to entitle it to be recorded, it is not essential to its validity. Simms v. Hervey, 19 Iowa 273. See also Morris v. Sargent, 18 Iowa 90.

3. Present Statutes Requiring Separate Examination.—The statutes of the following states require a married woman's acknowledgment to be taken on separate examination. See, for further authorities construing the statutes existing in the states named below, supra, this title, Married Women—Separate Examination.

Alabama.—In case of conveyances of homestead only. Code 1886, § 2508; Balkum v. Wood, 58 Ala. 642; Halso v. Seawright, 65 Ala. 431; Scott v. Simons, 70 Ala. 352; Gates v. Hester, 81 Ala. 357; Richardson v. Woodstock Iron Co., 90 Ala. 266; Hodges v. Winston, 95 Ala. 514. See also the title HOME-STEAD.

No separate examination is necessary under this section where a wife joins in a mortgage of lands belonging wholly to the husband and forming no part of the homestead. Orr v. Blackwell, 93 Ala. 212.

California.—Civ. Code, §§ 1187, 1186; Le Mesnager v. Hamilton, 101 Cal. 532.

Cal. Civ. Code, § 162, provides that a married woman may convey her separate property without the consent of her husband, and § 158 that either husband or wife may enter into any transaction or engagement with the other or with third persons as if sole; but when the disposition of the wife's real estate is involved, the statutory mode of acknowledgment must be presumed, that is, by separate examination according to § 1186 of the code. Leonis v. Lazzarovich, 55 Cal. 52; Wedel v. Herman, 59 Cal. 507.

A mortgage executed by a married woman on her separate real estate is an "instrument" and "conveyance" within the mean-

VI. TIME WHEN ACKNOWLEDGMENT MUST BE MADE.—In the absence of a statute designating the period within which acknowledgments must be made, it is ing of those terms as employed in §§ 1186, 1187, of the code, and is of no validity unless acknowledged as therein required. Tolman v. Smith, 74 Cal. 345.

Delaware.—Laws 1893, c. 83, § 4.

A married woman abandoned by her husband may acknowledge her deed as if sole. Laws 1893, c. 76, § 4.

District of Columbia.—While privy acknowledgment is not necessary to the conveyance of a married woman's separate estate since the Act of 1869 (Rev. Stat., §§ 727-730), it is required to a deed by husband and wife in which her dower interest is relinquished (Rev. Stat., 1892, §§ 450-452). Hitz v. Jenks, 123 U. S. 297; Young v. Duvall, 109 U. S. 573.

Florida.—Rev. Stat. 1892, § 1958; Hartley v. Ferrell, 9 Fla. 374.

An instrument purporting to convey a married woman's real estate, in which her husband does not join, and which is not sealed, or acknowledged by her on privy examination, is a nullity. Carn v. Haisley, 22 Fla. 317.

But it is not necessary to name the husband in the body of the instrument. A deed privily acknowledged by the wife and executed and acknowledged by the husband, whose name does not elsewhere appear, is good. Evans v. Summerlin, 19 Fla. 858.

Idaho.—Rev. Stat. 1887, § 2956.

Kentucky.—Stat. 1894, § 507.

The certificate of acknowledgment taken within the state need state only the fact and time of acknowledgment, and shall then be evidence of acknowledgment according to the statute. Stat. 1894, § 507. i. Dowell v. Mitchell, 82 Ky. 47.

A deed by husband and wife conveying the separate estate of the latter is void if not acknowledged by her on separate examination. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Stephens (Ky., 1895), 29 S. W. Rep. 14; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Wilhite (Ky., 1895), 29 S. W. Rep. 326.

Louisiana.—Voorhis' Rev. L. 1884, § 1717.

Nevada.—Gen. Stat., 1885, § 2591.

New Jersey.—Revision, "Conveyances," § 9.

The fact of separate examination need not be stated in the certificate. Den v. Geiger, 9 N. J. L. 233; Thayer v. Torrey, 37 N. J. L. 339.

New Mexico.—Comp. Laws, 1884 § 2759.

North Carolina.—Code 1883, §§ 1246, 1256.

See supra, this title, Married Women—Separate Examination.

Conveyances of Equitable as well as legal estates must be acknowledged upon separate examination, unless the instrument creating the estate authorizes a different mode of transfer. Clayton v. Rose, 87 N. Car. 106.

As to Conveyances from Wife to Husband and method of taking the separate acknowledgment, see Code 1883, §§ 1835, 1836; Sims v. Ray, 96 N. Car. 87.

Sale of Household Furniture.—The North Carolina Act of 1891, c. 91, providing that whenever household or kitchen furniture is conveyed by chattel mortgage or otherwise, the privy examination of married women shall be taken as prescribed by law in conveyances of land, does not apply to an absolute sale of such property by the husband. Kelly v. Fleming, 113 N. Car. 133.

Husband must Acknowledge before Wife's Examination.—It is held in North Carolina that a conveyance of a married woman's land must be executed and acknowledged by both husband and wife, the wife being privily examined, and the examination must be after the instrument has been proved or acknowledged by the husband. Gilchrist v. Buie, 1 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 346; Den v. Sutton, 1 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 582; Southerland v. Hunter, 93 N. Car. 310; Ferguson v. Kinsland, 93 N. Car. 337; Wynne v. Small, 102 N. Car. 133; Lineberger v. Tidwell, 104 N. Car. 506.

Unless this order be observed the deed will pass neither the wife's estate nor that of the husband as tenant by courtesy. McGlenery v. Miller, 90 N. Car. 215.

But where the certificate states a single transaction, it is immaterial that it appears from the certificate that the wife's separate acknowledgment preceded the probate of the deed. Joyner v. Faulcon, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 386.

Want of Acknowledgment: Color of Title.—In Perry v. Perry, 99 N. Car. 270, it was held that a conveyance of a married woman's lands executed by husband and wife, but not acknowledged by the wife on separate examination as required by law, constituted color of title when delivered to the vendee. See Pearse v. Owens, 2 Hayw. (N. Car.) 234.

But a deed executed by a married woman, in which her husband did not join, and which was not privately acknowledged by her, conveys no title. Scott v. Battle, 85 N. Car. 184, 39 Am. Rep. 694.

Where land is sold under a judicial decree for the partition of lands, the purchaser and his assignees secure an equitable title against a tenant in common who at the time of the partition was a minor, and who afterwards, when a married woman, received her share of the purchase money without privy examination. Farmer v. Daniel, 82 N. Car. 152.

Examination by One Officer, where the statute requires it to be made by two, is invalid. Malloy v. Bruden, 88 N. Car. 305, following Den v. Wilson, 2 Dev. (N. Car.) 306.

Choses in Action.—No acknowledgment is necessary where husband and wife join in conveying the wife's choses in action. Bond v. Bunting, 78 Pa. St. 210, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 149.

A release executed by a married woman, of a legacy charged upon land, being a chose in action, is valid without the separate examination of the woman, though it is not entitled to be recorded without due acknowledgment on such examination. Powell's Appeal, 98 Pa. St. 403.

Rhode Island.—Pub. Stat. 1882, c. 166, § 8; Churchill v. Monroe, 1 R. I. 209; Lippitt v. Huston, 8 R. I. 415, 94 Am. Dec. 115; Kavanaugh v. Day, 10 R. I. 393, 14 Am. Rep. 691; Paine v. Baker, 15 R. I. 100. See also Bateman's Petition, 11 R. I. 585; Warner v. Peck, 11 R. I. 431.

Under the act providing for the acknowledgment of conveyances of estates tail in open court (R. I. Rev. Stat. 1882, c. 172, § 3) it was held that an acknowledgment of such a conveyance made by husband and wife in accordance with that act need not comply further with the provisions of the statute regulating the acknowledgment of married women's deeds on separate examination. Lippitt v. Huston, 8 R. I. 415, 94 Am. Dec. 115.

South Carolina.—Separate examination is required under Gen. Stat. 1882, §§ 1796-1798, where the wife relinquishes her dower. Townsend v. Brown, 16 S. Car. 91.

It was held in this case that this requirement was not repealed by the Act of 1870 (S. Car. Gen. Stat. 1882, §§ 2036, 2037) giving a married woman power to convey her separate estate in the same manner and to the same extent as if she were unmarried.

A married woman cannot be divested of her property except by deed acknowledged on privy examination. Fitzgerald v. Turner, 43 Tex. 79 (distinguishing Clayton v. Frazier, 33 Tex. 99, and Womack v. Womack, 8 Tex. 397, 58 Am. Dec. 119); Stephens v. Shaw, 68 Tex. 261; Angier v. Coward, 79 Tex. 551. See also Gregory v. Van Vleck, 21 Tex. 40; Tucker v. Carr, 39 Tex. 98; Halbert v. Hendrix (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 26 S. W. Rep. 911; Chester v. Breitling (Tex. Civ. App., 1895), 30 S. W. Rep. 464.

Land Certificates.—The Texas Act of 1846, requiring a wife's conveyance of her personal property in writing to be accompanied by her privy acknowledgment, does not prohibit her making a verbal transfer of such property; and a written receipt signed by a married woman, containing an admission of the transfer of unlocated land certificates, is evidence of such transfer, though not privately acknowledged. Ballard v. Carmichael, 83 Tex. 355; Ikard v. Thompson, 81 Tex. 285; Bennett v. Virginia Ranch, etc., Co., 1 Tex. Civ. App. 321. See also Lecomte v. Toudouze, 82 Tex. 208.

But if the certificate by location and survey has lost all the characteristics of personal property or choses in action, and becomes realty, a conveyance, although purporting to be an assignment of the certificates as personalty, is void unless acknowledged by the wife on privy examination. Groesbeck v. Bodman, 73 Tex. 287.

Receipt for Advancements.—An instrument executed by a married woman setting forth a donation of real estate from her father as an advancement, and releasing his estate to that extent, being in the nature of a receipt for advancements made, is not a conveyance of property within the meaning of the Texas statute requiring "a deed and other writing purporting to be a conveyance" to be privately acknowledged by the wife. French v. Strumberg, 52 Tex. 92. See also, as to law in Pennsylvania, Powell's Appeal, 98 Pa. St. 403.

West Virginia.—Code 1887, c. 73, §§ 4-6.

Wyoming.—Conveyances of homesteads must be acknowledged on separate examination. Rev. Stat. 1887, § 2784.

1. Time of Making Acknowledgment Immaterial.—Kelly v. Dunlap, 3 P. & W. (Pa.) 136; Fisher v. Butcher, 19 Ohio 406, 53 Am. Dec. 436; Pitkin v. Leavitt, 13 Vt. 379; Pierce v. Brown, 24 Vt. 165.

The acknowledgment may be made at any time before the paper is offered in evidence. Holbrook v. New Jersey Zinc Co., 57 N. Y. 616.

Neither the constitution nor the statutes of Alabama appoint any particular time within which the wife shall give her assent and signature to the conveyance of the husband, nor does the statute appoint any particular time in which her privy examination and acknowledgment shall be taken and certified. Cahall v. Citizens' Mut. Bldg. Assoc., 61 Ala. 232. See Carlisle v. Carlisle, 78 Ala. 542.

No Alabama statute limits a period within which the acknowledgment or proof of a deed must be made. Johnson v. McGehee, 1 Ala. 186. See also the title Recording Acts.

Acknowledgment before Completion of Deed.—

made after bringing suit, when the instrument is offered in evidence.¹ Where a deed is executed by two grantors it is not necessary that they should acknowledge it at the same time.² An acknowledgment is not void because taken on a legal holiday³ or on Sunday.⁴

VII. THE CERTIFICATE—1. Generally.—a. REQUIREMENTS STATUTORY.—The statutes of the several states generally prescribe forms to be used by the officer in certifying the acknowledgments of instruments acknowledged both within and without the state.⁵

b. CERTAIN PROVISIONS CONSIDERED—(1) Place of the Certificate.—The certificate should be written on the deed itself,⁶ but a certificate written on a

Where the deed and the acknowledgment, regular on their face, are delivered to a subsequent purchaser, without notice of any irregularity, the fact that at the time of acknowledgment certain portions of the deed were left blank, and afterwards filled out, is immaterial, the grantor being estopped to deny that the deed was completed when acknowledged. Pence v. Arbuckle, 22 Minn. 417; Roussain v. Norton, 53 Minn. 560. See also Cole v. Bammel, 62 Tex. 108; Nelson v. McDonald, 80 Wis. 605.

A mortgage of a married woman's separate estate by husband and wife, in which the name of the mortgagee and the sum for which the land was mortgaged were left blank, was executed and acknowledged by the wife. The husband afterwards filled the blanks and delivered the deed. It was held that the mortgage was a nullity as to the wife. Drury v. Foster, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 24. See also Wilson v. South Park Com'rs, 70 Ill. 46; Ayres v. Probasco, 14 Kan. 175; Warren v. White, 52 Vt. 46.

Acknowledgment by Ex-Officer of Deed Executed during Term of Office.—Where a deed executed by a sheriff while in office was acknowledged by him after his term of office had expired, it was held that such acknowledgment was carried back by relation to the time of execution. Doe v. Dugan, 8 Ohio 87.

Acknowledgment after Judgment but before Execution Sale.—It was held in Arkansas that the acknowledgment and registration of a deed after recovery of judgment against the grantor, but before the execution sale, defeated the title of the purchaser at such sale. Jackson v. Allen, 30 Ark. 110. See also Byers v. Engles, 16 Ark. 543.

1. Instrument may be Acknowledged when Offered in Evidence.—Kelly v. Dunlap, 3 P. & W. (Pa.) 136; Pitkin v. Leavitt, 13 Vt. 379; Pierce v. Brown, 24 Vt. 165; Sheldon v. Stryker, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 284. See also Hays v. McGuire, 8 Yerg. (Tenn.) 92; Hale v. Darter, 10 Humph. (Tenn.) 92; Ward v. Daniel, 10 Humph. (Tenn.) 603; Harrington v. Gage, 6 Vt. 532.

Where, in an action of ejectment, a deed was ruled out on account of an irregularity in the acknowledgment, but was afterwards correctly acknowledged, it was held that it was admissible in evidence in a new trial, the acknowledgment being a mere matter of proof, and not affecting the validity of the deed. Babbitt v. Johnson, 15 Kan. 252.

But it was held in Hollingsworth v. Flint, 101 U. S. 591, where the acknowledgment and privy examination of a married woman was made after the commencement of the suit, that the deed could not be offered in evidence, such acknowledgment being essential to pass titled. Followed in Carn v. Haisley, 22 Fla. 317.

2. Time of Acknowledgment by Husband and Wife.—Where there was nothing in the statute requiring a deed executed by husband and wife to be jointly acknowledged by them, it was held that a certificate of the acknowledgment of a married woman taken on a day subsequent to the time of the acknowledgment of her husband, but certified on the same sheet with it, was sufficient. Williams v. Robson, 6 Ohio St. 510. To the same effect see Lineberger v. Tidwell, 104 N. Car. 506; Newell v. Anderson, 7 Ohio St. 12; Ludlow v. O'Neil, 29 Ohio St. 181; Halbert v. Hendrix (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 26 S. W. Rep. 911; Halbert v. Bennett (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 16 S. W. Rep. 913. See also Watson v. Peters, 26 Mich. 508; Ford v. Gregory, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 175.

3. Acknowledgment on Legal Holiday.—In taking the acknowledgment of the execution of a deed a notary public is engaged in private business, and he may therefore take the acknowledgment on February 22, under statutes declaring that day a legal holiday and prohibiting public business and the service of civil process on that day. Slater v. Schack, 41 Minn. 269.

4. Acknowledgment on Sunday.—An acknowledgment is not void because taken on Sunday. Lucas v. Larkin, 85 Tenn. 355.

A deed made, executed, acknowledged, and recorded on Sunday after sunset was held good. Tracy v. Jenks, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 465. See also Greene v. Godfrey, 44 Me. 25.

5. See the local statutes for forms.

Acknowledgment in Form of a Jurat.—Where the officer's certificate of acknowledgment was in the form of a jurat, it was held that its character as a certificate of acknowledgment was not thereby destroyed. Ingraham v. Grigg, 13 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 22. See also Whitney v. Arnold, 10 Cal. 531. But the signature of the mortgagor to a mortgage and the officer's jurat thereto are not alone sufficient to constitute a valid acknowledgment. Dugger v. Collins, 69 Ala. 324.

6. Certificate should be Indorsed on Deed.—Smith v. Tim, 14 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 447.

A statute requiring in terms that the certificate be indorsed on the deed need not be strictly followed. It is sufficient if it be sub-separate sheet and pasted to the deed has been held sufficient.¹ An acknowledgment in the body of the deed instead of in a separate certificate has been held good.²

(2) Time of Making.—It has been held that the certificate need not be made at the time of acknowledgment, and that an interval of many years between the time of acknowledgment and the date of the certificate was not fatal to the admissibility of the deed in evidence.³

(3) Venue.—The county and state in which the acknowledgment was taken should be stated in the certificate.⁴ When the certificate is formal in all rejoined to the deed. Thurman v. Cameron, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 87.

Such a certificate was passed without objection in Jackson v. Gumaer, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 552. See also Rex v. Bigg, 1 Stra. 18.

A certificate written on the face of the deed, on the margin, is sufficient. Simpson v. Hartman, 27 U. C. Q. B. 460.

1. Certificate Pasted on Instrument.—Schramm v. Gentry, 63 Tex. 583.

But it was held, under a statute requiring the certificate to be on the same sheet as the deed, that a certificate written on a separate sheet and pasted to the deed is void. Winkler v. Higgins, 9 Ohio St. 599. See also Norman v. Shepherd, 38 Ohio St. 322; Poor v. Scanlan, 7 Cinc. L. Bull. (Ohio) 15; Harrisonburg First Nat. Bank v. Paul, 75 Va. 594, 40 Am. Rep. 740.

2. Acknowledgment in Body of Deed.—Where a deed to land in Texas was executed in Louisiana according to the customary form in that state, the grantee and the officer taking his acknowledgment both signing the instrument, and the acknowledgment, made simultaneously with the execution, being contained in the body of the deed instead of at the foot of it, it was held that such deed was admissible to record in Texas. Brownson v. Scanlan, 59 Tex. 222. See also Snowden v. Rush, 69 Tex. 593.

3. Stevens v. Martin, 18 Pa. St. 101. See also Grant v. Oliver, 91 Cal. 158.

The Certificate is a Part of the Record, and until it be made out, a deed cannot be considered as recorded. Where a deed to land was acknowledged before a register of deeds, and handed to him to be recorded, but at the same time a creditor of the grantor attached the estate, it was held that the creditor had priority, inasmuch as some time must have elapsed before the certificate could be written out. Sigourney v. Larned, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 72.

Certificate by Successor of Officer Taking Acknowledgment.—Under the Missouri statute requiring a sheriff's deed to be acknowledged in open court and the certificate of acknowledgment to be indorsed by the clerk on the deed, it was held that a clerk of another court, although he may succeed to the custody of the records of the former court, cannot indorse the certificate of the acknowledgment taken by the former clerk. Allen v. King, 35 Mo. 216.

4. Certificate must Show where Acknowledgment was Made.—McMahon v. McGraw, 26 Wis. 614. See also De Segond v. Culver, 10 Ohio 189; Buckley v. Early, 72 Iowa 289. Compare, as to former law in New Brunswick, Buggs v. McBride, 17 New Bruns. 663.

The certificate must show some assignable locality; "Lincoln ss. Wiscasset," in an acknowledgment of a deed taken out of the state, is not sufficient, and the defect will not be aided by reference to the notarial seal. Vance v. Schuyler, 6 Ill. 160. But such defect might be aided by the recitals in the certificate of conformity attached. Harding v. Curtis, 45 Ill. 252.

A venue "United States of America" is too indefinite. Montag v. Linn, 19 Ill. 399.

A venue "County of New York," in a certificate of acknowledgment taken without the state, is insufficient where there is nothing in the certificate or deed to show the state. Hardin v. Kirk, 49 Ill. 153, 95 Am. Dec. 581. But an acknowledgment of a deed to land in Missouri is not bad because the certificate headed "County of St. Louis, ss.," does not state that said county is in Missouri. Robidoux v. Cassilegi, 10 Mo. App. 516.

A certificate failing to state of what county the officer is a justice of the peace, or whether he is a justice of any county, or in what county or state the acknowledgment is taken, is fatally defective. Nor is the defective certificate aided by the appearance of the name of a certain state and county at the commencement of the deed. Emeric v. Alvarado, 90 Cal. 444.

The venue in the caption of the certificate sufficiently shows where a married woman's privy examination was made. Simpson v. Hartman, 27 U. C. Q. B. 460; Robinson v. Byers, 13 Grant's Ch. (Canada) 388.

Conflicting Statements of Locality.—A mortgage was acknowledged in C. county before a justice of the peace of that county, and there recorded. The caption of the certificate named E. county, and read: "Before the subscriber, a justice of the peace of said county, etc." It was held that the justice had evidently used the blank of another county without correcting the caption, and that parol evidence was admissible to show the facts. Angier v. Schiefflin, 72 Pa. St. 106, 13 Am. Rep. 659.

A deed to lands in R. county was accompanied by a certificate naming that county in the caption, and reciting that the notary public was a notary "in and for said county." To the signature was appended a designation of the officer as a notary of B. county, and the certificate was sealed with the seal of that county. It was held that it sufficiently appeared that the acknowledgment was taken in B. county. Alexander v. Houghton, 86 Tex. 702.

pects except that it omits the name of the county in the caption, it has been held that the omission may be supplied by reference to the seal affixed, containing the name of the county.¹

Where the body of the certificate shows of what county the officer taking the acknowledgment was notary, it is not necessary for the name of the county to appear after his signature also.²

Venue Supplied from Deed.—Where the certificate fails altogether to show where the acknowledgment was taken, it is held in some states that the venue may be supplied by reference to the deed to which the certificate is annexed.³

Venue Supplied by Extrinsic Evidence.—It is held in Illinois that where the certificate fails to state of what county the officer is officer, the omission may be supplied by extrinsic evidence.⁴

Presumption of Venue.—Where a conveyance is acknowledged before an officer authorized within the limits of his territorial jurisdiction to take acknowledgments, it will be presumed that the acknowledgment was taken within these limits, although this fact is not stated in the certificate.⁵

Where a notary public certifying the acknowledgment of a conveyance of land in L. county described himself as notary public within and for the county of L., but signed himself as notary for H. county, the court was of opinion that the deed ought to have been admitted in evidence. Merchants' Bank v. Harrison, 39 Mo. 433, 93 Am. Dec. 285.

Erroneous Statement of Venue when Unnecessary may be Disregarded.—Where a notary has authority to take acknowledgments anywhere in the state, it is sufficient if the certificate name the state in the venue; and the addition of a wrong county, or of a county that does not exist, will be regarded as surplusage, and will not affect the validity of the certificate. Roussain v. Norton, 53 Minn. 560. See also Maxwell v. Hartmann, 50 Wis. 660.

1. Venue Supplied by Use of Seal.—Chiniquy v. Catholic Bishop, 41 Ill. 148; Stephens v. Mott, 81 Tex. 115.

But it was held that where notaries public have jurisdiction only in the respective counties for which they are appointed, the certificate must show the county of the notary making it. The omission to state the venue is not supplied by the appearance of the name of the county in the notary's seal. Greenwood v. Jenswold, 69 Iowa 53, following Willard v. Cramer, 36 Iowa 22; Vance v. Schuyler, 6 Ill. 160. See also Stoddard v. Sloan, 65 Iowa 680.

2. Colby v. McOmber, 71 Iowa 469.

3. Venue may be Supplied by Reference to the Deed.—Brooks v. Chaplin, 3 Vt. 281, 23 Am. Dec. 209; Ives v. Allyn, 12 Vt. 589; Oney v. Clendenin, 28 W. Va. 34.

Where the certificate fails to state where the deed was acknowledged, in the absence of proof to the contrary the court will presume that the acknowledgment was taken in the county where the deed purports to have been made. Doe v. Roe, 1 Ga. 3.

A certificate of acknowledgment purporting to be made in — county before one styling himself a justice of the peace of said county is valid, where the county in which the grantors resided is named in the body of the deed. Fuhrman v. Loudon, 13 S. & R.

(Pa.) 386, 15 Am. Dec. 608; Bennet v. Paine, 7 Watts (Pa.) 334, 32 Am. Dec. 765; Beckel v. Petticrew, 6 Ohio St. 247.

The fact that the officer taking the acknowledgment was a justice of the peace of a certain county named in the caption of the certificate, and that the grantor of the deed is described therein as residing in the same county, affords strong evidence that the acknowledgment was taken in that county. Dunlap v. Daugherty, 20 Ill. 397.

Where a deed conveying lands in West Virginia shows on its face that the parties were residents of Fayette county, Pennsylvania, and the certificate of acknowledgment shows the county but not the state, but is accompanied by a certificate attesting that the justices named are justices of Fayette county, Pennsylvania, it is sufficiently shown that the Fayette county named in their certificate is in the state of Pennsylvania. Adams v. Medsker, 25 W. Va. 127.

Where both certificate and deed fail to show where the acknowledgment was taken, the deed is inadmissible in evidence. Hardin v. Kirk, 49 Ill. 153, 95 Am. Dec. 581.

But if the name of the place appears in the certificate of conformity, it is sufficient. Hardin v. Osborne, 60 Ill. 93.

4. Locality may be Shown by Extrinsic Evidence—Illinois.—Irving v. Brownell, 11 Ill. 402.

The omission of the name of the county in the caption will not invalidate a certificate, on proof that the justice who took the acknowledgment was justice of the county where it was taken and acted as such. Graham v. Anderson, 42 Ill. 514, 92 Am. Dec. 89.

5. Presumption of Venue.—Carpenter v. Dexter, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 513; Rackleff v. Norton, 19 Me. 274; Bradley v. West, 60 Mo. 33; People v. Snyder, 41 N. Y. 397; Bensimer v. Fell, 35 W. Va. 15.

If the county be stated in the caption, it will be presumed that the officer was an officer of that county and acted within his own appropriate territory. Livingston v. Kettelle, 6 Ill. 116, 41 Am. Dec. 166; Douglass v. Bishop, 45 Kan. 200; Douglass v.

(4) Date.—Although the certificate is usually dated, the date is not essential, and a mistake in the date, or its omission, will not invalidate the certificate.¹ Where the certificate fails to state the time of acknowledgment, the omission may be supplied from the deed.²

Certificate Dated Earlier than Deed.—The fact that the certificate was dated earlier than the deed has been held an immaterial variance,³ and it may be shown by parol evidence, or by reference to the deed, that such dating is erroneous.⁴ It has been held in such cases that the date of the certificate should prevail.⁵ When necessary to show the authority of the officer taking the acknowledgment, a statement of date becomes essential.⁶ Where it appears that the date is correct, it is no objection to the filing of the certificate that the date is written over an erasure.⁷

(5) Signature.—The certificate must be signed by the officer taking the acknowledgment.⁸ If the officer's name be signed at the end of the certifi-

1. Statement of Date Not Essential.—Irving v. Brownell, 11 Ill. 402; Attaway v. Carter, 1 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 73; Webb v. Huff, 61 Tex. 677; Horsley v. Garth, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 474, 44 Am. Dec. 393.

Where the statute does not require the certificate of a county clerk as to the official character of the officer certifying an acknowledgment to be dated, absence of the date will not vitiate such certificate. Thorn v. Mayer (Buffalo Super. Ct.), 33 N. Y. Supp. 664. See also Brooke's Appeal, 64 Pa. St. 127.

Discrepancy between Certificate and Recital of Acknowledgment.—Where the certificate of a wife's acknowledgment dated August 7th recited that the acknowledgment was made September 4th, that being the date of her husband's acknowledgment of the same mortgage, it was held that the date in the body of the instrument was clearly the true date and would prevail. Homer v. Schonfeld, 84 Ala. 313.

2. Omissions Supplied from the Deed.—Under a statute requiring the certificate to state the time of taking the acknowledgment, the date may be supplied by reference to the rest of the instrument. Kelly v. Rosenstock, 45 Md. 389.

When No Date Appears in the Certificate, it will be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the acknowledgment was taken at the time of the date of the deed. Doe v. Roe, 1 Ga. 3; Rackleff v. Norton, 19 Me. 274. See also Caruthers v. McLaran, 56 Miss. 371.

When the Year is Omitted from a Certificate dated the same day of the month as the deed, it is presumed that the acknowledgment was taken in the year named in the deed, Galusha v. Sinclair, 3 Vt. 394; or at least before the deed was recorded, Chase v. Whiting, 30 Wis. 544; Wickes v. Caulk, 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 36. See also Sloan v. Thompson, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 419.

3. Certificate Dated Earlier than Deed.—It is an immaterial variance that a certificate of acknowledgment is dated a year earlier than the deed. Sellers v. Sellers, 98 N. Car. 13; Vorty v. Paine, 62 Wis. 154.

4. Hoit v. Russell, 56 N. H. 559; Gest v.

5. Buck v. Gage, 27 Neb. 306; Gorman v. Stanton, 5 Mo. App. 585. See also Norfleet v. Russell, 64 Mo. 176.

Where the Certificate and Deed Bear the Same Date, it will not be supposed, in the absence of proof, that the acknowledgment was in fact taken before the deed was executed. Cover v. Manaway, 115 Pa. St. 338, 2 Am. St. Rep. 552.

6. Date must be Stated when Necessary to Show Authority.—A deed to lands lying in a county first Bedford, then Huntingdon, then Cambria, was acknowledged before one styling himself as a justice for the county of Bedford, the certificate not being dated. The certificate was held defective, on the ground that, being without date, it did not appear that the acknowledgment was taken at a time when the officer had authority. Downing v. Gallagher, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 455.

8. Certificate must be Signed.—Carlisle v. Carlisle, 78 Ala. 542; Clark v. Wilson, 127 Ill. 449, 11 Am. St. Rep. 143; Jefferson County Bldg. Assoc. v. Heil, 81 Ky. 513; Marston v. Brashaw, 18 Mich. 81, 100 Am. Dec. 152; Fund Com'rs v. Glass, 17 Ohio 542; Hout v. Hout, 20 Ohio St. 119. See also Bigelow v. Booth, 39 Mich. 624.

Authority of Deputy to Sign for Officer.—Where a certificate is signed with the name of the officer by a deputy, and the officer afterwards acknowledges his signature, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the name was signed by his authority. Duff v. Wynkoop, 74 Pa. St. 300.

Two Certificates Regarded as One.—Where the separate certificates of acknowledgment by husband and wife are both on the same deed, one immediately under the other, it is sufficient if the bottom one only is signed. Wright v. Wilson, 17 Mich. 192.

Variance in Signature Not Fatal.—Where the name of a notary taking an acknowledgment in a foreign state appeared in his signature and seal as "W. F. Bill," but in the cate, it need not appear in the body thereof also,¹ but an unsigned certificate is void, although the officer's name is given in the body of the instrument;² nor is a certificate, void for want of signature, cured by the use of the officer's official seal.³

Signature to Defective Certificate as Attestation.—It is held in Alabama that a defective certificate of acknowledgment may operate as an attestation, the signature of the officer being treated as that of an attesting witness.⁴ In other states, however, decisions laying down a contrary rule are found.⁵

(6) Official Character of Officer—(a) General Rule—Should Appear from Certificate.—The official character of the person taking the acknowledgment must appear in the certificate;⁶ and where the officer represents himself to be such an officer certificate of conformity and copy of his notarial commission as "Wilbur F. Bill," the discrepancy was held insufficient to exclude the deed as evidence. Denny v. Ashley, 12 Colo. 165.

Where a probate judge certifying the acknowledgment of a deed by W. L. H. F. concluded his certificate, "In testimony whereof I, W. L. H. F., judge of said court, etc.," and subscribed his name correctly "M. L. W., Probate Judge," the mistake in name was held immaterial. Agan v. Shannon, 103 Mo., 661, overruling Lincoln v. Thompson, 75 Mo. 623. See also Ferguson v. Williams, 58 Iowa 717, affirming Clark v. Wilson, 27 Ill. App. 610.

Officer may Not Sign after Expiration of Term.—Where a clerk's certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment, recorded with the deed, was not signed by him or any one for him while he held the office, he cannot, after his term has expired, sign his name to it on the deed book so as to make the deed effectual. Fitzgerald v. Millikin, 83 Ky. 70.

1. Name of Officer need Not Appear in Body of Certificate.—Under the Iowa statute (Rev. Code 1888, § 1958), requiring the certificate to set forth the title of the court or officer before whom the acknowledgment is made, it is not necessary for the name of the officer to appear in the body of the certificate. Fogg v. Holcomb, 64 Iowa 621.

A certificate "before me, register of deeds," etc., signed "L. T. J., register of deeds," was held sufficient in Kansas, although the officer did not insert his name in the body of the certificate. McCauslin v. McGuire, 14 Kan. 234.

2. Marston v. Brashaw, 18 Mich. 81, 100 Am. Dec. 152; Hout v. Hout, 20 Ohio St. 119.

3. Clark v. Wilson, 27 Ill. 449, 11 Am. St. Rep. 143, affirming Clark v. Wilson, 127 Ill. App. 610.

4. Defective Certificate as an Attestation—Alabama.—Merritt v. Phenix, 48 Ala. 87; Rogers v. Adams, 66 Ala. 600; Jones v. Hagler, 95 Ala. 529; Torrey v. Forbes, 94 Ala. 135; Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Hammond (Ala., 1894), 15 So. Rep. 935. See also Sharpe v. Orme, 61 Ala. 263.

But the officer's name written in the beginning of an unsigned printed form of a certificate of acknowledgment is not sufficient as the signature of a witness. Carlisle v. Carlisle, 78 Ala. 542.

5. It has been held in New York that the officer's signature to the defective certificate, not being affixed for that purpose, is not good as the attestation of a witness. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Corey, 54 Hun (N. Y.) 493.

In Ohio, under a statute requiring the grantor to acknowledge his deed before a magistrate in the presence of two attesting witnesses, it was held that the official signature of the officer taking the acknowledgment of a deed attested by only one witness could not be made to answer a double purpose, and supply the deficiency in the attestation. White v. Denman, 1 Ohio St. 210.

Under the Former Laws of Maryland it was not necessary for the certificate to show official character. This might be shown by evidence aliunde. U. S. Bank v. Benning, 4 Cranch (C. C.) 81; Van Ness v. U. S. Bank, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 17; Byer v. Etnyre, 2 Gill (Md.) 150, 41 Am. Dec. 410; these last two cases distinguished Connelly v. Bowie, 6 Har. & J. (Md.) 141, where a certificate which did not state the official character of the officer was held defective, there being no evidence aliunde to show such character.

As to whether this rule would hold good under the former laws of Ohio, see the remarks of the court in Shults v. Moore, 1 McLean (U. S.) 520.

The Courts will Take Judicial Notice of who as is generally authorized to take acknowledgments, this will be prima facie evidence of his character and authority.¹

Where the officer has recited his official character in the body of the certificate, it is not necessary for it to be shown in the signature also,² and certificates with no other designation of official character than descriptive terms and abbreviations appended to the signature have been held sufficient.³

are justices of the peace in the counties in which they are sitting. Livingston v. Kettelle, 6 Ill. 116, 41 Am. Dec. 166; Irving v. Brownell, 11 Ill. 402; *Graham v. Presumption of Authority.—Where a deed executed by husband and wife was acknowledged in open court before two justices of the peace, who took the separate acknowledgment of the wife and made report to the court, which acted upon the report, it was held, in North Carolina, that the evidence was irresistible that the justices were members of the court, appointed for the purpose. *Den v. Car. 535; and supra, this title, Certain Provisions Considered—Venue.

Official Character of the Person Taking Acknowledgment of Deeds in Another State.—It has been held in Illinois that in the absence of a statute requiring it, the certificate of acknowledgment taken by an officer of another state need not contain evidence of his official character. Secrist v. Green, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 744. See also Carpenter v. Dexter, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 513.

In case of acknowledgments taken in another state, the recording officer is not required to consult the laws of that state to ascertain the authority of the officer taking the acknowledgment. People v. Register, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 180.

Certificate must show that the Court before which Acknowledgment is Made is a Court of Record.—Under a statute authorizing instruments affecting real estate to be acknowledged in other states, before a court of record or officer holding the seal of such court, a certificate of acknowledgment under the seal of a court in another state, but failing to state, and it being not otherwise shown, that such court was a court of record or that the officer was the holder of the seal, is defective. Fogg v. Holcomb, 64 Iowa 621; McCammon v. Beaupre, 25 U. C. Q. B. 419. See also Torrey v. Forbes, 94 Ala. 135; MacKenzie v. Jackson, 82 Ga. 80; Fisher v. Vaughn, 75 Wis. 600.

Unless This is Shown by the Laws of the State.—An acknowledgment taken in another state is not invalidated by the omission of the magistrate to certify that his is a court of record, that fact being shown by the laws of the state. Pierce v. Hakes, 23 Pa. St. 231.

Acknowledgment Taken by Commissioners.—The official character of a commissioner of deeds appointed to reside in another state is sufficiently shown by his certificate and official seal. Johnson v. Cocks, 12 Ark. 672; Kaufman v. Stone, 25 Ark. 336; Smith v. Van Gilder, 26 Ark. 527.

It was so held in Illinois with reference to commissioners of other states taking acknowledgments of deeds to lands in Illinois. Vance v. Schuyler, 6 Ill. 160; Thompson v. Schuyler, 7 Ill. 271; Irving v. Brownell, 11 Ill. 402.

Commissioner need Not State Source of Authority.—It is not necessary for a commissioner taking acknowledgments in another state to recite in his certificate the source of his power, or that he was duly qualified. Sparrow v. Hovey, 41 Mich. 708.

Where the officer describes himself as an officer whom the law authorizes to take acknowledgments, he need not state that he is so authorized. Livingston v. McDonald, 9 Ohio 169.

But where the acknowledgment purports to be taken by an officer not known to local laws, his authority to take acknowledgments must be shown. De Second v. Culver, 10 Ohio 188.

Handwriting need Not be Proved.—It is not necessary to prove the handwriting of the magistrate. His certificate is prima facie evidence of his signature and authority. Keichline v. Keichline, 54 Pa. St. 75. See also Goddard v. Gloninger, 5 Watts (Pa.) 209.

Official Character Shown by Evidence Aliunde.—It has been held by some courts that failure to state the official character of the officer is not a fatal defect, and that the omission may be supplied by extrinsic evidence.¹

(b) Surplusage in Description.—Where the certificate shows that the officer held two offices by virtue of only one of which he was authorized to take acknowledgments, that portion of the description showing him to be an officer not authorized will not invalidate the certificate, but may be rejected as surplusage.²

(7) Seal.—When so required by statute, the certificate must be sealed with the officer's official seal.³ The prescribed form of seal need not be strictly

Official Character Shown in Signature Alone.—

An acknowledgment before a person who subscribed his name "H. G. Clopper," with the abbreviation "Reg'r" added, it being proved that Henry George Clopper was a registrar of deeds at the time the deed purported to have been acknowledged and registered, and that he always signed his name "H. G. Clopper," was held good. Briggs v. McBride, 17 New Bruns. 663.

A certificate signed "A. B. Comm'r," without other statement of official character, sufficiently shows the character of the subscriber as commissioner. Duval v. Covenhoven, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 561.

It was held competent to explain on the hearing that the letters "J. P. H. C.," attached to the signature of a certificate bearing the caption "State of Mississippi, Hancock County," were intended to signify "Justice of the Peace of Hancock County," and the certificate was held good without any other statement of official character. Russ v. Wingate, 30 Miss. 440.

A certificate of acknowledgment when taken in another state, being in the form prescribed for such acknowledgments, and accompanied by a county clerk's certificate attesting the official character of the officer taking the acknowledgment as justice of the peace, was signed by one who designated his official character only by the use of the letters "J. P." affixed to his signature. This was held sufficient. Final v. Backus, 18 Mich. 218.

Where the caption of the deed shows the county, and the certificate of acknowledgment bears the seal of the county court and is signed by one styling himself in his signature "Recorder," it is sufficiently shown that the deed was acknowledged before the county clerk, who was also by law county recorder. Broussard v. Dull, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 59.

A certificate of the record of a deed headed "Republic of Texas, Liberty County," and signed "G. W. Miles, R. L. C.," is sufficient to show the officer's character as county recorder. McDonald v. Morgan, 27 Tex. 503.

A certificate with no other statement of official character than the subscription "G. H. M., Clerk, by G. M. W., Deputy," was held insufficient. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Carter, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 675.

Hawaii.—Lenahan v. Akana, 6 Hawaiian 538.

Under the Kentucky statute providing that deeds executed out of the state may be admitted to record when certified by a notary public under his seal of office, it was held that a recorded deed, executed out of the state, and acknowledged before a notary public, the certificate being certified under his official seal, takes priority over a deed also executed out of the state, recorded before the former, but whose acknowledgment was not so certified under the notary's seal. Herd v. Cist (Ky., 1889), 12 S. W. Rep. 466.

Want of Seal Vitiates Certificate.—Under a statute requiring the certificate of authentication of acknowledgments taken in another state to be under seal, it was held that a certificate not under seal, was void. Pope v. Cutler, 34 Mich. 150 (distinguishing Starkweather v. Martin, 28 Mich. 471); Fisher v. Vaughn, 75 Wis. 609.

But where a judge took the probate of one of the witnesses to a deed and certified the same, but not under seal, the deed was held to be well proved. Whitmire v. Napier, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 290, criticised in Duncan v. Duncan, 1 Watts (Pa.) 329.

Recorded Acknowledgment Not under Seal.—It was held in Missouri that a deed admitted to record as duly acknowledged and certified will not be defeated by the fact that the notary's certificate of acknowledgment was attested merely as "given under hand" and had no seal affixed. Mitchner v. Holmes, 117 Mo. 185.

Where the Deed Itself is Produced in Evidence, the fact that the notary's certificate of acknowledgment was not sealed is no objection to the admission of the deed as evidence. Rullman v. Barr, 54 Kan. 643.

A Seal on the Certificate is not necessary to the validity of the deed. Robinson v. Robinson, 116 Ill. 250. See also Barton v. Morris, 15 Ohio 408.

Statute Requiring Seal Held Directory.—It was held in North Carolina that the statute requiring the notary to affix his seal to a certificate of probate of a deed is directory only, and his omission to attach his seal to the certificate of a married woman's privy examination will not invalidate a certificate otherwise regular. Lineberger v. Tidwell, 104 N. Car. 506.

Presumption of Seal.—One who objects to the absence of seal from a notary's certificate of acknowledgment offered in evidence sixteen years after it was made, the objection being overruled, must show that the seal was in fact omitted, for it may have been affixed and become detached. Clark v. Sawyer, 48 Cal. 133.

Two Certificates on the Same Sheet Sealed with One Seal.—An assignment for the benefit of creditors had indorsed on it a certificate of acknowledgment in due form signed by a notary, but not sealed. Following this and on the same page was another certificate, by the same notary, of the assignee's acknowledgment of the execution of his acceptance. This had the notarial seal attached. It was held that the two certificates could not be regarded as one, requiring only one seal, and that the first certificate was a nullity. DeGraw v. King, 28 Minn. 118.

1. Device of Seal Prescribed by Statute.—The absence from a notary's seal affixed to his certificate of acknowledgment, of certain emblems and devices prescribed by statute, will not invalidate the certificate. Sonfield v. Thompson, 42 Ark. 46, 48 Am. Rep. 49.

But see, as to the law in Iowa, Hewitt v. Morgan, 88 Iowa 468; Kruger v. Walker (Iowa, 1894), 59 N. W. Rep. 65.

Prior to the enactment of the law requiring a special form of seal showing a star in the centre to be used by commissioners of Texas in certifying acknowledgments taken in other states, the omission of the star from the seal would not invalidate the certificate. Davis v. Roosevelt, 53 Tex. 305.

Under the Nebraska statute (Consol. Statutes 1893, § 3218), prescribing the form of seal to be used by a notary and providing that it shall at his option contain his name or the initial letters thereof, it was held that a seal on a certificate of acknowledgment complying in other respects with the statutory form was sufficient without the addition of the name or initials of the certifying officer. Weeping Water v. Reed, 21 Neb. 261. See also Sparrow v. Hovey, 41 Mich. 708.

Seal on Wrong Side of Sheet.—Where a mortgage was written upon one side of a sheet of paper, and the certificate of acknowledgment in proper form was on the other side, the seal being impressed on the same side as the mortgage, but distinctly visible through the sheet on the same side as the certificate of acknowledgment, though at the opposite end, there being no other certificate on the paper to which the seal could be made applicable, it was held that the certificate was sufficiently authenticated thereby. Evans v. Smith, 43 Minn. 59.

Seal Presumed to be That of Officer Using It.—In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the seal appended by a notary to his certificate is presumed to be his own. The presumption is not rebutted by the mere fact that a notary signs his name as "Geo. Theo. Sommer" and the seal is inscribed "Theo. Sommer," the fact of the execution of the deed having been adjudged to be proven by the certificate and seal. Deans v. Pate, 114 N. Car. 194. See also Deveber v. Britain, 9 New Bruns. 330.

failure to affix a seal,¹ or the use of a private seal,² will not invalidate the certificate.

Place of Seal.—It is not essential that the seal follow the officer's signature; a seal appearing on a certificate before the name of the officer has been held sufficient.³

Statement that Seal was Affixed.—It is held in several states that the certificate need not show affirmatively that the seal was affixed.⁴

Seal need Not be Copied into Record.—Where it is stated in the body of the certificate that the seal of the officer was affixed, the presumption arises that it was so affixed, it not being necessary for the recording officer to make a copy of the seal in the records.⁵

Use of Seal Belonging to Another Officer Fatal.—Where a notary used the seal of the county clerk instead of his own, it was held that the certificate was fatally defective. McKellar v. Peck, 39 Tex. 381. See also Moses v. Dibrell, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 457.

1. Seal Unnecessary unless Required by Statute.—Powers v. Bryant, 7 Port. (Ala.) 9; Harrison v. Simons, 55 Ala. 510; Ingoldsby v. Juan, 12 Cal. 564; Irving v. Brownell, 11 Ill. 402; Thompson v. Robertson, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 383; Baze v. Arper, 6 Minn. 220; Thompson v. Morgan, 6 Minn. 292; Farnum v. Buffum, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 260; Fund Com'r's v. Glass, 17 Ohio 542; Jaques v. Weeks, 7 Watts (Pa.) 261; Maxwell v. Hartmann, 50 Wis. 660. See also Ashley v. Wright, 19 Ohio St. 291.

Under a statute authorizing the clerk of a court "having a seal" to take acknowledgments, it was held that it is no objection to an acknowledgment taken by a county clerk that he has no seal of office, the general phrase "having a seal" being only intended to denote a court of record, which is defined to be a court having a seal. The power of the clerk is not intended to depend on his having procured and taken care of a seal. Ingoldsby v. Juan, 12 Cal. 564.

2. Private Seal.—Under the Florida Act of 1831, requiring a commissioner of that state resident in another state to certify acknowledgments of deeds to be recorded in Florida under his seal, it was held that his private seal was sufficient. Tuten v. Gazan, 18 Fla. 751.

No Official Seal Provided.—Under the statute requiring the officer to use his official seal a certificate sealed with his private seal stating that no official seal had yet been provided was held sufficient. Collins v. Boyd, 5 Dana (Ky.) 317; Agan v. Shannon, 103 Mo. 661; Creigh v. Beelin, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 83.

It was so held in California under a statute making special provision for such cases. Stark v. Barrett, 15 Cal. 362; Fogarty v. Sawyer, 23 Cal. 570.

But it was held in Illinois that a certificate sealed with a notary's private seal and reciting that no public seal had been furnished was insufficient. Mason v. Brock, 12 Ill. 273, 52 Am. Dec. 490.

A certificate of conformity sealed with a scroll instead of a seal of the court, the clerk stating that such seal is lost, is insufficient. Skinner v. Fulton, 39 Ill. 484. See also Moore v. Titman, 33 Ill. 358.

And in Missouri it was held that the mayor of a city could not use his private seal in the absence of a public seal, although the statute allowed clerks of courts of record to do so, Geary v. Kansas City, 61 Mo. 378.

Certificate of Officer Having neither Private nor Public Seal.—A justice of the peace in Tennessee not having any seal of office, and private seals being abolished, it was held that his certificate of acknowledgment was valid, though not under seal. Lucas v. Larkin, 85 Tenn. 355.

3. Seal may Precede Signature.—Gilbreath v. Dilday, 152 Ill. 207; Barton v. Morris, 15 Ohio 408.

4. Harrington v. Fish, 10 Mich. 415; Dale v. Wright, 57 Mo. 110; Webb v. Huff, 61 Tex. 677.

In Webb v. Huff, 61 Tex. 677, Delany, J., said: "It is objected that the notary did not add the words, 'Given under my hand and seal of office,' etc. These venerable words ought, no doubt, to be used by all notaries, especially as they have been adopted into the form given by the statute; but we do not think that their presence or their absence will affect the validity of the instrument." See also a certificate held good in Broussard v. Dull, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 59.

Contra.—But it has been held that nothing will be presumed in favor of a notary's certificate of acknowledgment, and that where the attesting clause in such certificate simply read as follows: "Witness my hand and seal this day," it will not be presumed that the notary meant his notarial or official seal. Wetmore v. Laird, 5 Biss. (U. S.) 160.

5. Recording Officer need Not Copy Seal.—United States.—Smith v. Gale, 144 U. S. 509. California.—Smith v. Dall, 13 Cal. 510; Jones v. Martin, 16 Cal. 165.

c. CERTIFICATE OF MAGISTRACY AND CONFORMITY.—It is usually required in case of acknowledgments taken without the state by officers of other states, that the certificate of acknowledgment shall be accompanied by a second certificate under the hand and seal of an officer of a court of record, or other proper officer, certifying the official character and authority of the officer taking the acknowledgment, that his signature is genuine, and, where it is required that the foreign law be observed in taking the acknowledgment, that the deed was executed and acknowledged according to the laws of the foreign state or country.¹ This second certificate is necessary in some states only when the

The same doctrine applies to a certificate by a county clerk as to the official character of the acknowledging officer. Thorn v. Mayer, (Buffalo Super. Ct.), 33 N. Y. Supp. 664.

Use of Words "No Seal" in Certified Copy.—Where a certified copy of a deed from the county records had in place of "seal" on the notary's certificate of acknowledgment the words "no seal," but the original deed with the seal affixed was produced, and it was proved that the officer had affixed his seal at the time of taking the acknowledgment, it was held that the deed was properly admitted to record and might be read in evidence. Equitable Mortgage Co. v. Kempner, 84 Tex. 102.

In a similar case the certified copy had the words "no seal" in the usual place of affixing the seal. The court admitted the instrument in evidence, holding that the words did not imply the absence of seal from the certificate, but were a mere note of the recorder of the place of the seal which he probably had no means of copying. Jones v. Martin, 16 Cal. 165. See also Farmers', etc., Bank v. Bronson, 14 Mich. 361.

Statutory Form need Not be Strictly Followed.—An acknowledgment regularly taken before an authorized officer of another state, with the adjudication of the clerk of a superior court that "the foregoing instrument has been duly proved, as appears from the foregoing seal and certificate," will not be rendered invalid by the omission in the clerk's certificate of the words "in due form," as required by the North Carolina Code, § 1246. Deans v. Pate, 114 N. Car. 194.

The Two Certificates may be Read Together.—Where the certificate by a county clerk, attesting the official character of the officer before whom the acknowledgment was taken, omitted the name of the justice and his official character, where these could be easily supplied when this certificate was read in connection with the certificate of acknowledgment, it was held that the two might be read together to sustain the clerk's certificate. Thorn v. Mayer (Buffalo Super. Ct.), 33 N. Y. Supp. 664.

Certificate by Unauthorized Officer.—A certificate of official character, given by an officer having no authority to issue such certificate, is a nullity. Doe v. Smith, 3 McLean (U. S.) 362; Sartor v. Bolinger, 59 Tex. 411. See also Gillespie v. Reed, 3 McLean (U. S.) 377.

A Judge who is His Own Clerk may certify under the seal of the court to his attestation of a deed. Moore v. Hill, 59 Ga. 760.

Want of Certificate of Authentication.—A deed inadmissible in evidence for want of a certificate that the officer before whom it was acknowledged was an authorized officer, and that his signature was genuine, and that the acknowledgment was according to the laws of the state where made, is not cured by the introduction of evidence that it was executed according to the laws of the state where it was acknowledged. O'Brien v. Gaslin, 20 Neb. 347.

Authority of Officer at Time of Taking Acknowledgment.—A certificate, dated July 5th, that a person certifying an acknowledgment taken by him July 2d "is an acting justice of the peace," was held defective in not showing that the officer was a justice of the peace at the time of the acknowledgment. Phillips v. People, 11 Ill. App. 340.

A certificate by a clerk of court that a certain person "is" a commissioner duly authorized to take acknowledgments is not sufficient to show that he was such commissioner on the day preceding the date of the certificate, when the acknowledgment was taken. Hilgendorf v. Ostrom, 46 Ill. App. 465.

Clerical Error in Commission Accompanying Certificate.—Under the Colorado statute requiring deeds acknowledged before an officer of another state to be accompanied by a copy of his commission as officer, it was held that an evident clerical error in such commission, making it appear that the officer was not qualified at the time of taking the acknowledgment, was not a fatal defect. Quimby v. Boyd, 8 Colo. 194. See also Denny v. Ashley, 12 Colo. 165; and as to laws in Maryland, Warner v. Hardy, 6 Md. 525.

Effect of Change of Venue on Proof of Official Character.—Under the Illinois statute requiring a deed acknowledged within the state before a justice of the peace to be accompanied by a certificate by the county clerk that he was an acting justice of the peace, but providing that no such certificate shall be required if the acknowledgment is taken by a justice in the county where the land is situated, it was held that a deed without such certificate, being properly admitted in evidence in a suit brought in the county where it was acknowledged and recorded, was not rendered inadmissible by a change of venue of the suit to another county. Holbrook v. Nichol, 36 Ill. 161.

Certificate Authenticating Officer's Signature.—Under the Georgia statute requiring a deed executed in another state, in order to be recorded, to be attested by certain named officers or a judge of a court of record, with a certificate by the clerk under the seal of the court, that the signature of the judge is genuine, etc., a certificate failing to show that such court was a court of record, there being no other evidence of that fact, and containing no more positive assertion of the genuineness of the judge's signature than the recital by the clerk, "I am acquainted with the handwriting of said judge, and believe his signature to the foregoing to be genuine," is fatally defective. MacKenzie v. Jackson, 82 Ga. 80.

But a recital in the certificate of authentication "that the signature attached to the annexed instrument is genuine," was held to be a sufficient compliance with the statutory form that the certifying officer "is acquainted with the handwriting of such person, and that he verily believes the signature subscribed to the certificate of acknowledgment to be genuine." Wells v. Atkinson, 24 Minn. 161.

Certificate that Acknowledgment is According to Law.—Failure to state in the certificate of authentication that the acknowledgment was according to the laws of the state when made, is a fatal defect. Morton v. Smith, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 316.

When the certificate of conformity made several years after the acknowledgment was taken certified that the deed was acknowledged according to the "existing" law of the foreign state, it was held that the use of that word did not invalidate the certificate, but it was referred back to the date of the acknowledgment. Harrington v. Fish, 10 Mich. 415. See also Morse v. Hewett, 28 Mich. 481; Warner v. Hardy, 6 Md. 525; McPherson v. Featherstone, 37 Wis. 632; and supra, this title, Who may Take Acknowledgments—In Other States.

Clerk in One State Certifying Acknowledgments Taken in Another State.—Under a statute authorizing the record of a deed executed and acknowledged in another state, when accompanied by a certificate of conformity by a clerk of a court of record, that the deed was executed and acknowledged according to the law of that state, the certificate of a clerk of a court of record in New York that the execution and acknowledgment of a deed in Pennsylvania before a New York commissioner was in accordance with the laws of New York is insufficient to admit the deed to record in Illinois. Lyon v. Kain, 36 Ill. 362.

Conformity to Law must be Shown Directly.—Under statutes authorizing the satisfaction of a decree of a surrogate court to be acknowledged in the same manner as deeds, and providing that deeds may be acknowledged in another state before authorized officers thereof, and that they may be recorded when accompanied by a certificate of the official character of the officer, it was held that a certificate of authority stating that the notary taking the acknowledgment of the satisfaction of such decree in another state was "duly authorized to take the same," without stating that he was authorized to take the acknowledgment of deeds, is insufficient. Matter of Wilcox's Estate (Surrogate Ct.), 21 N. Y. Supp. 780.

Certificate that Clerk is Clerk of a Court of Record.—A deed conveying land in Illinois was executed in another state, and acknowledged there before a justice of the peace in that state. The county clerk of the proper county, in certifying the official character of the justice of the peace, failed to state that he himself was the clerk of a court of record. It was held that this was not required, and that the deed was admissible in evidence, although not so certified. Grand Tower Min., etc., Co. v. Gill, 111 Ill. 541, distinguishing Shepard v. Carriel, 19 Ill. 319, in which a certificate by a county clerk of another state, certifying that an acknowledgment there taken was taken according to the laws of that state, was held to be defective in not stating that he was a clerk of a court of record, the statute requiring such certificate to be furnished by the clerk of a court of record. In this case, however, as not noticed in the case above, the court expressly extended its judgment to include the case of another certificate certifying the official character of an officer taking an acknowledgment out of the state, acknowledgment is taken by an officer not having an official seal,¹ and by some states it is required in case the acknowledgment is taken by a justice of the peace out of the county for which he is appointed.²

the certificate of acknowledgment, however, being itself adjudged defective.

Judicial Notice that Certain Courts are Courts of Record.—Under the Michigan statute requiring the certificate of conformity and official character accompanying an acknowledgment taken by an officer in another state to be by a clerk of a court of record, a certificate purporting to be that of a clerk of the judicial courts of the commonwealth of Massachusetts for Franklin county, signed by the clerk and sealed with the seal of the Supreme Court, is good without a recital that such court is a court of record, the courts taking judicial notice of that fact. Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 Mich. 410; Morse v. Hewett, 28 Mich. 481; Munroe v. Eastman, 31 Mich. 283. See also People v. Marion, 29 Mich. 31.

And where, by the constitution of the sister state, the county clerk is also clerk of the Supreme Court, the court will take judicial notice of this also. Morse v. Hewett, 28 Mich. 481.

Certificate of Conformity after Record of Deed.

—A deed executed in another state in 1839 and recorded in Michigan in 1846, to which a proper certificate of authentication by a county clerk of a foreign state was attached in 1879, is cured of any previous defects for want of such certificate, and is admissible in evidence, and by the curative act of 1861 (Howell's Mich. Annot. Stat. 1882, § 5724) the record of 1846 was made constructive notice. Healey v. Worth, 35 Mich. 166.

But it was held that a deed executed without witnesses and acknowledged out of the state in 1843 was not cured by a clerk's certificate in 1855 not purporting to have been made by a clerk of a court of record, nor did this case come within the Act of 1861. Donahue v. Klassner, 22 Mich. 252.

Record Dates from Time of Filing Certificate of Authority.—A mortgage to land in A county was executed and acknowledged in the county of B, and filed in the office of the recorder of A county, but no certificate of the official character of the justice of the peace who took the acknowledgment was filed with the recorder until some months after the time of filing the mortgage. It was held that the mortgage could not be treated as recorded until the certificate was filed. Reasoner v. Edmundson, 5 Ind. 393.

Under the Michigan Code of 1833 a deed executed and acknowledged in another state according to the laws of that state was valid without any certificate of authentication. Ives v. Kimball, 1 Mich. 308; Lacey v. Davis, 4 Mich. 140, 66 Am. Dec. 524; Galpin v. Abbott, 6 Mich. 17.

Valid Inter Partes without Certificate of Authentication.—A deed executed and acknowledged in a foreign state is good between the parties without any certificate of conformity or official character. Connell v. Gallagher, 36 Neb. 749; Gillespie v. Johnston, Wright (Ohio) 231. See also Galpin v. Abbott, 6

Mich. 17; and supra, this title, Origin and Necessity.

1. Under the laws in force in the District of Columbia in 1871 it was not necessary for a notary's certificate, under his official seal, of an acknowledgment taken out of the state, to be authenticated by the certificate of some person having cognizance of his official character and appointment. Williams v. Ten Eyck, 5 Mackey (D. C.) 168.

This is also the law in Nebraska. Hoadley v. Stephens, 4 Neb. 433; Green v. Gross, 12 Neb. 117; Galley v. Galley, 14 Neb. 174. See also Summer v. Mitchell, 29 Fla. 179; South-erin v. Mendum, 5 N. H. 420; O'Brien v. Gaslin, 20 Neb. 347.

Under a statute requiring deeds acknowledged without the state, before an officer not using an official seal, to be accompanied by a certificate by a clerk of a court of record, or other proper officer, showing the official character of the officer taking the acknowledgment, that said clerk is well acquainted with the handwriting of the officer, that he believes his signature to be genuine, and that the instrument is executed and acknowledged according to the laws of the state, a certificate failing to state the three latter particulars was held void. Irwin v. Welch, 10 Neb. 479.

2. Milligan v. Mayne, 2 Cranch (C. C.) 210; McGinnis v. Egbert, 8 Colo. 41; Holbrook v. Nichol, 36 Ill. 161; Reasoner v. Edmundson, 5 Ind. 393; M'Connell v. Brown, Litt. Sel. Cas. See also Deery v. Cray, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 795; Doe v. Miles, 3 Ill. 315; Griffith v. Ridgely, 2 Har. & M. (Md.) 418.

Under the former laws of New York deeds acknowledged before a county judge, who was of the degree of counsellor at law in the Supreme Court, were entitled to be recorded and read in evidence in any county in the state without a certificate of authentication by the county clerk. Jackson v. Chapin, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 485; Jackson v. Phillips, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 94.

But such certificate was necessary in case of acknowledgments before a county judge not of the degree of counsellor, or before a commissioner of deeds appointed for any county or city. Wood v. Weiant, 1 N. Y. 77.

This applies to the acknowledgment of a bond of indemnity before a commissioner of deeds, as well as to the acknowledgment of conveyances of real estate, Campbell v. Hoyt, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 555; but does not apply to a deed executed prior to 1818, Hunt v. Johnson, 19 N. Y. 279.

Under the Act of 1847 it was held immaterial whether the judge was or was not of the degree of counsellor, and his certificate of acknowledgment might be read in evidence or recorded in any other county with-

2. What It must Certify—a. COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE.—A certificate must state all that is necessary to show a valid acknowledgment; no material fact should be omitted.¹ While it is better that the statutory form be strictly followed, this is by no means necessary.

Strict or Substantial Compliance.—The courts have generally been disposed to give to the certificate of acknowledgment a liberal construction, and have almost uniformly held that a certificate showing a substantial compliance with the statutory requirements is sufficient.² By some courts, however, in case of out authentication by the county clerk. People v. Hurlbutt, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 126.

Under the Kentucky Act of 1792, providing for the acknowledgment of deeds before two justices of the peace in the county where the grantor resides, and requiring the justices to state in the certificate that the deed was so acknowledged, and also so subscribed or signed, in their presence, a certificate failing to show affirmatively that both these acts were done in the presence of the officers is defective. Womack v. Hughes, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 292; M'Connell v. Brown, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 459; Hyne v. Campbell, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 286; Kay v. Jones, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 38; Smith v. White, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 16; Harris v. Price, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 333; Brown v. Swift (Ky., 1886), 1 S. W. Rep. 474. See also Taylor v. Bush, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 85.

Under the Pennsylvania Act of 1770 a certificate by the officer stating that husband and wife acknowledged the deed to be their act and deed, "she being of full age, and by him examined apart," is insufficient to pass the wife's estate. Watson v. Bailey, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 470, 2 Am. Dec. 462; Evans v. Com., 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 272, 8 Am. Dec. 711; Watson v. Mercer, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 49, 9 Am. Dec. 411; Fowler v. McClurg, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 143.

The following certificate was held insufficient in Tennessee: "This deed of conveyance was acknowledged in open court and ordered to be registered." Lipe v. Mitchell, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 400; Malone v. Stevens, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 520; Crutchfield v. Stewart, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 237. See also Cox v. Bowman, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 108; Smith v. Boren, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 238; Henderson v. Crawford, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 439; Greer v. Smith, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 487; Yerger v. Young, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 37.

But the following certificate indorsed on the deed was held sufficient: "Then was the execution of the within conveyance duly acknowledged in open court by S. C., the grantor therein named, and admitted to record; let it be registered." Love v. Shields, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 405.

Under the Texas Statute (Hartley's Dig., art. 2777) providing that any conveyance "shall be duly registered in the office of the proper county upon the acknowledgment of the parties or party signing the same," before certain named officers, an assignment signed by the grantor and accompanied by an officer's certificate that the grantor acknowledged to him "that he signed over the above deed as therein expressed" was properly admitted to record. Harlowe v. Hudgins, 84 Tex. 107.

Under the Virginia Act of 1792, requiring the separate examination of the wife, but not expressly requiring that the officers should certify that the deed was explained to her, where the certificate stated that the wife was privately examined, and acknowledged the deed freely and voluntarily, and that she was willing for it to be recorded, but failed to state that it was shown or explained to her by the officers, and that she declared that she had willingly signed and sealed the same, it was held that if she had in fact signed the

with the requisitions of the statute has been insisted upon.¹

A certificate by the officer that the acknowledgment has been made "according to law" is generally held to be insufficient to show compliance with statute, it being the duty of the officer to certify as to the facts, while the court is to decide upon the sufficiency of the acknowledgment.²

deed such certificate was substantially in compliance with the requisitions of the statute, and binding on her; but if she had not signed the deed, such certificate was insufficient to make the deed binding on her. Tod v. Baylor, 4 Leigh (Va.) 498.

Under Section 1437 of the General Statutes of Washington, providing that a certificate of acknowledgment substantially in the form there given, containing a recital that the execution of the instrument was the free and voluntary act of the party executing the same, but not providing that this form should be exclusive, it was held that a certificate of acknowledgment of a deed by husband and wife stating that they acknowledged that they signed and executed the deed, and that the wife, on separate examination, acknowledged that she signed the same voluntarily, is sufficient. Kley v. Geiger, 4 Wash. 484.

"Acknowledged before Me," etc., Insufficient. —Where the statute requires that a deed or mortgage to become efficacious must be acknowledged by the grantor before a competent officer who must certify such acknowledgment, "with the date and year when the same was made, and by whom," a certificate "Subscribed and acknowledged before me this eighth day of June, 1872," is entirely destitute of the chief ingredients essential to constitute a valid acknowledgment. Myers v. Boyd, 96 Pa. St. 427.

An acknowledgment of an assignment of land "acknowledged by S. D. E., this fifth day of December, A.D. 1859, before me, T. D., justice of the peace," was held insufficient to entitle the instrument to be recorded. Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 12.

1. Strict Compliance Sometimes Required. — Wentworth v. Clark, 33 Ark. 432; Dewey v. Campau, 4 Mich. 565; Laird v. Scott, 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 314; Perry v. Calhoun, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 551. See also Stidham v. Matthews, 29 Ark. 650; Barrett v. Tewksbury, 9 Cal. 13, 15 Cal. 354; Scott v. Battle, 85 N. Car. 184, 39 Am. Rep. 694.

The statutory provisions as to a married woman's private examination and acknowledgment ought to be substantially and literally adhered to. Den v. Wilson, 2 Dev. (N. Car.) 306; Smith v. Williams, 38 Miss. 48.

2. Acknowledgment "according to law," etc. —Statements in the certificates that the acknowledgment was taken "in due form," or "according to law," or "as the law directs" have been held insufficient. Gill v. Fauntleroy, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 177; Blackburn v. Pennington, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 217; Flanagan v. Young, 2 Har. & M. (Md.) 38; Den v. Cobbs, 1 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 228; Den v. Lewis, 8 Ired. (N. Car.) 70, 47 Am. Dec. 338; Meddock v. Williams, 12 Ohio 387.

In Meddock v. Williams, 12 Ohio 387,

Read, J., said: "A certificate by an officer that he has acted according to law is no evidence that the things are done which the law requires. It is evidence of the opinion of the officer, nothing more. It is the duty of the officer to certify the things he has done, and the court will then judge whether he has pursued the law. It is not a certificate of the opinion of the officer that he has pursued the law which the statute requires, but a certificate of the acts he has pursued in obedience to the statute. The certificate itself must contain all the acts done, that it may appear upon its face that the requisitions of the statute have been complied with."

In several of the states, however, the decisions have not been uniform. Thus in Kentucky, under a statute requiring the certificate to state merely the fact and time of acknowledgment, a certificate of acknowledgment "as the law directs" is sufficient; privy examination, voluntary acknowledgment, and consent to record being all presumed from such certificate. Gordon v. Leech, 81 Ky. 229.

In Maryland, under the Act of 1699, a certificate of acknowledgment of a deed by husband and wife conveying the wife's land was sufficient if it stated that the wife was "first examined as the law requires." Robins v. Bush, 1 Har. & M. (Md.) 50; Robinson v. Lloyd, 1 Har. & M. (Md.) 78.

In North Carolina it has been held that when the clerk of a court of record certifies that an instrument has been "duly proved" in that court it is implied that everything required by law has been proved, upon the maxim res judicata pro veritate accipitur. Horton v. Hagler, 1 Hawks (N. Car.) 48.

In Ohio there is an early decision leaning against the doctrine announced in the text. Newcomb v. Smith, Wright (Ohio) 208.

An allegation, in a petition for judgment on a mortgage executed by a husband and wife, that said mortgage was "duly acknowledged" by the wife, must be held to mean that it was acknowledged by her in such manner as to be legally binding on her as her act and deed, and is sufficient to authorize the introduction of testimony to show that the acknowledgment was in the manner required by law. Roy v. Bremond, 22 Tex. 626.

A certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment, reciting that the said woman, "being examined separate and apart from her husband, as the law directs, acknowledged the above deed of conveyance to be their voluntary act and deed for the uses and purposes therein mentioned," was held sufficient under the Indiana Act of 1824. Stevens v. Doe, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 475; Watson v. Clendennin, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 477; Pardun v. Dobesberger, 3 Ind. 389.

b. FACT OF ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—The certificate must show that the grantor acknowledged the instrument to be his act and deed.¹

Sufficiency of Acknowledgment must be Decided by the Court.—The question as to whether a deed has been properly executed and acknowledged should not be submitted to the jury, but is a question of law, to be decided by the court. Bullock v. Narrott, 49 Ill. 62.

The register must record a deed upon a proper certificate of probate or acknowledgment; he has no power to determine whether the probate is valid or invalid; and if the certificate be good he must register, although the probate is bad, and he cannot record a deed on a defective certificate, though the probate may have been properly made. M'Iver v. Robertson, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 84.

1. Fact of Acknowledgment must be Shown—California.—Bryan v. Ramirez, 8 Cal. 461, 68 Am. Dec. 340; Henderson v. Grewell, 8 Cal. 581.

Connecticut.—Stanton v. Button, 2 Conn. 529; Pendleton v. Button, 3 Conn. 406; Hayden v. Westcott, 11 Conn. 129.

Georgia.—White v. Magarahan, 87 Ga. 217.

Michigan.—Dewey v. Campau, 4 Mich. 565.

Missouri.—Cabell v. Grubbs, 48 Mo. 353.

New Jersey.—Hoboken Land, etc., Co. v. Kerrigan, 31 N. J. L. 13.

Texas.—Huff v. Webb, 64 Tex. 284; Davis v. McCartney, 64 Tex. 584.

Virginia.—Hockman v. McClanahan, 87 Va. 33; Virginia Coal, etc., Co. v. Roberson, 88 Va. 116; Clinch River Veneer Co. v. Kurth, 88 Va. 222.

See also Ingraham v. Grigg, 13 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 22; People v. Harrison, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 560.

Illustrations.—A certificate stating that the grantor "acknowledged the deed to be his act and deed for the purpose therein mentioned" is sufficient, Dawson v. Hayden, 67 Ill. 52; or "to be his act and deed," Lockwood v. Mills, 39 Ill. 602.

But a certificate in these words: "Personally appeared A B, known to me to be the person described in and who executed the same, freely, voluntarily, and for the uses and purposes therein mentioned," is not sufficient. Bryan v. Ramirez, 8 Cal. 461, 68 Am. Dec. 340.

It was held in Indiana that a certificate, "Personally appeared A. P. and N. P., his wife, acknowledged," etc., sufficiently shows acknowledgment by both. Brown v. Corbin, 121 Ind. 455.

In Texas a certificate attached to a power of attorney reciting that the subscriber thereof personally appeared before the magistrate, and in his presence "signed, sealed, and delivered the same for the uses and purposes therein contained," is not sufficient to admit the instrument to record. McDaniel v. Needham, 61 Tex. 269.

A certificate stating that "the subscriber" of a deed appeared and acknowledged it is defective in not stating explicitly that the person who made the acknowledgment was the grantor. Downing v. Gallagher, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 455.

A deed to be operative must be acknowledged to be the deed of the party, and where a married woman acknowledges "the lands to be the right and estate of the party, according to the Act of Assembly," the acknowledgment is defective. Lewis v. Waters, 3 Har. & M. (Md.) 430.

But a deed so acknowledged was held good in Hoddy v. Harryman, 3 Har. & M. (Md.) 581; Blair v. Valliant, 4 Har. & M. (Md.) 62.

Under the Virginia Act of 1792, requiring a deed to be acknowledged by the party or parties who sealed or delivered it, it was held that it need not affirmatively appear from the certificate that the acknowledgment was made by the grantor, and deeds certified to have been acknowledged before the court were admitted in evidence, although it did not appear that they were acknowledged by their respective grantors. Wise v. Postlewait, 3 W. Va. 452.

Presumption that Deed was Acknowledged by Grantor.—Where a deed was acknowledged in open court and duly recorded, although it did not appear by whom the acknowledgment was made, it was presumed that it was acknowledged by the person executing the deed, and the acknowledgment was held good. Philips v. Ruble, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 221.

But where the certificate of acknowledgment of a deed executed by J. T. recited that "personally appeared J. T. and acknowledged," etc., it was held fatally defective for not showing that the person appearing was the grantor. Torrens v. Currie, 22 New Bruns. 342.

Acknowledgment of Delivery—Mississippi.—A certificate that fails to show that the grantor acknowledged the delivery as well as the signing of the deed was held defective. Buntyn v. Shippers' Compress Co., 63 Miss. 94.

Where a married woman acknowledged that she "executed" a deed, this was held equivalent to "signed, sealed, and delivered." Smith v. Williams, 38 Miss. 48. See also infra, this title, The Certificate—Errors and Omissions.

Adoption of Signature by Acknowledgment.—

It is not required that the instrument shall be executed in the presence of the officer, nor is it material that he should know that the signature was written by the grantor, for if the grantor acknowledges before the officer the due execution of the instrument, he thereby recognizes and adopts the signature as his own. Munger v. Baldrige, 41 Kan. 236, 13 Am. St. Rep. 273.

It is the fact of acknowledgment, and not the genuineness of the signature, that the certificate must show; and the acknowledgment of a deed by the grantor is not rendered invalid by the fact that the signature was affixed by another person. Morris v. Sar-

The use of the word "acknowledged" is not essential; words of equivalent import may be employed;¹ and it has been held that the fact of acknowledgment may be shown by implication.² The acknowledgment can be only upon personal appearance, and a certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment made by an officer on the assurance of a third person that the grantor executed the deed, is void.³ In some states the certificate must show that the acknowledgment was voluntarily made.⁴

Explanation of Deed.—In New Jersey the officer is required to certify that the contents of the instrument were made known to the grantor.⁵

c. NAME AND IDENTITY OF GRANTOR.—According to the better practice, the name of the grantor should be stated in the certificate of acknowledgment, but it seems to be generally held that the omission of the name⁶ from the gent, 18 Iowa 90; Newton v. Emerson, 66 Tex. 142.

Certificate in Alternative.—A certificate of probate reciting that a subscribing witness said "that he either saw J. L. subscribe his name to the within instrument, and acknowledged the same to be his act and deed, or that the said J. L. requested him to witness the same after he had executed it, and acknowledged that he signed, sealed, and delivered the same," etc., was held to be a nullity on account of being in the alternative, and the deed was therefore improperly admitted in evidence. Riley v. Pool, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 346; Harvey v. Cummings, 68 Tex. 599.

1. Term "Acknowledgment" Not Essential.—Chouteau v. Allen, 70 Mo. 290. See also Short v. Conlee, 28 Ill. 219.

Omission by Clerical Error.—And where such words have been omitted by an evident clerical error they may be supplied by intentment after an inspection of the certificate in connection with the deed. Basshor v. Stewart, 54 Md. 376.

But compare Stanton v. Button, 2 Conn. 527, where it was held that a certificate, "Personally appeared A B, signer of the above instrument ——— to be his free act, etc.," could not be aided by intentment or construction. See also Dewey v. Campau, 4 Mich. 565.

2. Acknowledgment Shown by Implication.—Where the certificate of acknowledgment of an ancient deed stated that the grantors "came to acknowledge" it, this was held to sufficiently imply that they did acknowledge the deed. Jackson v. Gilchrist, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 89.

Acknowledgment is Necessarily Involved in the Private Examination; so that if the certificate shows that the wife was privately examined separate and apart from her husband it will be sufficient, although it omit to state the fact of acknowledgment. Rainey v. Gordon, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 345.

3. Mays v. Hedges, 79 Ind. 288.

4. Certificate must Show Voluntary Acknowledgment—Iowa, Nebraska.—Wickersham v. Reeves, 1 Iowa 413; Newman v. Samuels, 17 Iowa 528. This may be shown by the tenor and words of the certificate as well as by the words of the statute. Dickerson v. Davis, 12 Iowa 353; Becker v. Anderson, 11 Neb. 493; Spitznagle v. Vanhesssch, 13 Neb. 338; Keeling v. Hoyt, 31 Neb. 453.

See also, as to this requirement in case of acknowledgments by married women, supra, this title, Who may Make Acknowledgments—Married Women.

5. Explanation of Contents of Deed—New Jersey.—It was held under the New Jersey Act of 1820 that a certificate of acknowledgment failing to set forth that the judge first made known the contents of the instrument to the person making the acknowledgment, and was satisfied that he was the grantor mentioned therein, as required by this act, was insufficient to render the deed admissible in evidence, and that the act directing these things was compulsory and not merely directory. Pinckney v. Burrage, 31 N. J. L. 21.

It was held in New Jersey that the omission to read a deed to an illiterate marksman rendered the certificate of acknowledgment of no value as proof where the dispute was whether that was the paper read, or whether it was correctly read to the party executing it. Suffern v. Butler, 19 N. J. Eq. 202. See also New Jersey Revision, "Conveyances," §§ 4, 9.

Deaf and Dumb Grantor.—See, as to explanation of contents of deed to a deaf and dumb grantor, Morrison v. Morrison, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 190.

6. Place for Name of Grantor Left Blank.—A certificate in these or equivalent words: "Personally came ——— to me known to be the identical person whose name is affixed to the foregoing instrument as grantor," etc., the grantor being nowhere named in the certificate, is not fatally defective, the name being supplied by reference to the body of the deed. Magness v. Arnold, 31 Ark. 103; Sanford v. Bulkley, 30 Conn. 344; Milner v. Nelson, 86 Iowa 452; Pickett v. Doe, 5 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 470, 43 Am. Dec. 523; Wilcoxon v. Osborn, 77 Mo. 621.

And to the same effect are Livingston v. Kettelle, 6 Ill. 116, 41 Am. Dec. 166; Wise v. Postlewait, 3 W. Va. 452.

But the contrary has been held where the certificate contained no clause identifying the grantor as the person acknowledging the instrument. Hayden v. Westcott, 11 Conn. 129; Smith v. Hunt, 13 Ohio 260, 42 Am. Dec. 201; Lenahan v. Akana, 6 Hawaiian 538.

And it has been held that a certificate, although it contains the name of the grantor, is fatally defective if it does not appear that certificate or a mistake in the name ¹ will not invalidate the acknowledgment if it appears with reasonable certainty, from the certificate and deed together, that the grantor in fact acknowledged the instrument. It is essential that such grantor acknowledged the execution of the instrument. Thus an acknowledgment in the following form is invalid: "Personally appeared before me A. B., to me known, etc., and acknowledged that — executed the said deed." Buell v. Irwin, 24 Mich. 145; Huff v. Webb, 64 Tex. 284.

1. Variances in Name Held Not Fatal.—Where the certificate of acknowledgment described the person named therein as the grantor of the deed, the following discrepancies in name were held immaterial: "J. H. Hennepin" for "J. H. Huntington"; Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Brackett, 37 Minn. 58. "Charles F. Rogers" for "Charles Y. Rogers"; Rogers v. Manley, 46 Minn. 403. "Wm. Strieber" for "Wm. Schrieber"; Rodes v. St. Anthony, etc., Elevator Co., 49 Minn. 370. "Richard M. Hopkins" for "R. M. Hopkins"; Copelin v. Shuler (Tex., 1887), 6 S. W. Rep. 668. "Adam B. Sharp" for "A. B. Sharp"; Briggs v. McBride, 17 New Bruns. 663. "Michael Thompson" for "M. Thompson"; Paxton v. Boss (Iowa, 1894), 57 N. W. Rep. 428.

In the body of a deed one of the grantors was described as Richard G. Bailey, and it was signed and sealed by R. G. Bailey. The certificate of acknowledgment recited that Richard G., who executed the instrument, acknowledged, etc. It was held that this rendered it sufficiently certain that the deed was acknowledged by Richard G. Bailey, the grantor. Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 388.

Where the grantor was named in the deed and certificate of acknowledgment as "Robert P. McClintock," but the deed was signed "R. Parker McClintock," it was held that it sufficiently appeared that the two names belonged to the same person. Grand Tower Min., etc., Co. v. Gill, 111 Ill. 541.

A clerical error in the certificate by which it appears that a deed made by Jasper M. Williamson and signed by J. M. Williamson, was acknowledged by James M. Williamson, is not sufficient to warrant the rejection of the deed as evidence, the identity of the grantor being otherwise proved. Cheek v. Herndon, 82 Tex. 146.

A certificate of probate in which the name of one of the grantors was given as William King instead of William Hinton, King being the name of an attesting witness, was held valid. Mitchell v. Bridgers, 113 N. Car. 63.

Where the certificate of a wife's acknowledgment of a homestead mortgage recites that "the within-named S. E. S., known to me to be the wife of the said A. J. S., who being by me examined * * * touching her signature to the within mortgage, acknowledged that she signed the same," the mortgage being signed S. E. S., the wife cannot take advantage of the fact that her true name was L. E. S. Shelton v. Aultman, etc., Co., 82 Ala. 315.

Where the certificate of acknowledgment of a deed of trust to L. Triplett, Jr., began with the words "L. Triplett, Jr., Notary Public," but was signed "L. Triplett, N. P.," it was held that it did not necessarily follow that the trustee and the person taking and certifying the acknowledgment were one and the same person. Corey v. Moore, 86 Va. 721.

Fatal Variance in Name.—The certificate of acknowledgment of a deed executed by McKewin reciting that it was acknowledged by McKinnie, was held fatally defective. Jones v. Parks, 22 Ala. 446, following Dubose v. Young, 10 Ala. 365.

Where the certificate of acknowledgment of a deed signed by F. W. Chandler stated that the acknowledgment was made by T. W. Chandler, it was held that the acknowledgment was void, and that a correction made by the clerk in recording the certificate was a nullity. Carleton v. Lombardi, 81 Tex. 355.

A certificate that F. M. McKezie acknowledged that he signed an instrument purporting on its face to have been signed by F. M. McKinzie, was held insufficient in law to authorize the registration of the instrument. McKinzie v. Stafford (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 27 S. W. Rep. 790.

An unexplained certificate that James Butler acknowledged the execution of a deed signed by and purporting to be the act of Jonas Butler is insufficient to entitle the deed to be recorded. Stephens v. Motl, 81 Tex. 115.

An acknowledgment purporting to have been made by — Murray, without any other designation of the person making the acknowledgment, is insufficient to convey the title of Jacob Murray. Hiss v. McCabe, 45 Md. 77.

A certificate that Geo. H. Crane, known to the notary to be the signer and sealer of the annexed deed, acknowledged the same, is not sufficient proof of execution where the deed is signed Geo. H. Case. Heil v. Redden, 38 Kan. 255.

The record of a deed purporting to be by Hiram S., signed by Harmon S. and acknowledged by Hiram S., is inadmissible in evidence without proof of the identity of the grantor. Boothroyd v. Engles, 23 Mich. 19.

But it would be otherwise on proof that the two names belonged to the same person. Middleton v. Findla, 25 Cal. 76. See also Hommel v. Devinney, 39 Mich. 522.

Name of Grantee for That of Grantor.—Where the name of the grantee was inserted in a certificate of acknowledgment instead of that of the grantor, there being nothing apparent on the face of the certificate or in the deed to determine whether an error was committed in writing the name of the man who made the acknowledgment, or in taking the acknowledgment of the wrong man by mistake, it was held that the acknowledgment was fatally defective. Wood v. Cochrane, 39 Vt. 544. See also Maxwell v. Higgins, 38 Neb. 671.

the identity of the party making the acknowledgment should appear from the certificate. The officer must state that such party was known or proved to him to be the party who executed the instrument.¹

Wisconsin.—Smith v. Garden, 28 Wis. 685; Hiles v. LaFlesh, 59 Wis. 465.

See also Ogden v. Walters, 12 Kan. 282.

Under the Illinois Act of 1833 a certificate failing to state that the party making the acknowledgment is personally known to the officer as the one whose name is subscribed to the deed is fatally defective, and such defect as to deeds executed by one in a fiduciary character is not cured by lapse of time. Fell v. Young, 63 Ill. 106.

Where a commissioner's certificate of the acknowledgment of a deed by a corporation set forth the personal appearance of "E. N., the president, * * * and H. L. J., the secretary of said company, who are personally known to me to be such," etc., it was held that it sufficiently appeared from the certificate that the commissioner was acquainted with the officers, both as individuals and in their official capacity. Kelly v. Calhoun, 95 U. S. 710.

A certificate, "personally appeared J. T. B., tax collector, etc., to me well known, and acknowledged, etc.," instead of reciting that the grantor was known to be the person who executed the deed, was held to be in compliance with the statute, the deed being signed "J. T. B., tax collector of C. county." Schleicher v. Gatlin, 85 Tex. 270.

Under the Wisconsin statute requiring the officer to certify that the grantor was personally known to him, and providing that a substantial compliance with this requirement shall be sufficient, it was held that a certificate of acknowledgment of a deed by a county clerk, taken by the notary public who was also an attesting witness to the deed, was not rendered invalid by the failure of the notary to recite that the grantor was known to him. Hiles v. LaFlesh, 59 Wis. 465, distinguishing Smith v. Garden, 28 Wis. 685.

Certificate of Probate must State that Witness was Acquainted with Grantor—New York.—A certificate of probate of a deed in which the officer recites that a certain person known to him to be a witness to the deed testified "that he saw the within grantor sign the same for the purposes therein expressed," without stating that the witness knew the

The use of the word "personally" is not essential where the officer recites that the grantor was known to him,¹ and it has been held that a certificate reciting that the grantor personally appeared before the officer includes also a statement that he was personally known to him.²

grantor, is insufficient. Jackson v. Osborn, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 555, 20 Am. Dec. 649; Jackson v. Gould, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 366. See also Dias v. Glover, Hoffm. Ch. (N. Y.) 74.

Exceptions to the General Rule Requiring Recital of Personal Acquaintance—Acknowledgments by Sheriff.—It is held in Missouri that the rule requiring a certificate of acknowledgment to state that the grantor is personally known to the officer does not extend to the case of the acknowledgment of deeds by a sheriff before the court of which he is an officer. Laughlin v. Stone, 5 Mo. 43. See also Baker v. Underwood, 63 Mo. 384; and as to law in Kansas, Ogden v. Walters, 12 Kan. 282.

By United States Marshal—Missouri.—Where land was sold by a United States marshal, and the deed properly acknowledged by him before the district court of which he was an officer, and to which he was required to make return on execution, it was held that it was not necessary for the clerk of the court to certify that the marshal was personally known to him, as the court must be presumed to know its own officer. Baker v. Underwood, 63 Mo. 384.

Of Articles of Incorporation—Colorado.—The provisions of the Colorado statute requiring the officer before whom deeds are acknowledged to certify that the persons making the acknowledgment are personally known to him, do not apply to the acknowledgment of articles of incorporation. People v. Cheeseman, 7 Colo. 376.

By Married Women—Tennessee.—Under the Tennessee Act of 1833, it was held that a statement that the grantor was personally known to the officer was not essential to the validity of the certificate of acknowledgment of a married woman's deed. Mount v. Kesterton, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 452.

Under § 2076 of the Tennessee Code giving the form of certificate to be used in certifying acknowledgments of married women, but containing no provision that the officer shall certify his personal acquaintance with the wife, it was held that it is sufficient if the officer state that he is acquainted with the husband, where husband and wife unite in executing a deed. Bell v. Lyle, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 44.

In Absence of Statute.—The certificate of an acknowledgment made prior to the Missouri Act of 1825 requiring the officer taking the acknowledgment to certify that the grantor was personally known to him, is good, although it does not state the fact of personal knowledge. Holton v. Kemp, 81 Mo. 661.

Nor was such recital necessary in Texas prior to the Revised Statutes. Sloan v. Thompson, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 419; Hill v. Smith, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 312. See also Watkins v. Hall, 57 Tex. 4.

Illinois Act of 1819, see Ayres v. Doe, 3 Ill. 307.

As to law in Michigan, see Elwood v. Flannigan, 104 U. S. 562.

Under the law in force in Texas in 1874 the officer taking acknowledgments was not required to certify that the grantor was known to him, but only, in case he was not known, to attach to the certificate certain proofs of his identity. It was held, under this law, that in case of a certificate without such proofs attached, it would be presumed that the grantor was known to the officer, and the acknowledgment was sustained. Driscoll v. Morris, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 607; Sowers v. Peterson, 59 Tex. 216. See also Watkins v. Hall, 57 Tex. 4.

A deed executed in 1784 was admitted in evidence in New York in 1844 on the officer's certificate of acknowledgment, although it failed to show that the grantor was known to the officer, such recital not being required under the laws in force when the deed was made. Northrop v. Wright, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 476.

See also, for similar decisions under early laws of New York, Averill v. Wilson, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 180; Jackson v. Vickory, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 406, 19 Am. Dec. 522; Jackson v. Harrow, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 434; Bradstreet v. Clarke, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 602.

The Florida statute requiring that officers taking acknowledgments shall know or have satisfactory proof that the person making the acknowledgment is the individual described in, and who executed, the instrument, applies only to cases where the instruments covered by it have been executed or acknowledged out of the state. McCoy v. Boley, 21 Fla. 803.

The omission of a statement of knowledge of the personal identity of the grantor by the officer cannot be taken advantage of by one not a subsequent purchaser. Chouteau v. Burlando, 20 Mo. 482.

1. Word "Personally" Not Essential.—A certificate that the grantor, "to me well known, personally appeared and acknowledged," etc., has been held good in New York. Jackson v. Gumaer, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 552; Troup v. Haight, Hopk. (N. Y.) 239; Duval v. Covenhoven, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 561.

In Wilson v. Quigley, 107 Mo. 98, the entire omission of words showing the officer's knowledge of the identity of the grantor was held not fatal. See infra, this title, Errors and Omissions—Omissions Not Fatal.

2. Personal Acquaintance Shown by Implication.—Harris v. Pratt, 37 Kan. 316; Warder v. Henry, 117 Mo. 530; Hughes v. Sloan (Mo., 1890), 14 S. W. Rep. 660. Compare Fryer v. Rockefeller, 63 N. Y. 268 (explaining Hunt v. Johnson, 19 N. Y. 279); Beitel v. Wagner (Tex. Civ. App., 1895), 32 S. W. Rep. 366. See also Dias v. Glover, Hoffm. Ch. (N. Y.) 71; Elwood v. Flannigan, 104 U. S. 562.

Under the Nebraska statute requiring the

In Illinois a certificate of acknowledgment by husband and wife stating that the husband was personally known to the officer to be the person who executed the deed, but failing to make the same statement concerning the wife, is fatally defective.¹

The fact of personal knowledge of the identity of the grantor must be stated with certainty, and a recital that the officer is "satisfied" that the person making the acknowledgment is the grantor, without other proof of his identity, is not sufficient.²

There is no regular rule as to what constitutes personal acquaintance. It has been held that a mere introduction, if satisfactory to the conscience of the officer, is sufficient.³

3. Errors and Omissions—a. GENERALLY.—Although no fact necessary to a valid acknowledgment can be presumed in favor of the certificate,⁴ it is the policy of the law to uphold such certificate, whenever possible, and for that purpose resort will be had if necessary to the instrument to which it is attached.⁵

officer taking the acknowledgment to "know, or have satisfactory evidence" of, the identity of the person making the acknowledgment, it was held that a certificate, "personally appeared before me D. D., mayor of Falls City," etc., was a sufficient statement of the identity of the grantor. Burbank v. Ellis, 7 Neb. 156.

1. Lindley v. Smith, 46 Ill. 523; Coburn v. Herrington, 114 Ill. 104; Heinrich v. Simpson, 66 Ill. 57; Hart v. Randolph, 142 Ill. 521.

2. Recital that Officer is "Satisfied" as to Identity of Grantor.—Kimball v. Semple, 25 Cal. 441; Shepherd v. Carriel, 19 Ill. 313.

Where the acknowledgment of a deed to land in Michigan, taken in New Jersey, was objected to on the ground that the officer in certifying the personal identity of the parties, used the language, "who, I am satisfied, are the grantors in the within deed," it was held that all question as to the defect, if material, was set at rest by the certificate of the clerk that the acknowledgment was taken according to the laws of New Jersey. Culbertson v. H. Witbeck Co., 127 U. S. 326.

Officer must Certify Identity from Personal Knowledge.—A certificate, "Personally appeared before me J. Q., whose name appears to the foregoing conveyance, and who, by good authority to me given, is the identical person therein named, and acknowledged," etc., is void for not showing that J. Q. was personally known to the officer. Becker v. Quigg, 54 Ill. 390.

3. What Amounts to Personal Acquaintance.—The right of an officer to take an acknowledgment does not depend on the length of his acquaintance with the person, nor upon the manner in which his knowledge is acquired. An introduction by a common friend is sufficient to satisfy the statutory requirement, if such introduction will satisfy the conscience of the officer as to the identity of the party. Wood v. Bach, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 134 (repudiating the doctrine of Watson v. Campbell, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 421, and Jones v. Bach, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 568); Nippel v. Hammond, 4 Colo. 211. See also State v. Meyer, 2 Mo. App. 413; and infra, this tit'c, Liability of Officer for False Certificate.

Where a set form is prescribed by statute for certificates of married women's acknowledgments, all implication as to every material fact made necessary by the law is entirely excluded. *Henderson v. b. CLERICAL ERRORS, TECHNICAL OMISSIONS.—Whenever substance is found, obvious clerical errors¹ and technical omissions or defects² will be disknowngments may be found in 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYCLOPEDIA OF LAW, p. 143. It is there stated that a 'certificate must be construed with reference to the instrument it is attached to, and the instrument is allowed to help out the construction of the certificate, and, if the certificate is inconsistent with the instrument, and ambiguous, the court will look to the instrument, or any part of it, together with the certificate, in order to arrive at the true meaning of the officer.' In a note to the statement above quoted authorities are cited from some fourteen states, and from the Supreme Court of the United States. It is not necessary to more than refer to these cases. They are in harmony with the decisions of this court. Again, it is said in the article above cited that 'the name of the grantor should appear, although it is now generally held that, if the name can be ascertained from the deed, the certificate will be sustained.' A large number of authorities are cited in support of this last proposition."

1. Obvious Clerical Errors will Not Invalidate Certificate.—Carpenter v. Dexter, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 513; Summer v. Mitchell, 29 Fla. 179; Skinner v. Fulton, 39 Ill. 484; *Lyne v. "Foregoing mortgage" for "foregoing deed." Ives v. Kimball, 1 Mich. 308.

"The signed" for "he signed." Durst v. Daugherty, 81 Tex. 650.

"Subscribed" for "acknowledged." Cuykendall v. Douglas, 19 Hun (N. Y.) 577.

"With" for "without," in "without fear or compulsion," where the use of the wrong word was clearly a clerical error. King v. Merritt, 67 Mich. 194; Durst v. Daugherty, 81 Tex. 650.

"Husband" for "deed" in "contents and meaning of said deed." Calumet, etc., Canal, etc., Co. v. Russell, 68 Ill. 426.

"Restrain" for "constrain." Edmondson v. Harris, 2 Tenn. Ch. 427.

"Contract" for "retract." Belcher v. Weaver, 46 Tex. 293, 26 Am. Rep. 267.

"I" for "before me" in "before me — personally appeared." Belbaze v. Ratto, 69 Tex. 636.

"Is" for "are" and "name" for "names" in the certificate of acknowledgment by several grantors. Cairo, etc., R. Co. v. Parrott, 92 Ill. 194.

"Judge" for "Court."—It is no objection to the certificate of acknowledgment of a sheriff's deed, that the clerk states that the personal appearance of a sheriff was made before the judge of the court, where the certificate is not signed by the judge, but is signed by the clerk, and authenticated by the seal of the court, it being plain that the clerk used the term "judge" as synonymous with "court." McClure v. McClurg, 53 Mo. 173. See Huxley v. Harrold, 62 Mo. 516.

Name of Cestui que Trust for Trustee.—It was held in Alabama that where the grantor of a deed of trust acknowledged the delivery of a cestui que trust instead of the trustee, the deed was properly admitted to record on such acknowledgment. Stewart v. Fowler, 3 Ala. 229.

Whether Deed Relinquishing Dower Conveys Fee.—Where the certificate of acknowledgment of a conveyance of a married woman's arroperty recited that she acknowledged that she executed the deed for the purpose of relinquishing her right of dower in the lands, she having no such right, it was held that the acknowledgment was sufficient to sustain the deed as conveyance of her estate in fee. Hartley v. Ferrell, 9 Fla. 374; Evans v. Summerlin, 19 Fla. 858. See also Surplusage, infra.

Where the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment of a conveyance of her separate estate simply stated that she relinquished her right of dower in the land, the conveyance was held void. Sutton v. Pollard (Ky., 1891), 16 S. W. Rep. 126; Breeding v. Tobin (Ky., 1892), 18 S. W. Rep. 773.

Several Grantors—Singular Pronoun.—A certificate reciting that several grantors of both sexes appeared and acknowledged that "he" acknowledged the execution of a deed is insufficient to admit the deed to record. Threadgill v. Bickerstaff (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 26 S. W. Rep. 739.

2. Omissions Not Fatal.—"Are" in "who are personally known." Hartshorn v. Dawson, 79 Ill. 108.

"On the day and year mentioned" following a statement of delivery. Caruthers v. McLaran, 56 Miss. 371. See also Morse v. Clayton, 13 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 373.

Omission to state the residence of witnesses under a statute requiring the officer certifying the probate of a deed by witnesses to set forth the names and residences of the witnesses. Irving v. Campbell (Super. Ct.), 4 N. Y. Supp. 103.

A certificate, "personally appeared T. B. M. and H. A. M., his wife, the grantors in the above deed and conveyance, of full age, to me well known, who acknowledged that he had voluntarily executed and delivered the same; * * * and I do further certify that this day voluntarily appeared before me —, to me well known as the person whose name appears upon the within and foregoing deed, and in the absence of —, said husband, declared that — had of her own free will executed the foregoing deed," etc., signed and sealed by the notary, was held sufficient to show due acknowledgment by the wife. Donahue v. Mills, 41 Ark. 421.

Where the certificate of acknowledgment indorsed on the back of a sheriff's deed recited that the sheriff appeared in open court, and acknowledged the execution and delivery of "a deed," without specifically referring to the deed acknowledged, it was held that the certificate was not rendered invalid by such want of a direct reference to the deed on which it was indorsed. Samuels v. Shelton, 48 Mo. 444.

Statement of Acquaintance with Grantor. — Where the record of the notary's certificate of acknowledgment was correct in every respect, except that there was nothing to show that the grantor was known by the notary, it was held that the defect was not such as rendered the title to the land unmarketable, and was cured by the subsequent testimony of the notary that he knew the grantor personally, that he saw him execute the deed, and knew him to be the person described therein, and that he properly executed and acknowledged the same. Hutton v. Webber (Super. Ct.), 17 N. Y. Supp. 463.

Relinquishment of Homestead.—Where a mortgage executed by husband and wife and duly acknowledged by the wife recited that they relinquished all rights of dower and homestead in the land therein described, it was held that the instrument had the effect of divesting the wife effectually of both homestead and dower right, although the certificate of her acknowledgment stated that she relinquished her dower right merely. Razor v. Dowan (Ky., 1890), 13 S. W. Rep. 914.

Fatal Omissions.—"Known" after "personally." Tully v. Davis, 30 Ill. 103, 83 Am. Dec. 179.

"Known" in "personally appeared C.A.D., known to be the individual," etc. Wolf v. Fogarty, 6 Cal. 224, 65 Am. Dec. 509; McKie v. Anderson, 78 Tex. 207.

Omission of "personally known" renders the certificate partially defective. Gould v. Woodward, 4 Greene (Iowa) 82.

"Acknowledged" where no equivalent word was used. Bryan v. Ramirez, 8 Cal. 461, 68 Am. Dec. 340; Stanton v. Button, 2 Conn. 527; Pendleton v. Button, 3 Conn. 406; *Cabell v. "Private" in "private examination separate and apart from her husband," although the other words were used. Sibley v. Johnson, 1 Mich. 380.

"Explained" in "the said instrument having been fully explained to her." Moores v. Linney, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 293.

"Signed" in "signed, sealed, and delivered." Smith v. Elliott, 39 Tex. 201.

"Sealed and delivered" in "signed, sealed, and delivered." Toulmin v. Heidelberg, 32 Miss. 268; Robinson v. Noel, 49 Miss. 253. Compare Barton v. Morris, 15 Ohio 408.

"The within named" and "with whom I am personally acquainted." Fall v. Roper, 3 Head (Tenn.) 485.

"Ill-usage" in the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment, although she acknowledged the instrument "of her own free will, and not through any threats of her said husband or fear of his displeasure." Hawkins v. Burress, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 513.

"Fear" in the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment where no equivalent words were used. The defect was cured by statute. Hollingsworth v. McDonald, 2 Har. & J. (Md.) 230, 3 Am. Dec. 545.

"He" in "acknowledged that he signed."

Buell v. Irwin, 24 Mich. 152; Huff v. Webb, 64 Tex. 284; Stanton v. Button, 2 Conn. 527; Bryan v. Ramirez, 8 Cal. 461, 68 Am. Dec. 340.

"Purposes" in "consideration and purposes." Ford v. Burks, 37 Ark. 91.

A certificate failing to show that the grantor acknowledged the deed for the consideration and purposes therein expressed, is void. Conner v. Abbott, 35 Ark. 365; Wright v. Graham, 42 Ark. 140. Compare, as to law in Texas, Stephens v. Motl, 81 Tex. 115.

But while such an omission is fatal to the acknowledgment, if the execution of the deed is otherwise proven at the trial it is admissible in evidence notwithstanding the defective acknowledgment. Griesler v. McKennon, 44 Ark. 517.

"For the purposes therein set forth." Jacoway v. Gault, 20 Ark. 190, 73 Am. Dec. 494; Little v. Dodge, 32 Ark. 453; Shryock v. Cannon, 39 Ark. 434; Currie v. Kerr, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 138.

"Without compulsion or constraint from her husband." Menees v. Johnson, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 561.

"Voluntarily" in certificate of wife's acknowledgment, although similar words were used. Laird v. Scott, 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 314. Compare Hunt v. Harris, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 243.

"Voluntary" in "his voluntary act and deed" where the statute requires that word to be used. Wickersham v. Reeves, 1 Iowa 413; Newman v. Samuels, 17 Iowa 528; Spitznagle v. Vanhessch, 13 Neb. 338.

"Having been examined" in a certificate reciting "came the feme covert and privately and apart from her husband, and acknowledged." Ellett v. Richardson, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 293.

"Without the hearing of" where the certificate recited that the wife was examined "separate and apart from" her husband. Butterfield v. Beall, 3 Ind. 203.

A certificate, "and the said — wife of said — having been by me examined, * * * and that she do— not wish to retract the same. Given under my hand and — seal, etc.," the names of the grantors appearing in the beginning of the certificate, is fatally defective, and cannot afterwards be amended by the officer. Merritt v. Yates, 71 Ill. 636, 22 Am. Rep. 128. Compare Donahue v. Mills, 41 Ark. 421.

Relinquishment of Dower.—It has been held that the omission of a statement, in the certificate of acknowledgment of a deed by husband and wife, that the wife relinquished her right of dower, rendered the conveyance inoperative to pass dower. Owen v. Robbins, 19 Ill. 545; Russell v. Rumsey, 35 Ill. 362; Thomas v. Meier, 18 Mo. 573; Thomas v. Hesse, 34 Mo. 13, 84 Am. Dec. 66. See also the title DOWER.

Relinquishment of Homestead.—The omission of an express relinquishment of homestead in a conveyance by husband and wife renders the conveyance invalid as affecting the homestead under the Illinois Act of 1857. *Vanzant v. Reference to Personality in Conveyance of Both Real and Personal Estate.—Where the certificate of a wife's acknowledgment of a mortgage, conveying both real and personal property, executed by husband and wife, stated merely that she had relinquished her right of dower in the land, it was held that the record of such mortgage as to the personality was insufficient to constitute a lien against a purchaser of this property. Carle v. Wall, (Ark., 1891), 16 S. W. Rep. 293.

"Willingly" to "freely, voluntarily, without compulsion, constraint, or coercion by her husband." Henderson v. Rice, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 223.

An acknowledgment by a married woman, on private examination, that she signed, sealed, and delivered the instrument "on her own free will and accord without any force, persuasion, or threats from her said husband," does not sufficiently comply with the provisions of a statute requiring an acknowledgment of the deed as "her voluntary act and deed freely, without any force, threats, or compulsion of her said husband." Boykin v. Rain, 28 Ala. 332, 65 Am. Dec. 349; Alabama L. Ins., etc., Co. v. Boykin, 38 Ala. 510.

"She acknowledges that she had willingly executed the same" to "she acknowledged the same to be her act, and declared that she had willingly executed the same." Blair v. Sayre, 29 W. Va. 604; Laidley v. Central Land Co., 30 W. Va. 505; Hockman v. McClanahan, 87 Va. 33.

"Acknowledged the same freely and willingly" to "acknowledged such instrument to be her act and deed, and declared that she had willingly signed the same." Hayden v. Moffat, 74 Tex. 647.

Under the Alabama act relating to the acknowledgment of conveyances of the homestead, prescribing that the certificate should recite that the wife "signed the same of her own free will and accord, and without fear, constraint, or threats on the part of her husband," it was held that a certificate in which the word "persuasion" was used, instead of "threats," although in the exact language of a prior statute, was fatally defective. Motes v. Carter, 73 Ala. 553; Strauss v. Harrison, 79 Ala. 324; Daniels v. Lowery, 92 Ala. 519.

4. Amendment—a. BY THE OFFICER.—The decisions of the courts as to whether an officer has a right to correct mistakes in certificates of acknowledgment after the deed has been recorded, have been conflicting. The weight of authority is in favor of the view that after an officer has made the certificate and the deed has been recorded, he has no power to amend or change it so as to correct a mistake or supply an omission therein.³ Some

Where the certificate of probate by a witness was in the form of an affidavit, it was held that the signature of the witness, and the jurat of the officer added thereto, might be rejected as surplusage. Whitney v. Arnold, 10 Cal. 531.

A statement that the wife does not wish to retract, when unnecessary, will not vitiate the certificate, but may be rejected. Stuart v. Dutton, 39 Ill. 91.

Where the certificate stated that the deed was proved or acknowledged according to law, there being nothing to which the words "proved or" could be referred, it was held that they might be rejected as surplusage. Nelson v. Graff, 44 Mich. 433.

Under a statute requiring the clerk to indorse upon a deed a certificate of acknowledgment, and to make an entry thereof, and in the entry to state the names of the parties, and a description of the property, it was held in Missouri, where the clerk unnecessarily added to the indorsement a copy of the entry in which the description was false, that this would not vitiate the acknowledgment. Crowley v. Wallace, 12 Mo. 143.

Relinquishment of Dower in Conveyance of Wife's Estate.—A certificate reciting that a married woman acknowledged that she executed a deed conveying her own estate, "and relinquished her dower" therein, is not invalidated by the clause relating to dower, it being rejected as surplusage.

Officer Has no Power to Correct the Certificate after It has been Recorded.—In Elliott v. Pier-sol, 1 Pet. (U. S.), 328, it was held that the clerk had no authority to alter the record of his certificate of acknowledgment of a deed at any time after the record was made. In delivering the opinion of the court, Trimble, J., said: "We are of opinion he acted ministerially and not judicially in the matter. Until his certificate of acknowledgment of Elliott and wife was recorded, it was in its nature but an act in pais and alterable at the pleasure of the officer. But the authority of the clerk to make and record a certificate of the acknowledgment of the deed was functus officio as soon as the record was made."

No Power of Correction after the Officer's Term has Expired.—A new certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment, made by an officer four years after the original certificate and after the expiration of the term of office held by him when he made the original certificate, although he has been re-elected and holds the same office at the time of making the second certificate, is invalid. Griffith v. Ventress, 91 Ala. 366, 24 Am. St. Rep. 918. In this case, Coleman, J., after citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.), p. 150, proceeded: "Upon investigation we find the great weight of authority and reason in support of the propositions that the power conferred on certain officers to take acknowledgments to deeds of conveyance is statutory, and courts of law or equity have no jurisdiction to amend or correct defective executions of the power; that the acknowledgment and certificate are essential parts of the conveyance; that the officer before whom the acknowledgment courts, however, have held the contrary.¹ Where corrections are allowed, they must be made during the officer's term of office;² but in Tennessee, under is made, and who is required to make the certificate, acts judicially when certifying to the acknowledgment made before him; and when delivered to the parties and accepted for record, or as the complete execution of the instrument, he has no power to alter, add to, or make a new certificate, without a re-acknowledgment." See also Gilbraith v. Gallivan, 78 Mo. 452.

A Notary having Made and Delivered a defective certificate cannot amend it by a second certificate made in the absence of the grantors. Enterprise Transit Co. v. Sheedy, 103 Pa. St. 492, 49 Am. Rep. 130.

Recording Officer Has no Power to Correct Certificate.—A recording officer, in making the record of a certificate of acknowledgment, has no authority to correct it when defective. Newman v. Samuels, 17 Iowa 528.

Tennessee—Power to Correct Certificates may be Conferred by Statute.—Under section 2896 of the Tennessee Code of 1884, providing that the clerk may correct any mistake or omission in a certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment upon application of either party interested, on making oath in open court of the truth of such correction, it was held that this provision applies also to notaries public, and that the correction might be made upon the notary's oath in the court of another state. Brinkley v. Tomeny, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 275. But this act is not retrospective in its operation. Fall v. Roper, 3 Head (Tenn.) 485. See also Harrison v. Wade, 3 Coldw. (Tenn.) 505; Stroud v. McDaniel, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 617. The grantor cannot be called as a witness to disprove the truth of the amended certificate. Vaughn v. Carlisle, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 525. The oath, or note thereof, need not be entered on the minutes of the court. Grotenkemper v. Carver, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 375.

If a married woman's separate examination was properly taken, a mistake in the officer's certificate may be corrected, but not so if the examination was not properly taken. The officer who took the acknowledgment is competent to testify that there was no proper separate examination. Garth v. Fort, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 683.

1. Correction after Record.—In Jordan v. Corey, 2 Ind. 385, 52 Am. Dec. 516, it is held that officers have a right, and it is their duty, to correct at any time mistakes in their certificates, and that the officer who made a certificate should be permitted to correct a mistake therein in court nunc pro tunc. This was subsequently approved by the Indiana courts in Stott v. Harrison, 73 Ind. 17; Westhafer v. Patterson, 120 Ind. 459, 16 Am. St. Rep. 330. But it has been disapproved and said to be wholly unsupported by authority in other courts. Griffith v. Ventress, 91 Ala. 366, 24 Am. St. Rep. 918; Bours v. Zachariah, 11 Cal. 281, 70 Am. Dec. 779.

A dictum favoring power of an officer to correct his certificate at any time is to be found in Wannall v. Kem, 51 Mo. 150, 57 Mo. 478. And this dictum has been cited with apparent approval. Attleboro First Nat. Bank v. Hughes, 10 Mo. App. 7; Miller v. Powell, 53 Mo. 252; Cox v. Holcomb, 87 Ala. 589, 53 Am. St. Rep. 79; but it was subsequently examined and disapproved by the supreme court of Missouri in Gilbraith v. Gallivan, 78 Mo. 456, and by the Supreme Court of Alabama in Griffith v. Ventress, 91 Ala. 366, 24 Am. St. Rep. 918.

A deed properly executed and acknowledged, save that the officer in taking the acknowledgment failed at the time to sign the certificate appended thereto, was admitted to record. Ten months afterwards, the officer, discovering his omission, informed the grantor of the fact, and upon her admission that she had appeared before him and acknowledged it, appended an additional certificate to that effect, no rights of third parties having intervened, and this was held allowable. Harmon v. Magee, 57 Miss. 415.

In Stott v. Harrison, 73 Ind. 17, it was held, on the authority of Jordan v. Corey, 2 Ind. 385, 52 Am. Dec. 516, that if the notary had failed, as was claimed, to affix his seal to the certificate of acknowledgment taken by him, he had power to affix it subsequently.

A Notary while He Remains in Office may amend his certificate provided the amendment is in accordance with the facts. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Lewis, 53 Iowa 101.

Corrections Not Contradicting the Certificate.—Where a clerk in writing out a certificate of an acknowledgment taken by a deputy failed to set forth the facts, and to include the indorsement made on the deed by the deputy, all of which appeared from the instrument itself, and which it was his duty to include in the certificate when he recorded the instrument, it was held that the mistake might be corrected, as the clerk was not thereby contradicting his own certificate by showing that he did something more than appeared from the record. Ralston v. Moore, 83 Ky. 71. See also Franklin v. Becker, 11 Bush (Ky.) 595; McCormack v. Woods, 14 Bush (Ky.) 78; Waters v. Davis (Ky., 1887), 2 S. W. Rep. 695.

Before the Instrument has been Recorded amendments of the certificate have been allowed. Attleboro First Nat. Bank v. Hughes, 10 Mo. App. 7; Hanson v. Cochran, 9 Houst. (Del.) 184.

2. Fitzgerald v. Milliken, 83 Ky. 70; Gilbraith v. Gallivan, 78 Mo. 452. See also Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Lewis, 53 Iowa 101; McKellar v. Peck, 39 Tex. 381.

An officer cannot fill up blanks in a defective certificate of acknowledgment after he has gone out of office, to have effect by relation as if done at the time the acknowledgment was made. Carlisle v. Carlisle, 78 Ala. 542.

Where the certificate of acknowledgment is defective, a proper acknowledgment cannot be shown by the examination of the officer after his term of office has expired. Elwood v. Klock, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 50.

a statute authorizing the officer to correct the defective certificate on making oath in open court of the truth of the correction, it was held that such correction might be made after the expiration of his term.¹

6. BY THE COURT.—Courts of equity, as such, have no power to correct mistakes in the certificate of acknowledgment,² for the reason that the certifying officer derives his authority from statute, and courts of equity do not aid the defective execution of statutory powers.³ But it is provided by statute in several states that where an acknowledgment is properly taken but defectively certified, the certificate may be amended by the court upon the application of any party interested.⁴

1. Grotenkemper v. Carver, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 375.

It was held, under § 2082 of the Tennessee Code, that a clerk had power to correct mistakes or omissions in the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment after he had gone out of office, and that, in a suit of ejectment, the deed, with the certificate as amended, might be read in evidence; also that the woman was an incompetent witness to contradict the recitals of the amended certificate. Vaughn v. Carlisle, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 525.

Effect of Decree Settling Title to Land.—Where an acknowledgment of a deed to land was defective for want of proof that it was taken before an authorized officer, and a petition was filed praying for a decree settling the title to the land, it was held that such decree was binding only against parties to the action and their privies, and would not affect the rights of strangers. Connell v. Galligher, 36 Neb. 749, 39 Neb. 793.

3. Wannall v. Kem, 51 Mo. 150. See Gebb v. Rose, 40 Md. 387; also the title ACCIDENT (IN EQUITY), Vol. I., p. 281.

4. See the various local statutes.

California.—Although an officer cannot amend his certificate after taking the acknowledgment and delivering the return, under the California Civil Code, § 1202, where the acknowledgment was properly made but defectively certified, any party interested may bring an action in the district court to obtain a judgment correcting the certificate. Wedel v. Herman, 59 Cal. 507; Hutchinson v. Ainsworth, 63 Cal. 286. See also Danglarde v. Elias, 80 Cal. 65.

But a defective certificate made prior to the enactment of the code could not be reformed in equity. Judson v. Porter, 53 Cal. 482; Selover v. American Russian Commercial Co., 7 Cal. 266.

Ohio.—Under the Act of 1857 (Rev. Stat.

1894, §§ 4144-4149), a certificate in which the officer by mistake omits to certify the separate examination of a married woman may be corrected by the court. Kilbourn v. Fury, 26 Ohio St. 153.

Where a married woman by mistake acknowledged her deed before an officer not authorized to act, and he omitted to show in his certificate a substantial compliance with all the material matters required by statute, it was held that the certificate might be corrected under this act. Dengenhart v. Cracraft, 36 Ohio St. 549. See also Goshorn v. Purcell, 11 Ohio St. 641; Koltlenbrock v. Cracraft, 36 Ohio St. 584.

Pennsylvania.—The Act of 1878, providing that certificates of acknowledgment defective in form, where the acknowledgment was in fact in due form of law, might be reformed according to the facts, applies to all such cases except those in which actions to recover the property had been commenced before the time of the passage of the act. Manufacturers' Natural Gas Co. v. Douglass, 130 Pa. St. 283.

But the act furnishes no remedy unless the acknowledgment is made in due form of law. Spencer v. Reese, 165 Pa. St. 158.

Where, however, a bill is brought to reform a defective certificate of acknowledgment, an allegation that such certificate is not true in fact in a part not affected by the proposed correction is not a sufficient defense against the correction. Cressona Sav. Fund, etc., Assoc. v. Sowers, 134 Pa. St. 354. See also Hand v. Weidner, 151 Pa. St. 362.

South Dakota.—It is provided by § 3289 of the Comp. Laws of Dakota, that when the acknowledgment is properly made, but defectively certified, any party interested may bring an action in the district court to obtain a judgment correcting the certificate. Cannon v. Deming, 3 S. Dak. 421.

Texas.—Art. 4353, Sayles Civil Statutes, providing that any person interested may bring an action in the district court to obtain judgment correcting the certificate of an acknowledgment properly made but defectively certified, applies to a deed and other instruments properly executed and acknowledged by married women, as well as like instruments by other persons, but does not attempt to validate conveyances where, in fact, the acknowledgment was not taken according to law, and the plaintiff cannot prevail in an action to reform the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment failing to show

5. Liability of Officer for False Certificate.—Where an officer, from malice or through gross negligence, makes a false certificate of acknowledgment, he and his sureties will be liable on his official bond for any damages resulting directly from his wrongful act and not arising from the negligence or procurement of the party injured.¹

6. Certificate as Evidence.—a. GENERALLY.—Evidence of Execution and Acknowledgment of Deed.—The certificate of the officer taking the acknowledgment is the usual legal evidence of the execution of the deed² and as a general rule the that the contents of the instrument were explained to her, when such explanation was not in fact made. Johnson v. Taylor, 60 Tex. 360.

As to the time of bringing action, see Norton v. Davis, 83 Tex. 32; Stone v. Sledge (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 24 S. W. Rep. 697.

Notary Liable for False Certificate.—Where a notary public, in taking and certifying an acknowledgment, failed to show in the certificate that the grantor was personally known to him, or properly identified, it was held that he was guilty of gross and culpable negligence, and was liable on his official bond to the party injured. Fogarty v. Finlay, 10 Cal. 239, 70 Am. Dec. 714.

Where a notary certified that a certain person appeared before him and acknowledged the execution of a mortgage, who did not in fact appear, and whose name was not even signed to the instrument, it was held that he was guilty of malfeasance, and liable on his official bond. People v. Colby, 39 Mich. 456.

Dereliction must be Intentional.—A notary will not be held liable in damages for a false certificate of acknowledgment, unless the party claiming damages prove a clear and intentional dereliction of duty on the part of the notary. Com. v. Haines, 97 Pa. St. 228, 39 Am. Rep. 805. See Scotten v. Fegan, 62 Iowa 236; Browne v. Dolan, 68 Iowa 645; Henderson v. Smith, 26 W. Va. 829, 53 Am. Rep. 139.

Duty to Know Truth of Facts Certified.—But where a notary public falsely certified that he was personally acquainted with the grantor in a deed, whom he did not know, and of whose identity he took no pains to satisfy himself, and who was in fact an impostor, it was held, in an action for damages against the notary, that it was no defense for him to say that he was not aware that his certificate was false, or that he believed it to be true, it being his duty to know that it was true. State v. Meyer, 2 Mo. App. 413. See Overacre v. Blake, 82 Cal. 77; Hatton v. Holmes, 97 Cal. 208; Bartels v. People, 45 Ill. App. 306, 38 Ill. App. 428, 138 Ill. 322; Stevenson v. Brasher, 90 Ky. 23; Cameron v. Culkins, 44 Mich. 531.

Officer's Negligence must be Proximate Cause of Damage.—Where a notary public, on the representations of a stranger, drew up a deed for him in his alleged name and took his acknowledgment of the same, and he then represented himself to be the grantor named therein to a third party, who negligently loaned money on the deed, it was held in an action by the loaner against the notary that the latter was not liable, as the damages did not directly result from his negligence. Oakland Sav. Bank v. Murfey, 68 Cal. 456; Wyllis v. Haun, 47 Iowa 614. See also Overacre v. Blake, 82 Cal. 77; Hatton v. Holmes, 97 Cal. 208; People v. Butler, 74 Mich. 643; Henderson v. Smith, 26 W. Va. 829, 53 Am. Rep. 139.

The Measure of Damages for a notary's negligence in taking and certifying the acknowledgment of a mortgage is the amount of the debt and interest intended to be secured by the mortgage. Fogarty v. Finlay, 10 Cal. 239, 70 Am. Dec. 714.

A notary's liability in such a case does not depend upon whether the mortgagee has redeemed a prior mortgage and thus collected his claim or reduced the damages. People v. Colby, 39 Mich. 456.

No Liability unless Damage.—Where the crop covered by a mortgage was valueless, so that the debt would not have been secured thereby, it was held that the mortgagee, having suffered no injury, could not recover even nominal damages in an action against a notary for misconduct and neglect in certifying the acknowledgment of the mortgage. McAllister v. Clement (Cal., 1888), 16 Pac. Rep. 775.

Acknowledgment as Evidence of Delivery.—Kentucky.—The acknowledgment of a deed is a fact which may be proven to show delivery, but standing alone does not establish a presumption of delivery. Alexander v. Kermel, 81 Ky. 345; McConnell v. Brown, Litt. Sel.

sole evidence of its acknowledgment.¹

b. HOW FAR CONCLUSIVE—(1) Generally.—The statutes and decisions of the courts of the several states as to the conclusiveness of this evidence are not uniform.

(2) View that Certificate is Prima Facie Evidence Only.—In some states, especially in those in which the act of taking acknowledgments is regarded as judicial in its nature, it is held, in some cases, in accordance with express statutory provisions, that the officer's certificate is only prima facie proof of the facts therein recited which the officer is required to certify, as well as of its own genuineness and regularity, and that this prima facie evidence may be rebutted by competent proof of its falsity.²

Cas. (Ky.) 459; Ford v. Gregory, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 175.

Maryland.—Acknowledgment and recording are sufficient to warrant the presumption of legal delivery of the deed. Stewart v. Reddit, 3 Md. 67; Hutchins v. Dixon, 11 Md. 29. See also Crauford v. State, 6 Har. & J. (Md.) 231; and as to law in other states, Burton v. Boyd, 7 Kan. 17; Rigler v. Cloud, 14 Pa. St. 361; Roanes v. Archer, 4 Leigh (Va.) 550; Portz v. Schantz, 70 Wis. 497.

Presumption as to Time of Delivery—Illinois.—The presumption is that a deed was delivered on the day of its date, and the fact that the certificate of acknowledgment bears a later date is not sufficient to rebut such presumption. Deininger v. McConnell, 41 Ill. 228; Jayne v. Gregg, 42 Ill. 413; Hardin v. Crate, 78 Ill. 533; Roane v. Baker, 120 Ill. 308; Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Whitham, 155 Ill. 514.

See also Darst v. Bates, 51 Ill. 439; and as to law in Massachusetts, Smith v. Porter, 10 Gray (Mass.) 66.

Michigan.—In the absence of proof to the contrary, when the date of acknowledgment is subsequent to the date of the deed, it is presumed that the deed was delivered at the date of acknowledgment. Blanchard v. Tyler, 12 Mich. 339, 86 Am. Dec. 57; Johnson v. Moore, 28 Mich. 3.

But this presumption may be easily overcome by circumstances which are inconsistent with the supposed fact. Eaton v. Trowbridge, 38 Mich. 454.

Where Two Deeds Bearing Different Dates were both acknowledged by the grantor at the same time, in the absence of proof to the contrary it will be presumed that both were delivered at the time of their respective dates, and not at the time of their acknowledgment. Harman v. Oberdorfer, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 497; Renick v. Ludington, 20 W. Va. 512.

Where a Deed has been Executed and Acknowledged by Different Parties in different counties, the presumption that it was delivered on the day of its date cannot stand against the positive averment in the acknowledgment that it was executed afterwards. Henderson v. Baltimore, 8 Md. 352.

1. Certificate Evidence of Acknowledgment.—Greene v. Godfrey, 44 Me. 25.

Married Women's Deed.—The certificate of acknowledgment is the authentic and sole medium of proving that a feme covert has acknowledged the deed with all the solemnities required by statute. Cox v. Holcomb, 87 Ala. 589, 13 Am. St. Rep. 79; Kerr v. Russell, 69 Ill. 666, 18 Am. Rep. 634; Johnston v. Wallace, 53 Miss. 331, 24 Am. Rep. 699; *Elwood v. Sheriff's Deed.—The certificate of acknowledgment of a sheriff's deed indorsed upon the instrument is the original, authentic evidence of the act of the sheriff; and this certificate cannot be aided, if defective in any particular, by reference to the entry made by the clerk upon the records of the court. Lincoln v. Thompson, 75 Mo. 613; Samuels v. Shelton, 48 Mo. 444; Adams v. Buchanan, 49 Mo. 64. See also Allen v. King, 35 Mo. 216; McClure v. McClurg, 53 Mo. 173.

Nor will it be invalidated by the fact that the clerk's entry is defective. Scruggs v. Scruggs, 41 Mo. 242.

Record Controls Certificate.—A certificate of probate by the clerk of a court is made by statute evidence of the probate of the deed, but is not so high evidence as the record of the court; and where the two are in conflict, the record must control. Den v. Wilson, 2 Dev. (N. Car.) 306.

No Evidence of Omitted Facts.—In an action on a bill, brought under the Pennsylvania Act of 1878, to reform a certificate of acknowledgment, defective in failing to show the separate examination of the wife, it was held that the certificate was evidence only of the existence of facts therein stated, and that the allegations in the bill that the wife was separately examined derived no support from it. Hand v. Weidner, 151 Pa. St. 362.

It is held in California that the certificate is prima facie evidence of the fact that the deed was acknowledged as therein indicated; and if it fails to show any essential to a due and sufficient acknowledgment, it will be presumed that such necessary acts were not done. Danglarde v. Elias, 80 Cal. 65.

(3) View that Certificate is Conclusive in Absence of Fraud.—In other states more weight is attached to the certificate, and it is held that where the grantor has appeared before the officer and an acknowledgment of some kind has been taken, the certificate of the officer in due form is conclusive of the facts certified, which he is by law authorized to certify, but that the certificate may be impeached for duress or fraud in which the grantee or mortgagee participated, or of which he had notice before parting with his money.¹

Missouri—Acknowledgments of Married Women.—It is held in Missouri, with reference to the acknowledgments of married women, that the certificate, when in substantial conformity with the statute, is only prima facie evidence of the facts it recites, and that parol evidence is admissible to contradict its recitals. Wannell v. Kem, 57 Mo. 480; Sharpe v. McPike, 62 Mo. 300; Steffen v. Bauer, 70 Mo. 399; Clark v. Edwards, 75 Mo. 87; Belo v. Mays, 79 Mo. 71; Drew v. Arnold, 85 Mo. 128; *Mays v. This rule, which is opposed to the current of authority, seems to be founded upon the peculiar wording of the Missouri statute. Pierce v. Georger, 103 Mo. 540. See Webb v. Webb, 87 Mo. 540.

Release from Liability for Breach of Promise—California.—It was held in California that a notary's certificate of acknowledgment attached to a receipt and release from liability for breach of promise of marriage is only prima facie presumed to be true, and can be contradicted by any evidence, direct or indirect. Moore v. Hopkins, 83 Cal. 270, 17 Am. St. Rep. 248.

Kentucky.—Under the Kentucky Gen. Stat. 1894, § 3760, the officer's certificate of acknowledgment showing a compliance with the statutory requirements is conclusive, and it cannot be contradicted by parol evidence except where fraud or mistake is alleged. Pribble v. Hall, 13 Bush (Ky.) 61; Dowell v. Mitchell, 82 Ky. 47; Ritter v. Bell, (Ky., 1887), 2 S. W. Rep. 675; Razor v. Dowan (Ky., 1890), 13 S. W. Rep. 914; Davis v. Jenkins, 93 Ky. 353; *Keith v. Prior to the passage of this statute, and under a former statute requiring the separate examination of a married woman, but dispensing with the formal certificate of such examination, and making the general certificate of acknowledgment prima facie evidence of proper separate examination, it was held that it was competent to prove by parol evidence, not contradicting the certificate itself, either that a deed executed by a feme covert was not read or explained to her, or that her husband was present when she acknowledged it, and thus avoid the deed as to her. Ford v. Teal, 7 Bush (Ky.) 156; Woodhead v. Foulds, 7 Bush (Ky.) 222.

But in Harpending v. Wylie, 14 Bush (Ky.) 380, also decided before this statute was passed or became operative, it was held that the statements of the officer's certificate of acknowledgment could not be contradicted by parol evidence.

Maryland.—The certificate of acknowledgment may be impeached for fraud or duress. Central Bank v. Copeland, 18 Md. 305; Ramsburg v. Campbell, 55 Md. 227.

It has been held that the certificate was prima facie evidence only. Barry v. Hoffman, 6 Md. 78; Davis v. Hamblin, 51 Md. 525.

In some of the earlier cases where the question arose it was held that no evidence could be received to invalidate the acknowledgment of a deed or contradict the certificate. Bissett v. Bissett, 1 Har. & M. (Md.) 211; Ridgely v. Howard, 3 Har. & M. (Md.) 321; Gittings v. Hall, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 14, 2 Am. Dec. 502. See also Byer v. Etnyre, 2 Gill (Md.) 150, 41 Am. Dec. 410.

Mississippi.—Where the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment purported to have been made by a competent officer, and showed a due acknowledgment according to the statute requiring separate examination, it was held that the testimony of the woman that the acknowledgment was in fact made in the presence of her husband was inadmissible. Johnston v. Wallace, 53 Miss. 333, 24 Am. Rep. 699 (distinguishing Allen v. Lenoir, 53 Miss. 321, where a certificate was successfully impeached on the ground that there had been no acknowledgment).

North Carolina.—Under the laws formerly in force in North Carolina the acknowledgment and privy examination of a married woman taken before a judge or a court had the effect of a matter of record, and was not open to collateral attack on account of fraud or incapacity of the grantor. Woodbourne v. Gorrel, 66 N. Car. 82; Paul v. Carpenter, 70 N. Car. 502; Doe v. Player, 72 N. Car. 94. But under the Revised Code, c. 37, § 8, the law is changed and the certificate of privy examination may be impeached for duress, or on account of infancy or other disability of the woman. Jones v. Cohen, 82 N. Car. 75; Ware v. Nesbit, 94 N. Car. 664; Epps v. Flowers, 101 N. Car. 158; Wynne v. Small, 102 N. Car. 133. See also Sellers v. Sellers, 98 N. Car. 13.

Tennessee.—The certificate of acknowledgment is conclusive, and cannot be contradicted by parol evidence. A court of equity has no jurisdiction to inquire into the regularity of a married woman's separate examination, but the acknowledgment may be set aside for fraud or undue influence. Campbell v. Taul, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 548; Finnegan v. Finnegan, 3 Tenn. Ch. 510; Shields v. Netherland, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 193; Grotenkemper v. Carver, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 281.

Texas.—A married woman may introduce evidence to show that the acknowledgment of a deed of trust, executed and acknowledged by her and her husband, was obtained by fraud, and that she did not execute the deed willingly. Westbrooks v. Jeffers, 33 Tex. 86.

Where there is no charge of fraud or misconduct the fact that the acknowledgment by a married woman was not taken, and the instrument was not explained to her, privily knowledge by reason of the failure of the person purporting to make the acknowledgment, to appear or to acknowledge the instrument.¹ The courts and apart from her husband, is not sufficient to defeat her acknowledgment, whether or not the beneficiary is technically an innocent purchaser. Freiberg v. De Lamar (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 27 S. W. Rep. 151. See also Johnson v. Taylor, 60 Tex. 360; Henderson v. Terry, 62 Tex. 281.

Less than an Actual Duress will avoid the acknowledgment of a conveyance or mortgage by a married woman, providing it be known to the party claiming through it, or where he ought to have inquired for defenses and did not. It is enough if it be shown that the wife acted under moral constraint, that is, by threats, persecution, and harshness of her husband, to force her to set aside her own free will and to comply unwillingly with his wishes. Whenever her acknowledgment is secured in violation and disregard of statutory requirements it is void, and this may be shown by parol proof. McCandless v. Engle, 51 Pa. St. 309. See also Brower v. Callender, 105 Ill. 88, and title DURESS.

Acknowledgment of Sheriff's Deeds—Pennsylvania.—In Pennsylvania, under the law requiring sheriff's deeds to be acknowledged in open court before title would pass, it was held that the court in taking such acknowledgments acted judicially, and that parol evidence was inadmissible to contradict the record of the acknowledgment, which was conclusive evidence of the sale. Hoffman v. Coster, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 453; Bellas v. McCarty, 10 Watts (Pa.) 13. And the same is true, under the Act of 1809, of acknowledgments in open court by the county treasurer. Duff v. Wynkoop, 74 Pa. St. 300.

Certificate Not Conclusive as to Unrequired Recitals.—The officer's certificate of acknowledgment is not conclusive evidence of facts which he is not required by law to certify. Thompson v. New England Mortg. Security Co. (Ala., 1895), 18 So. Rep. 315; Draper v. Bryson, 17 Mo. 71, 57 Am. Dec. 257; Williams v. Baker, 71 Pa. St. 476.

Fraud by Wife.—Where a notary certified to the acknowledgment of a married woman in due form without requiring her personal presence, but upon her own authority, it was held that she could not be permitted to take advantage of her own irregular and wrongful act against parties who, ignorant of the facts, loaned money upon the strength of the security thus acknowledged, but fair and regular upon its face. McHenry v. Day, 13 Iowa 445, 81 Am. Dec. 438.

Presumption of Regularity of Acknowledgment.—A purchaser of a homestead is not bound to see that the notary did his duty in taking and certifying the wife's private examination, and when he receives a deed duly executed and acknowledged by husband and wife he has a right to suppose that the wife has freely and with full knowledge consented to the sale. Pierce v. Fort, 60 Tex. 464.

Carskadden*, 36 Ohio St. 664.

Wife Denying Execution of Deed.—Where a wife in clear and unequivocal testimony denied the execution of a deed, and was corroborated in this by the evidence of her husband, who confessed that he signed the deed in her name, without her knowledge or consent, and also that he made the acknowledgment certified by the commissioner, there being no evidence offered in support of the commissioner's certificate, it was held that the execution of the deed was fully and clearly disproved, and the certificate of the commissioner falsified. Barnett v. Proskauer, 62 Ala. 486.

Where an officer, by mistake or fraud, falsely certified to a separate examination and acknowledgment of a married woman to the mortgage of her estate, where she did not sign the mortgage or appear before him, it was held that the instrument could be avoided as to the mortgagee without proof of notice of the fraud, he not being considered a bona fide purchaser. Michener v. Cavender, 38 Pa. St. 334, 80 Am. Dec. 486.

The Positive and Explicit Denial by the grantor, of the execution and acknowledgment of the deed, has been held to overcome a prima facie case made by the certificate of acknowledgment even with the testimony of experts as to the genuineness of the signature. Borland v. Walrath, 33 Iowa 130.

Estoppel—Married Women.—While it is well settled that to pass the title of a married woman in the sale of her land, it must be done in the mode prescribed by the statute, this does not preclude the adjustment and enforcement of equities, and where a deed by a married woman has served the purpose of releasing her other estate from a lien created by a deed of trust, she cannot avail herself of a defective certificate of acknowledgment to defeat the deed. McKinney v. Matthews (Tex., 1888), 6 S. W. Rep. 793.

It was held in Michigan that a homestead mortgage would not be set aside merely because it was acknowledged by the wife in the presence of her husband, there being no evidence that the wife executed the deed under compulsion or influence, or that she did not acknowledge it freely. Norton v. Nichols, 35 Mich. 148.

It was held in Connecticut, under a statute requiring a deed to be signed by the grantor with his own hand or mark, that a wife's acknowledgment of a deed purporting to be executed by husband and wife, signed by the husband, who also signed her name in her presence, did not estop her from denying are not in accord upon the question whether or not it may be shown that the officer by whom the acknowledgment was taken acted beyond his jurisdiction.¹

(5) Impeachment—Nature of Evidence Required.—The evidence to impeach the certificate must be clear and convincing beyond a reasonable doubt.² It should do more than produce a mere preponderance against the integrity of the certificate in the balancing of probabilities. It should, by its completeness that it was her deed. Linsley v. Brown, 13 Conn. 192.

See also supra, this title, Married Women—Separate Examination; and infra, this title, Curing Defective Acknowledgments—By Subsequent Acknowledgment.

Forged Certificate—Indictment.—A certificate of acknowledgment, to be the subject of forgery, must show on its face all the requirements of a valid acknowledgment, and where a certificate fails to recite a material matter, as that the grantor acknowledged the execution of the conveyance, an indictment for forgery will not lie. People v. Harrison, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 560. See also State v. Dufour, 63 Ind. 567; People v. Marion, 29 Mich. 31. See the title FORGERY.

1. Want of Jurisdiction.—A certificate, correct in form, may be rebutted where the officer has acted beyond his jurisdiction. Edinburgh American Land Mortg. Co. v. Peoples (Ala., 1894), 14 So. Rep. 656.

After the Lapse of a Considerable Time, strong proof is required to overcome the certificate. Tunison v. Chamblin, 88 Ill. 378.

Missouri.—A prima facie case made by the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment in substantial compliance with the statute can be overcome only by very clear and convincing proof of its untruth. Bohan v. Casey, 5 Mo. App. 101; Riecke v. Westenhoff, 10 Mo. App. 358; Ray v. Crouch, 10 Mo. App. 321; Morrison v. McKee, 11 Mo. App. 594; Brocking v. Straat, 17 Mo. App. 296; *Webb v. The testimony of the grantor and the officer tending to contradict the certificate is not sufficient to warrant the setting aside of a finding in favor of the validity of the deed. Riecke v. Westenhoff, 10 Mo. App. 358; Morrison v. McKee, 11 Mo. App. 594.

It is not necessary in this state, in impeaching the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment, to show that fraud or imposition was practiced on the grantor. Steffen v. Bauer, 70 Mo. 399 (following Wannell v. Kem, 57 Mo. 478); Rust v. Goff, 94 Mo. 511; Pierce v. Feagans, 39 Fed. Rep. 587.

Married Woman's Voluntary Acknowledgment.—Where a married woman duly acknowledged, before a proper officer, that she voluntarily executed a mortgage, and the officer attached the usual certificate of acknowledgment in the form prescribed by statute, it was held that this circumstance was cogent proof of free agency and absence of restraint in the execution of the mortgage, and raised a presumption in favor of its validity, which could be rebutted only by clear proof of fraud, duress, or imposition practiced on the mortgagor, in which the officer or mortgagee participated. Moog v. Strang, 69 Ala. 98.

Ignorance of Officer's Character.—Where a married woman signed a mortgage in the presence of a notary public, knowing that her signature in his presence was deemed essential to the validity of the instrument, the fact that she was ignorant of his official character is not sufficient to impeach his certificate of acknowledgment. Jinwright v. Nelson (Ala., 1895), 17 So. Rep. 97.

Want of Recollection will Not Defeat Acknowledgment.—Where the certificate of acknowledgment is regular on its face, the fact that the officer or grantor cannot recollect whether the acknowledgment was properly made is not sufficient to overcome the recitals of the certificate. Wright v. Bundy, 11 Ind. 398; Tooker v. Sloan, 30 N. J. Eq. 394; Ford v. Osborne, 45 Ohio St. 1; Romanes v. Fraser, 16 Grant's Ch. (Canada) 97. See also La Société Française, etc., v. Beard, 54 Cal. 480; Hammond v. Hopkins, 143 U. S. 224.

and reliable character, fully and clearly satisfy the court that the certificate is untrue and fraudulent.¹ The fact that the officer in making the certificates acts under his official oath and is liable to indictment and conviction for misconduct, creates a presumption in favor of the regularity of the certificate certainly as strong as any that could be brought against it by the testimony of an interested witness,² and in the absence of proof of fraud and collusion on the part of the officer the uncorroborated testimony of the party purporting to make the acknowledgment is insufficient to overcome the certificate.³

Burden of Proof.—The recitals in the certificate are presumed to be correct,⁴ and the burden of proof rests upon the party undertaking to impeach the certificate to show that it is false.⁵

1. More Preponderance of Evidence Insufficient to Impeach Certificate.—Marston v. Brittenham, 76 Ill. 611; McPherson v. Sanborn, 88 Ill. 150; Strauch v. Hathaway, 101 Ill. 11; 40 Am. Rep. 193; Griffin v. Griffin, 125 Ill. 430; Bailey v. Landingham, 53 Iowa 722; Hughes v. Coleman, 10 Bush (Ky.) 246; Jett v. Rogers, 12 Bush (Ky.) 564.

Where a husband and wife testified that the latter did not acknowledge a mortgage executed by them, as stated in the certificate of acknowledgment, and two disinterested witnesses testified that she did acknowledge it in their presence, and witnesses of equal credibility were introduced both to prove and disprove the absence of the wife from the place where the acknowledgment purported to have been made, there being more witnesses for than against the fact of alibi, it was held, that the certificate would prevail over the testimony adduced to disprove it. Phillips v. Bishop, 35 Neb. 487.

5. Burden of Proof.—The recitals in the certificate of acknowledgment are prima facie true, and it devolves upon the party attacking the acknowledgment to prove their falsity by a preponderance of evidence. Gabbey v. Forgeus, 38 Kan. 62; Wannell v. Kem, 57 Mo. 478; Romer v. Conter, 53 Minn. 171; Com. v. Haines, 97 Pa. St. 228, 39 Am. Rep. 805; Morris v. Sargent, 18 Iowa 90; Hourtienne v. Schnoor, 33 Mich. 274.

The certificate of acknowledgment is an official act, done under the obligation of an official oath, and protected by the presumptions the law necessarily indulges in favor of the acts of its own officers. The burden of proof is on those who assail the verity of the certificate, and it can be successfully impeached only by clear and convincing evidence. Barnett v. Proskauer, 62 Ala. 486; Ramsbury v. Campbell, 55 Md. 227; Dikeman v. Arnold, 78 Mich. 455; Bohan v. Casey, 5 Mo. App. 101; Barrett v. Davis, 104 Mo. 549; Phillips v. Bishop, 35 Neb. 487. See also *Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Officer as Witness.—It is held in some states, from considerations of public policy, that the officer who took the acknowledgment is an incompetent witness to contradict the recitals of his official certificate of acknowledgment.¹ By some courts, however, such testimony has been admitted,² and it is freely allowed in favor of the certificate.³

VIII. CURING DEFECTIVE ACKNOWLEDGMENTS—1. By Subsequent Acknowledgment—a. IN GENERAL.—A married woman's deed, void on account of defective acknowledgment, may be made valid by her subsequent acknowledgment thereof, in due form, and properly certified.⁴ This is equivalent to a re-execu-

Testimony of Officer Inadmissible to Supply a Material Fact.—Where the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment was defective in failing to state that she was privately examined, it was held that the parol evidence of the magistrate who took the acknowledgment was inadmissible to show a separate examination. Jourdan v. Jourdan, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 268, 11 Am. Dec. 724. See Elwood v. Klock, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 50.

See also supra, this title, The Certificate—Errors and Omissions.

Testimony of Notary Admissible to Prove Execution of Deed.—The testimony of a notary who took the acknowledgment is admissible as evidence of the execution of the deed, but not for the purpose of validating his certificate, shown to be defective for want of his official seal, nor to constitute the record thereof notice to a subsequent purchaser. King v. Russell, 40 Tex. 124.

A notary who took the acknowledgment is a competent witness to prove what took place at the time of acknowledgment, and the fact of the execution of the deed against a denial by the person named in the certificate as having acknowledged it. Jansen v. McCahill, 22 Cal. 563, 83 Am. Dec. 84.

4. Defective Acknowledgment Cured by Re-acknowledgment.—Cahall v. Citizens' Mut. Bldg. Assoc., 61 Ala. 232; McMullen v. Eagan, 21 W. Va. 233.

Where a conveyance of a married woman's land was void because executed by virtue of a power of attorney, it was held that her subsequent signature of the instrument, and privy acknowledgment, made with intent to cure the defect, was sufficient to validate the instrument, providing no rights of third parties had intervened. Halbert v. Hendrix (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 26 S. W. Rep. 911; Halbert v. Bennett (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 26 S. W. Rep. 913. See also Gordon v. Collett, 107 N. Car. 362; Ridabock v. Levy, 8 Paige (N. Where the certificate of acknowledgment

tion of the deed, or making a new deed.¹ If made with intent to cure the original defects, where no rights of third persons have intervened, the acknowledgment will relate back to the date of the original delivery of the conveyance, without any new delivery;² but a defective acknowledgment cannot be cured by a subsequent acknowledgment made after the property has been conveyed to a second grantee.³

b. RATIFICATION BY WIDOW.—A widow may ratify a deed made during coverture, and void by reason of defective acknowledgment, by a subsequent adoption or confirmation.⁴ This may be effected by reacknowledgment,⁵ or may be shown by the receipt and reinvestment of the purchase money;⁶ by the payment of interest on a mortgage;⁷ or by long acquiescence.⁸

of a deed executed by husband and wife, conveying the wife's lands, failed to show separate examination of the wife, and fourteen years later, the coverture still subsisting, she appeared before another officer and acknowledged the deed, and another certificate in proper form was appended thereto, on the same sheet with the first, it was held that the first acknowledgment, if defective, was cured by the second. Newell v. Anderson, 7 Ohio St. 12.

Refusal to Reacknowledge.—Where it was impossible to determine from the acknowledgment of a deed of trust whether it was acknowledged by the grantor or the trustee, it was held that the defect might be corrected by reacknowledgment by the grantor, and if she refused to make reacknowledgment, she might be compelled to do so under the provisions of Rhode Island Pub. Stat., c. 137, §§ 6, 7. Sullivan v. Chambers (R. I., 1895), 31 Atl. Rep. 167.

4. Defective Acknowledgment Cured by Subsequent Confirmation.—A married woman's deed, void because of defective acknowledgment, may be validated by her subsequent confirmation of it when a widow, but the confirmation cannot be by parol merely. Price v. Hart, 29 Mo. 171. See also Miller v. Shackleford, 3 Dana (Ky.) 289.

Where a deputy clerk made out a certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment in his own name, without anywhere naming his principal, and the deed was recorded, it was held that the averment of the woman, in a suit brought by her when discoverd, and sui juris, that she united in the conveyance and acknowledged it before the regular deputy who was authorized to take her acknowledgment, cured the insufficiency in the certificate. Beuley v. Curtis (Ky., 1892), 18 S. W. Rep. 357.

5. A deed void because made and acknowledged by a married woman may be rendered valid by her subsequent acknowledgment thereof when a widow. Riggs v. Boylan, 4 Biss. (U. S.) 445.

A deed by husband and wife not acknowledged by the wife, as required by statute, is void as to her. But if, after the death of her husband, she acknowledges it, the deed shall be good to pass her right in the land, and operate from the time of acknowledgment. Doe v. Howland, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 277, 18 Am. Dec. 445. See also Jackson v. Stevens, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 110. Compare Chester v. Breitling (Tex. Civ. App., 1895), 30 S. W. Rep. 464; Richardson v. Woodstock Iron Co., 90 Ala. 266.

6. A Defective Acknowledgment Cured by Receiving Purchase Money.—Where husband and wife joined in a bond to convey land, but the wife was not privately examined, and she, after the death of the husband, received the purchase money and reinvested it in other land, it was held that she was estopped from setting up the want of privy examination, so far as to claim dower in the land sold by her husband. Hodge v. Powell, 96 N. Car. 64, 60 Am. Rep. 401.

Where a married woman exchanged lands and received a perfect deed, but the certificate of acknowledgment of her own failed to show private examination, and she, discovering the defect nine years later, undertook to assert her title on account of the defective acknowledgment, having in the meanwhile sold the lands received and reinvested the proceeds, it was held that she was estopped to set up the defective acknowledgment. Shivers v. Simmons, 54 Miss. 520, 28 Am. Rep. 372. See also Dalton v. Rust, 22 Tex. 133; Talkin v. Anderson (Tex., 1892), 19 S. W. Rep. 350; Worthington v. Young, 6 Ohio 313.

Defective Acknowledgment Cured by Lapse of Time.—Where deeds had been recorded for forty years or more, and the record showed that during that time transactions of great importance had been based on them, and no objection had been made to the acknowledgment, it was held that defective acknowledgment was immaterial. Bucklen v. Hasterlik, 155 Ill. 423.

c. FRAUDULENT ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—An acknowledgment obtained by fraud is incapable of ratification by subsequent confirmation or acknowledgment.¹

2. By Statute—a. GENERALLY.—The legislatures of most of the states have enacted statutes declaring valid, acknowledgments and certificates of acknowledgment, defective for non-observance of some statutory requirement, or because taken by an unauthorized officer; and making the record of deeds defectively acknowledged, or not acknowledged at all, notice to subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers.² The operation of these statutes is sometimes

It is incompetent for the person who acknowledged the deed to object to some irregularity in the acknowledgment fifteen years after the time of execution and acknowledgment. Rigler v. Cloud, 14 Pa. St. 361.

1. Fraudulent Acknowledgment cannot be Ratified.—Where a husband, without the knowledge or consent of his wife, executed a mortgage on the homestead, and signed or procured some one to sign the name of the wife to the instrument, and then fraudulently procured a notary to certify to its acknowledgment by the wife, and the notary subsequently induced the wife, in the absence of the husband, to sign a paper ratifying the acknowledgment, it was held that such ratification was a nullity, affixing the signature and making the certificate being criminal acts and incapable of ratification. Howell v. McCrie, 36 Kan. 636, 59 Am. Rep. 584.

A Purchaser must Take Notice of an act validating acknowledgments. Journeay v. Gibson, 56 Pa. St. 57.

Operation of Curing Acts not Extra-territorial.—A deed to land in Missouri, acknowledged in New York in 1820, improperly, according to the laws of either New York or Missouri, limited to those acknowledgments which have been properly taken, but which and recorded in Missouri in 1822, is not affected by section 35 et seq. of c. 109, Missouri Rev. Stat. 1865; nor can a curative act passed in New York, in 1824, operate extra-territorially to cure such imperfect acknowledgment. Wright v. Taylor, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 23.

Acknowledgments Taken in Other States—Connecticut.—Where a deed to land in Connecticut, executed and acknowledged in New York before a commissioner of Connecticut, an officer not authorized by the laws of New York to take acknowledgments of deeds to lands lying in that state, was defective under the laws of Connecticut because attested by only one witness, it was held that the defect was not cured by the Act of 1855 validating deeds and other conveyances of real estate in Connecticut, which had been executed and acknowledged in other states in conformity with the laws of such states relative to the conveyance of lands therein situated. Farrel Foundry v. Dart, 26 Conn. 376.

Want of Certificate of Official Character, with an officer's certificate of acknowledgment, of a deed executed without the state, is cured by the Dakota Act of 1873. Smith v. Gale, 144 U. S. 509.

Where a notary taking an acknowledgment subscribed himself as notary for "——Territory" it was held that this omission, if material, was cured by the Washington Act of 1873. Carson v. Railsback, 3 Wash. Ter. 168.

Want of Seal, if fatal to the validity of the certificate, may be cured by statute. Maxey v. Wise, 25 Ind. 1; Kenyon v. Knipe, 2 Wash. Ter. 422.

Certificates void for want of seal may be made valid by statute. Cole v. Wright, 70 Ind. 179; Tidd v. Rines, 26 Minn. 201; Barton v. Morris, 15 Ohio 408; Jaques v. Person, 106 N. Car. 251. Compare Bernier v. Becker, 37 Ohio St. 72.

The Texas Act of 1874 cures an acknowledgment void because taken before a notary public of another state at a time when such officers were not authorized by the laws of Texas to take acknowledgments of deeds to lands in that state. Baker v. Westcott, 73 Tex. 129.

But the operation of this act is limited to the case of acknowledgments taken within the United States, and an acknowledgment before a notary of Mexico is not cured thereby. Birdseye v. Rogers (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 26 S. W. Rep. 841.

Where the articles of incorporation of a building association were acknowledged by mistake before a notary public instead of a justice of the peace, as required by statute, it was held that the mistake was cured by the Ohio Act of 1859. Spinning v. Home Bldg., etc., Assoc., 26 Ohio 483.

Curing Defects after Lapse of Time—Missouri.—Under §§ 4864 and 4865, Missouri Rev. Stat. 1889, a deed, or the copy of the record thereof, is admissible in evidence without proof of execution, although not proved or acknowledged as required by law, provided the deed has been recorded thirty years or more when offered in evidence. Gatewood v. Hart, 58 Mo. 261; Smith v. Madison, 67 Mo. 694; Crispen v. Hannavan, 72 Mo. 548; Campbell v. Laclede Gas Light Co., 84 Mo. 352; Wilson v. Albert, 89 Mo. 537. See also Totten v. James, 55 Mo. 494.

This act was not repealed by the Act of March 28, 1874. Smith v. Madison, 67 Mo. 694.

Tennessee.—The Tennessee Code of 1884, § 2898, provides that whenever a deed has been registered twenty years or more, the same shall be presumed to have been upon lawful authority; and the probate shall be good though the certificate has not been transferred to the register's book, without regard to the form of the certificate. It was held under this act that after a deed has been registered for twenty years or more the presumption in favor of the validity is conclusive, and all inquiry as to the regularity of acknowledgment, etc., is cut off. Mathewson v. Spencer, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 383; Bledsoe v. Wiley, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 507; Anderson v. Bewley, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 29; Seephenon v. Walker, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 289; Stroud v. McDaniel, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 617; Webb v. Den, 17 How. (U. S.) 576. See also Green v. Goodall, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 404; Murdock v. Leath, 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 106.

The act applies to the deeds of married women as well as those of other persons. Mathewson v. Spencer, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 513, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 383; Seephenon v. Walker, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 289; Anderson v. Bewley, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 29; Stroud v. McDaniel, 12 Lea. (Tenn.) 617; Webb v. Den, 17 How. (U. S.) 576. See also, as presumption of regularity of acknowledgment of ancient deeds, Cable v. Cable, 146 Pa. St. 451.

See also the title ANCIENT DOCUMENTS.

Defects Not Cured.—A subsequent statute, adopting the form used in an acknowledgment defective according to the law as it stood at the time the deed was recorded, will not cure such defective acknowledgment. Texas Land Co. v. Williams, 51 Tex. 51.

Want of Acknowledgment.—The New Mexico Act of 1874 (Prince's Comp. Laws 239) cures defective acknowledgments, but does not supply the want of, nor obviate the necessity for, an acknowledgment. Armijo v. New Mexico Town Co., 3 N. Mex. 244.

The Illinois Act of 1853 applies to cases where the particulars of an acknowledgment were defectively set forth, not cases where a statement of the fact of acknowledgment was are insufficient on account of some omission or irregularity in the certificate.¹

b. HOW FAR RETROACTIVE.—These acts generally have a retroactive effect;² but other curative acts have been construed to affect only deeds recorded after the passage of the act in question.³

After Judgment.—A validating statute will not operate upon an acknowledgment which has been adjudged defective prior to the passage of the act, even though the case be still pending on appeal.⁴

Pending Judgment.—But where the act is passed between the time of bringing entirely omitted. Short v. Conlee, 28 Ill. 219.

Iowa—Not Acknowledged according to Laws of State.—Section 1966 of the Iowa Revised Code (1888) legalizing all conveyances acknowledged or proved in other states according to the laws of such states, does not cure an acknowledgment defective according to the laws of Iowa, unless it is shown to be in accordance with the laws of the state where made. Greenwood v. Jenswold, 69 Iowa 53.

The certificate as well as the acknowledgment must conform to the laws and usages of the state where made. Kruger v. Walker (Iowa, 1894), 59 N. W. Rep. 65.

Defect in Deed.—Where a deed conveying a married woman's lands was duly executed and acknowledged by the husband, but not signed or sealed by the wife, though privately acknowledged by her, it was held that this defect was not cured by the Ohio Acts of 1857 and 1859, such instrument not being the wife's deed within the provisions of these acts. Koltlenbrock v. Cracraft, 36 Ohio St. 584. See also Dengenhart v. Cracraft, 36 Ohio St. 549.

The Arkansas Act of March 8, 1883, substantially re-enacted in 1891, has no application to the case of a properly executed and acknowledged deed by husband and wife conveying the wife's land, designed to convey the fee, but which by mistake is made to convey only a dower interest. Bowden v. Bland, 53 Ark. 53, 22 Am. St. Rep. 179.

Mistake in Grantor.—The Kansas act making the record of instruments recorded prior to Oct. 31, 1868, competent evidence notwithstanding defects in the acknowledgment or execution of the same, will not cure a certificate of acknowledgment reciting that Geo. H. Crane acknowledged a deed signed by Geo. H. Case. Heil v. Redden (Kan., 1888), 16 Pac. Rep. 743.

1. Michigan.—The curing Act of 1861 (How. Stat., § 5726) applies only to deeds which have been properly acknowledged, but whose certificates of acknowledgment, though sufficient in substance, are not strictly formal. Brown v. Cady, 11 Mich. 535.

It does not cure a certificate defective in a material matter, as want of seal where the statutes require one, or failure to state that the grantor acknowledged the deed. Buell v. Irwin, 24 Mich. 145.

The last branch of the statute, relating to the proof of the official character of officers taking acknowledgments in other states, does not apply to Michigan commissioners resident in other states. Buell v. Irwin, 24 Mich. 145.

This act was not repealed by the Act of 1867

(How. Stat. 5707). Brown v. McCormick, 28 Mich. 215. See also, as to this statute, Brooks v. Fairchild, 36 Mich. 231; Healey v. Worth, 35 Mich. 166; Donahue v. Klassner, 22 Mich. 252.

See supra, this title, Amendment—By the Court.

2. Curing Acts Operate Retrospectively.—The Iowa Act of 1858 (Rev. Code 1888, § 1966), curing defective acknowledgments, is retrospective only. Reynolds v. Kingsbury, 15 Iowa 238; Jones v. Berkshire, 15 Iowa 248, 83 Am. Dec. 412.

The Illinois Act of 1829, curing acknowledgments taken by unauthorized officers, is by its express terms retroactive in its operation. Logan v. Williams, 76 Ill. 175.

The Missouri Act of 1855, providing that conveyances theretofore made, but unacknowledged or defectively acknowledged, shall impart notice when recorded, applies exclusively to conveyances made prior to the time when that act went into effect. Stevens v. Hampton, 46 Mo. 404; Bishop v. Schneider, 46 Mo. 472, 2 Am. Rep. 533.

See also, for other curative acts held to apply retroactively, Mercer v. Watson, 1 Watts (Pa.) 330, affirmed in Watson v. Mercer, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 88; Spinning v. Home Bldg., etc.. Assoc., 26 Ohio St. 483.

3. The Illinois Act of 1837, providing that instruments relating to or affecting title to real estate when recorded shall be notice, although not properly proved or acknowledged, is not retrospective in its operation, but is intended only to give effect to the recording of deeds after the passage of the law. Deininger v. McConnell, 41 Ill. 227.

The Ohio Act of 1858, declaring valid acts done by notaries public after the expiration of their term of office, is not retroactive and will not operate to cure an acknowledgment taken before the act was passed. Bernier v. Becker, 37 Ohio St. 72.

4. Defects cannot be Cured after Judgment.—Wright v. Graham, 42 Ark. 141; Gaines v. Catron, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 514; Garnett v. Stockton, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 84. See also McGehee v. McKenzie, 43 Ark. 156.

There is nothing unconstitutional in a statute curing defective acknowledgments; but where judgment has been rendered on a defective acknowledgment before the enactment of the statute, the act on appeal cannot be construed by retrospect to cure the acknowledgment adjudged defective. Barnet v. Barnet, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 72, 16 Am. Dec. 516.

An act curing defective certificates of acknowledgment cannot affect a judgment rendered prior to the passage of the act. Ralston v. Moore, 83 Ky. 571.

suit and judgment, defects in acknowledgment may be cured thereby, as the institution of a suit does not entitle the party to any particular decision, and the case must be decided according to the law as it stands at the time.¹

c. CONSTITUTIONALITY OF CURING ACTS.—The constitutionality of these acts has been frequently assailed on the ground that they interfere with vested rights, or impair the obligation of contracts, but they have been almost uniformly sustained where no rights of third parties are infringed.² The courts so holding have generally based their decisions on the ground that the acts do not operate on the deed or contract itself, thus creating a right that did not previously exist, or altering the terms of an existing contract, but simply affect the mode of proof,³ so that the intention of the contracting parties is carried into effect, and a contract such as a court of chancery ought to enforce is made valid and binding in law.⁴

1. Defects Cured after Suit Brought and before Judgment.—Green v. Abraham, 43 Ark. 420; Johnson v. Richardson, 44 Ark. 365; Edmunds v. Leavell (Ky., 1887), 3 S. W. Rep. 134. See also Totten v. James, 55 Mo. 494.

2. Curing Acts Constitutional.—United States.—Raverty v. Fridge, 3 McLean (U. S.) 230; Watson v. Mercer, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 88, affirming Mercer v. Watson, 1 Watts (Pa.) 330.

Arkansas.—Green v. Abraham, 43 Ark. 420; Johnson v. Richardson, 44 Ark. 365.

Florida.—Summer v. Mitchell, 29 Fla. 179. Indiana.—Maxey v. Wise, 25 Ind. 1.

Iowa.—Ferguson v. Williams, 58 Iowa 717. Maryland.—Grove v. Todd, 41 Md. 633, 20 Am. Rep. 76.

Worthington*, 11 Minn. 438, 88 Am. Dec. 95; Tatom v. White, 95 N. Car. 453; Underwood v. Lilly, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 97; Lycoming v. Union, 15 Pa. St. 166; Shonk v. Brown, 61 Pa. St. 320.

3. Curing Acts Affect Mode of Proof Only.—Grove v. Todd, 41 Md. 633, 20 Am. Rep. 76; Gatewood v. Hart, 58 Mo. 261; Journeyay v. Gibson, 56 Pa. St. 57.

In Journeyay v. Gibson, 56 Pa. St. 57. Strong, J., said: "Such legislative acts are sustainable only because they are supposed not to operate upon the deed, or contract changing it, but upon the mode of proof. It must be admitted that they often produce very harsh results, of which Mercer v. Watson, 1 Watts (Pa.) 330, is a notable illustration. They are retroactive statutes, and for this reason they are not to be extended beyond the plain intent of the legislature, and yet so far as they are remedial, they must be construed as remedial statutes are."

See also Shonk v. Brown, 61 Pa. St. 321; Hughes v. Cannon, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 589.

In the absence of any constitutional prohibition, the legislature has power, except as against prior vested rights, to cure defective acknowledgments by retroactive legislation in all cases where the purpose of the acknowledgment is the admission of the instrument acknowledged to record or its use in evidence. Summer v. Mitchell, 29 Fla. 179.

4. Raverty v. Fridge, 3 McLean (U. S.) 230; Maxey v. Wise, 25 Ind. 1; Gatewood v. Hart, 58 Mo. 261; Chesnut v. Shane, 16 Ohio 599; Ruffner v. McLenan, 16 Ohio 639; Dengenhart v. Cracraft, 36 Ohio St. 549; Tate v. Stooltzfoos, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 35, 16 Am. Dec. 546. See also Brinton v. Seevers, 12 Iowa 389.

Under the Ohio Act of 1833 (Rev. Stat. 1894, §§ 4144-4145) it was held that an acknowledgment was valid although the magistrate had not affixed his seal to the certificate. Barton v. Morris, 15 Ohio 408. In delivering the opinion of the court in this case, Birchard, J., said: "The statute purports to act retrospectively—not to create a title where none existed before, but to make that a good title which the parties themselves meant to make good, by dispensing with a part of the form required of the officer, and by him carelessly and negligently omitted. This statute has been repeatedly under the examination of this court upon the circuit, and has received the sanction of all its members as a law of binding force. It violates the obligation of no contract, divests no vested right; but, on the contrary, supports a contract fairly and honestly made, and such a one as a court of chancery would have enforced."

Upon the same grounds, it was held that the Act of 1835 (Ohio Rev. Stat. 1894, §§ 41-49) declaring deeds by a husband and wife, previously executed according to law, admissible in evidence, although the magistrate omitted to certify that the contents of the deed had been explained to the wife, was not unconstitutional. Chesnut v. Shane, 16 Ohio 599 (reviewing and overruling, as to the constitutionality of this act and the validity of such acknowledgments, Connell v. Connell, 6 Ohio 358; Good v. Zercher, 12 Ohio 364;

Where acts purporting to validate defective acknowledgments impair vested rights, or affect the rights of strangers to the instrument, they are to that extent void,¹ and they have been held unconstitutional in certain cases where their effect has been to create a title by curing a defect fatal to the validity of the instrument itself;² on this ground some courts have held, in opposition to the great weight of authority, that the legislature has no power to cure defective acknowledgments of married women, acknowledgment being an essential part of a married woman's conveyance.³

d. CURING ACTS CONSTRUED LIBERALLY.—Validating statutes, being remedial in their nature, should be construed liberally.⁴

Meddock v. Williams, 12 Ohio 377; Silliman v. Cummins, 13 Ohio 116; Ruffner v. McLenan, 16 Ohio 639.

The Pennsylvania Act of 1826, providing that no deeds, etc., theretofore executed and acknowledged, shall be held invalid by reason of any omission or informality in setting forth the particulars of the acknowledgment in the certificate, does not violate the Constitution of the United States as divesting vested rights or violating the obligations of contracts. Mercer v. Watson, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 88, affirming Watson v. Mercer, 1 Watts (Pa.) 330. With reference to the latter point, Story, J., speaking for the court, said: "So far, then, as it has any legal operation, it goes to confirm, and not to impair, the contract of the femes covert. It gives the very effect to their acts and contracts which they intended to give, and which, from mistake or accident, has not been effected."

1. Curing Acts Void as to Vested Rights.—McGehee v. McKenzie, 43 Ark. 156; Brinton v. Seevers, 12 Iowa 389; Newman v. Samuels, 17 Iowa 528; Fogg v. Holcomb, 64 Iowa 621; Thompson v. Morgan, 6 Minn. 292; Green v. Drinker, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 440. See also Meighen v. Strong, 6 Minn. 177, 80 Am. Dec. 441; Shonk v. Brown, 61 Pa. St. 320.

It was held, under the Iowa Act of 1888 (Rev. Code 1888, § 1967), that where a purchaser at a sheriff's sale paid his money and received the sheriff's certificate before the passage of the act, but did not procure the deed until afterward, the legislature in curing a defective acknowledgment and thus declaring the title of a third person valid, could not make it paramount and deprive such purchaser of his rights acquired under the sheriff's sale. Brinton v. Seevers, 12 Iowa 389. See also Newman v. Samuels, 17 Iowa 528.

Where a deed conveying land was defectively acknowledged, but duly recorded, and the grantor afterwards conveyed the same land to another person, and the legislature subsequently passed an act legalizing the defective acknowledgment, it was held that the rights of the parties to the first deed were unaffected by this act, and the subsequent grantee could not claim title superior to the first without proving that he was an innocent purchaser for value. Fogg v. Holcomb, 64 Iowa 621.

Dower.—The Illinois Act of 1853, declaring that no deed theretofore or thereafter executed shall be held invalid or insufficient in law by reason of any informality or omission in the certificate of acknowledgment, provided it shows a substantial compliance with the statutory regulations, is unconstitutional and void, so far as it attempts to cure a defective acknowledgment of a deed by husband and wife, which contains no release of the wife's right of dower; a married woman's contingent right of dower being a vested interest of which she cannot be divested by legislative enactment. Russell v. Rumsey, 35 Ill. 362. See also Steele v. Gelatly, 41 Ill. 39.

2. Curing Acts Creating Title—Sheriff's Deeds.—The Missouri statute of 1855, declaring that the record of an instrument in writing, good in itself, but defectively proven or acknowledged, shall operate as constructive notice the same as though the proof or acknowledgment had been regular, is not intended to give validity to the record of an instrument which does not convey title without acknowledgment, and does not apply, therefore, to the record of a defectively acknowledged sheriff's deed, acknowledgment being essential to such a deed in order to pass title. Ryan v. Carr, 46 Mo. 483. See the title SHERIFF'S SALES.

Tax Deeds.—The Iowa Act of 1870, legalizing all acknowledgments of deeds which had been duly recorded, does not apply to tax deeds of which acknowledgment is made by statute a part of the execution of the deed. Goodykoontz v. Olsen, 54 Iowa 174. See the article, TAX TITLES.

3. Curing Acts Unconstitutional as to Deeds by Married Women.—The Alabama Act of 1858, providing that no conveyance by husband and wife executed and acknowledged prior to that date shall be invalid or insufficient in law on account of defects in the certificate of acknowledgment, is, so far as it affects the defective certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment, unconstitutional. Alabama L. Ins., etc., Co. v. Boykin, 38 Ala. 510.

The court in this case disapproved the decisions in Pennsylvania in favor of a different rule. See Mercer v. Watson, 1 Watts (Pa.) 330, affirmed in Watson v. Mercer, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 88; Tate v. Stooltzfoos, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 35, 16 Am. Dec. 546.

A deed by husband and wife, void as to the wife on account of defective acknowledgment, is not cured so as to pass her dower by the Maryland Act of 1867, although the act renders the deed good as against the husband and his heirs. Grove v. Todd, 41 Md. 633, 20 Am. Rep. 76.

4. Curing Acts should be Liberally Construed.—California.—Wallace v. Moody, 26 Cal. 387. Illinois.—Logan v. Williams, 76 Ill. 175.

3. Proof by Subscribing Witnesses.—It is provided by statute in many of the states, that the execution of deeds and other instruments intended to be recorded may be proved by the oath of attesting witnesses; and where an instrument is not acknowledged, or the acknowledgment is defective, this mode of proof may take the place of acknowledgment and have the same effect.¹

ACQUAINTANCE—ACQUAINTED.—Acquaintance is familiar knowledge, a state of being acquainted, or of having intimate or more than slight or superficial knowledge; as, I know the man, but have no acquaintance with him.²

North Carolina.—Tatom v. White, 95 N. Car. 453.

Texas.—Butler v. Dunagan, 19 Tex. 559.

See also Griffith v. Ridgely, 2 Har. & M. (Md.) 418; Journey v. Gibson, 56 Pa. St. 57.

1. Defectively Acknowledged Deed Proved by Subscribing Witness.—Where a deed purported to have been acknowledged before a commissioner of deeds, but there was no certificate by the county clerk of his being such commissioner, it was held that the execution of the deed might be proved by proving the handwriting of the deceased subscribing witness. The court, by McCoun, J., said:

"If a deed has not been acknowledged and certified, to entitle it to be recorded or used as evidence under the statute, it may still be proved in the common-law method, by calling the subscribing witness to the stand, or by any secondary evidence which the rules of law admit of; none of which rules have been abrogated or entirely superseded. It is true that the proof given on the trial in this instance was of a secondary character; but it does not appear that it was in the plaintiff's power to have furnished any better." Borst v. Empie, 5 N. Y. 33.

The common-law mode of proving the execution of deeds is not abrogated by the Missouri Act of 1868, pertaining to the admissibility in evidence of certified copies of deeds for military bounty lands; and hence, a deed for such lands is admissible in evidence where its execution is proved according to the common-law mode, in the same manner as any other deed not acknowledged or recorded properly, and will be valid between the parties and those having actual notice, and mere trespassers. Wright v. Taylor, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 23. See also, generally, Doe v. Naylor, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 32 (citing 5 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.), p. 443); Shaffer v. Hahn, 111 N. Car. 1; Wilson v. McEwan, 7 Oregon 87; Pearl v. Howard, 1 D. Chip. (Vt.) 173; Catlin v. Washburn, 3 Vt. 25; and the title ATTESTATION.

2. Personal Knowledge.—Worcester's Dict., followed in Wyllis v. Haun, 47 Iowa 621. And in that case, where a statute required an acknowledgment to state that the person making the acknowledgment was "personally known" to the person taking it, the court distinguished acquaintance from personal knowledge, saying: "A mere introduction would not make one acquainted with the person introduced." See also the title ACKNOWLEDGMENTS. Compare Kelly v. Calhoun, 95 U. S. 710.

Personally Known.—In a certificate of proof of a deed, by testimony as to the handwriting of the subscribing witness thereto, it was stated that the witness called to prove such handwriting "was well acquainted with him." It was held that this was a substantial compliance with the requisition of the statute, being equivalent to the declaration that "he personally knew him." Delauney v. Burnett, 9 Ill. 454.

Intimate Acquaintance. (See also the title TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.)—The California Code makes competent evidence the opinion of an intimate acquaintance as to the sanity of a person. In construing this phrase the court in Carpenter's Estate, 94 Cal. 414, says: "The phrase intimate acquaintance cannot include all acquaintances. Worcester, under the word acquaintance, has the following: 'Acquaintance expresses less than familiarity; familiarity less than intimacy. Acquaintance springs from occasional intercourse; familiarity from daily intercourse; intimacy from unreserved intercourse. Acquaintance, having some knowledge; familiarity, from long habit; intimacy, by close connection.'"

In People v. Levy, 71 Cal. 618, it is said: "It is often a difficult question to determine whether the witness is sufficiently acquainted with the party to entitle him to speak. That the witness should be familiar with the temperament and habits of mind of the person whose soundness is in question, there is no doubt."

Certificate.—"Acquainted," when Used in a Certificate, means having a substantial knowledge of the subject matter of the paper to which the certificate is affixed. Bohan v. Casey, 5 Mo. App. 101. In this case it was held immaterial whether an officer taking a married woman's acknowledgment read the paper to her or had her state the contents to to him.

Acquainted means familiarly knowing. Chauvin v. Wagner, 18 Mo. 544. And in that case it was held that a certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment was sufficient where it stated that she was acquainted with the contents.

Personally Acquainted with.—To be "personally acquainted with" and to "know personally" are equivalent phrases. Kelly v. Calhoun, 95 U. S. 710. Compare Wyllis v. Haun, 47 Iowa 621.

Naturalization—Perjury.—The defendant, upon the application of a foreigner for naturalization, testified that he was acquainted with the applicant. Upon his indictment for

ACQUETS AND CONQUETS. (See also the title COMMUNITY PROPERTY.)—In the civil law acquets and conquets mean the property jointly acquired by husband and wife.¹

ACQUIESCENCE. (See the titles ESTOPPEL; LACHES; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS; WAIVER. And see ENCYC. PL. AND PR., titles LACHES; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.)—Acquiescence is where a person who knows that he is entitled to impeach a transaction or enforce a right neglects to do so for such a length of time that under the circumstances of the case the other party may fairly infer that he has waived or abandoned his right.²

perjury the applicant testified that he had never known the defendant. It was held that acquainted implied mutual acquaintance, and that a verdict of guilty could not be set aside. U. S. v. Jones, 14 Blatchf. (U. S.) 90.

Fire Insurance.—As to certificate of loss from a magistrate acquainted with the assured, see Etna F. Ins. Co. v. Tyler, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 385, and also the title FIRE INSURANCE.

1. Picotte v. Cooley, 10 Mo. 318.

2. Scott v. Jackson, 89 Cal. 262.

Other Definitions.—"If a person having a right, and seeing another person about to commit, or in the course of committing, an act infringing upon that right, stands by in such a manner as really to induce the person committing the act, and who might otherwise have abstained from it, to believe that he assents to its being committed, he cannot afterwards be heard to complain of the act. This, as Lord Cottenham said in Leeds v. Amherst, 2 Ph. 117, 16 L. J. Ch. 5, 10 Jur. 956, is the proper sense of the term acquiescence, and in that sense it may be defined as quiescence under such circumstances as that assent may be reasonably inferred from it, and is no more than an instance of the law of estoppel by words or conduct." Per Thesiger, L. J. De Bussche v. Alt, 8 Ch. Div. 286, 47 L. J. Ch. 381, 38 L. T. 370.

"This word does not mean simply an active intelligent consent, but will be implied if a person is content not to oppose irregular acts which he knows are being done." Per Cairns, L. C. Evans v. Smallcombe, 37 L. J. Ch. 793, L. R. 3 H. L. 249.

Acquiescence Distinguished from Laches.—In Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, it was held that the acquiescence which will bar a complainant from the exercise in his favor of the discretionary jurisdiction of a court of equity, in a suit for an injunction, must be such as proves his assent to the acts of the defendant, and to the injuries to himself which have flowed, or can reasonably be anticipated to flow, from those acts. The court said: "In the decisions of the reported cases, however, 'laches' has sometimes been employed as the equivalent of 'mere delay,' and sometimes 'laches' or 'gross laches' as the equivalent of acquiescence. It is therefore important to consider the context in connection with which either of these expressions has been used by a judge, in order to ascertain in what sense it is employed. Speaking of the distinction between laches and acquiescence, Wood remarks: 'While the words "laches" and acquiescence are often used as similar in meaning, the distinction in their import is both great and important. "Laches" imports a merely passive, while acquiescence implies active, assent; and while, when there is no statutory limitation applicable to the case, courts of equity would discourage laches, and refuse relief after great and unexplained delay, yet, when there is such a statutory limitation, they will not anticipate it, as they may when acquiescence has existed. Laches, in fact, amounts only to that inferior species of acquiescence described in the following terms by Lord Kindersley in Rochdale Canal Co. v. King, 2 Sim. N. S. 78: 'Mere acquiescence (if by acquiescence is to be understood only abstaining from legal proceedings) is unimportant; where one party invades the right of another, that other does not in general deprive himself of the right of seeking redress merely because he remains passive, unless, indeed, he continues inactive so long as to bring the case within the purview of the statute of limitations.' (Wood on Limitations, § 62.) In cases of concurrent jurisdiction, or where the statute is express, equity will sometimes refuse relief before the statute has run. 'But,' says the same writer, 'this is only in rare and exceptional cases, where the party can be said to have acquiesced in the wrong of which he complains' (§ 59); and the same is said in effect in Reed v. West, 47 Tex. 240." Compare Allen v. McKeen, 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 276; Evans v. Smallcombe, L. R. 3 H. L. 249.

Implied Contract.—Acquiescence—that is, assent—is tantamount to an agreement. It is an implied contract, and it requires for its validity the power to contract. Matthews v. Murchison, 17 Fed. Rep. 766.

Mere Submission.—In Allen v. McKeen, 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 276, it was held that where a college expressed itself as having merely acquiesced in an act of legislature, this meant a submission to the legislative will, and not approbation or assent.

Knowledge.—Acquiescence and waiver are always questions of fact. There can be neither without knowledge. The terms import this foundation for such action. One cannot waive or acquiesce in a wrong while ignorant that it has been committed. Current suspicion and rumor are not enough. There must be knowledge of facts which will enable the party to take effectual action. Pence v. Langdon, 99 U. S. 581; Scotland L. Assoc. v. Siddal, 3 De G. F. & J. 74. See also Redgrave v. Hurd, 20 Ch. Div. 1, 51 L. J. Ch. 113, 45 L. T. 485, 30 W. R. 251.

Suit—Ultra Vires Acts. (See also the title

ACQUIRED.—This term is frequently used in statutes prescribing rules of property, to denote the property to which the rules shall apply. The construction of the word as thus used will be found in the note.¹

ULTRA VIRES.—Acquiescence, or tacit assent to ultra vires acts, is defined to mean neglect to promptly and actively condemn the unauthorized act by suit. Kent v. Quicksilver Min. Co., 78 N. Y. 159; Rabe v. Dunlap, 51 N. J. Eq. 48.

Suit—Easements.—But it has been held that it is not necessary to bring an action in order to show that a person has not "submitted to or acquiesced in" an interruption of an easement within section 4, English Prescription Act, 2 & 3 Wm. IV., c. 71. Acquiescence under that section is a question of fact. Bennison v. Cartwright, 5 B. & S. 1, 117 E. C. L. 1. See also Glover v. Coleman, L. R. 10 C. P. 108.

Ancient Lights. (See also the title ANCIENT LIGHTS.)—In order to negative submission to, or acquiescence in, an interruption to twenty years' enjoyment of a light, it is not necessary that the party interrupted shall have brought an action or suit, or taken any active steps to remove the obstruction; it is enough to show that he has in a reasonable manner communicated to the party causing the interruption that he does not really submit to or acquiesce in it. Glover v. Coleman, L. R. 10 C. P. 108. See also Bennison v. Cartwright, 5 B. & S. 1, 117 E. C. L. 1.

1. Land Obtained by Descent.—The Tennessee Code provides for the devolution of land where the estate was acquired by the intestate and he dies without issue. In In re Miller, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 60, the court said: "The word acquired was used in the broad sense, so as to cover lands which might come to the intestate in any other way than 'by gift, devise, or descent from a parent or the ancestor of a parent.' The case of Penniman v. Francisco, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 511, was correctly decided, the facts bringing it clearly within the first subdivision of section 2420 of the code. But if the father of the intestate had been dead, there would have been no provision for the further descent of the property in that case except under the second subdivision. The suggestions of the chief justice that the intestate did not acquire the title within the section, because she inherited it from her granduncle, was obiter not necessary to the decision, and, in the light of a more critical examination upon a state of facts requiring it, incorrect." In Roberts v. Jackson, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 308, it was held, under the Tennessee statute of 1784, which provided for the succession of the parents of an intestate child to real estate "actually purchased or otherwise acquired" by him, that the word acquired was used in a limited sense, not embracing acquisitions by descent from the parents. To the same effect is Hoover v. Gregory, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 451.

Property Obtained by Devise.—The charter of a corporation authorized it "to acquire, hold, and convey property, real and personal." It was contended that this did not enable the corporation to take by will. The court said: "The grant of power here by the charter is,

'to acquire, hold, and convey property, real and personal;' and the point is made that the word acquire is not broad enough to include a taking by devise—that the word implies some element of effort on the part of the one who acquires. In judicial opinions, and by law writers, the term is not unfrequently used otherwise, and as coming to property by devise or descent, as well as in any other mode. Thus Blackstone says: 'Descent, or hereditary succession, is the title whereby a man, on the death of his ancestor, acquires his estate by right of representation as his heir at law.' 2 Blackst. Com. 201. We have no doubt that the power granted to acquire property is broad enough to enable the corporation to take by will." Female Academy v. Sullivan, 116 Ill. 389.

Community Property. (See also the title COMMUNITY PROPERTY.)—A Texas statute provides that property acquired by husband or wife during marriage shall be deemed community property. In Bishop v. Lusk (Tex. Civ. App., 1894), 27 S. W. Rep. 306, it was held that property held by adverse possession, without paper title, is not acquired within the meaning of the statute until the period of limitation has run. Under a similar Arizona statute it was held that the word acquired was not intended to include a purchase made by the wife with her separate estate. Liebes v. Steffy (Arizona, 1893), 32 Pac. Rep. 261.

Separate Property of Married Woman. (See also the title SEPARATE PROPERTY OF MARRIED WOMEN.)—Where a statute provided that the wife should have a separate estate in property acquired by her during marriage, it was held that the word acquired referred to the actual possession and control of the property rather than to the acquisition of mere title. Alexander v. Alexander, 85 Va. 368. See also Williams v. Lord, 75 Va. 398; White v. Waite, 47 Vt. 507.

Right Acquired.—A clause in a California statute prohibited the impairing of rights acquired under a provision which the act repealed. The right to resort to an arbitrary presumption of detriment in an action for the conversion of personal property was held not to be a "right acquired" within the meaning of the act. Tulley v. Tranor, 53 Cal. 274.

After-acquired Property. (See the title FUTURE-ACQUIRED PROPERTY.)

By Deserted Wife—English Statute.—Moneys of a deserted wife not reduced into possession by her husband before desertion, and payable after desertion, are acquired by the wife after the desertion within § 21, 20 & 21 Vict., c. 85, Nicholson v. Drury Bldg. Estate Co., 47 L. J. Ch. 192, 7 Ch. Div. 48; Cooke v. Fuller, 26 Beav. 99; but rents of the wife's leaseholds received after her desertion by an agent appointed by her before the marriage are not within the word. Kingsman v. Kingsman, 50 L. J. Q. B. 81, 6 Q. B. Div. 122. See also In re Insole, 35 L. J. Ch. 177, 35 Beav.

ACQUITTAL. (See also ACQUITTED, and the title JEOPARDY.)—The word acquittal is verbum equivocum, and may in ordinary language be used to express either the verdict of a jury or the formal judgment of the court that the prisoner go thereof without day.¹

ACQUITTANCE. (See also ACCOUNTABLE RECEIPT, Vol. I., p. 432, and the titles FORGERY; RELEASE; RECEIPT.)—This word denotes a release or written discharge of a sum of money or debt due, usually in the form of a receipt.²

1. Burgess v. Boetefeur, 7 M. & G. 481, 49 E. C. L. 481.

“‘To acquit him:’ acquite is compounded of ad, and the old verbe quietare, and signifieth in law to discharge, or keep in quiet, and to see that the tenant be safely kept from any entries, or other molestation for any manner of service issuing out of the land to any lord that is above the mesne. And hereof cometh Acquittal and quietus est (that is) that he is discharged; and he that is discharged of a felony, etc., by judgment, is said to be acquitted of the felony, acquiescens de felonia; and if he be drawen in question againe, he may plead auterfoits acquitte.” (Co. Litt. 100a).

Former Acquittal and Dismissal of Indictment.—Where the accused was arraigned, a jury impaneled and sworn, and the cause given them in charge, no objection being interposed by the accused to the indictment or other proceedings, it was held that the dismissal of the indictment for an alleged insufficiency, which did not really exist, operated as an acquittal of the defendant. Lee v. State, 26 Ark. 260, 7 Am. Rep. 611.

Former Acquittal—Discharge of Jury.—Where a juror was discharged without the consent of the defendants (in a case of misdemeanor only) because the district attorney was not prepared with evidence to support the prosecution, such a discharge was equivalent to an acquittal, and the defendants could never be brought to trial again for the same offense. People v. Barrett, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 304, 2 Am. Dec. 239. So when the accused in a criminal prosecution is put upon trial, on a valid indictment, before a legal jury, and the jury is discharged by the court without good cause, and without the consent of the defendant, he has incurred the first peril, and the discharge of the jury is equivalent to an acquittal. State v. Walker, 26 Ind. 346. See also Klock v. People, 2 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.), 676; Com. v. Cook, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 577, 9 Am. Dec. 465; Mount v. State, 14 Ohio 295, 45 Am. Dec. 542; and the title JEOPARDY.

Acquittal must be Final.—In Bailey's Case, 1 Va. Cas. 261, it was said: “An acquittal must be final; so must a conviction. The court have neither acquitted nor convicted, for they have sent him hither to be tried for the offense of manslaughter. Here then the opinion of the court is neither an acquittal nor a conviction, but merely an opinion that he must be tried before a court having competent jurisdiction of the case, who may thereafter acquit or convict, as the case shall appear before them.”

Appeal by State in Criminal Cases—“Quashed.”

—Under a statute giving the state a right of appeal in certain cases it was contended that the defendant's case did not fall within the statute because of the use of the word acquittal, and in his case the warrant was quashed. It was held that an appeal would lie. The court said: “This view of the section is founded upon the use of the word acquittal therein. Ordinarily in criminal jurisprudence it means a discharge after a trial, or an attempt to have one, upon its merits; but has acquittal as used in our statute no other or different signification than a judgment for defendant on a trial on the facts and merits of the action? * * * The wording of section 298 fairly implies that acquittal is not confined in its meaning to a judgment in favor of defendant after a trial on the merits and facts of a case, but may also, and as there used does, have the broader signification of a discharge by a judgment rendered for other reasons. We feel authorized to give it such meaning in section 288.” Junction City v. Keefe, 40 Kan. 273.

Pardon Distinguished from Acquittal.—In Younger v. State, 2 W. Va. 584, the court said: “To the prisoner a pardon is not equal to an acquittal—to which the case supposes he is entitled. His reputation and character are much more affected by the one than the other. A pardon discharges from punishment; an acquittal, from guilt. Pardon may rescue him from the penitentiary or a halter, but it cannot redeem him from the infamy of conviction.”

2. “A discharge, acquittance, or release—call it what you will—is as valid without a seal as with it.” Milliken v. Brown, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 398; Wentz v. Dehaven, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 312.

Forgery—Clearance.—The document called a “clearance,” issued by friendly societies, which purports to be a certificate that the member receiving it has paid all dues and demands up to a certain date, is not an “acquittance or receipt for money” within section 23 of 24 & 25 Vict., c. 98. Reg. v. French, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 217.

Forgery—Script.—A script certificate in a railway company is not an “accountable receipt” nor an “acquittance or receipt” within the meaning of the 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV., c. 66, § 10. Clark v. Newsam, 1 Exch. 131. See also West's Case, 1 Den. C. C. 258.

Forgery—Bill of Parcels.—To a bill of parcels of the following tenor, viz., “Mr. J. L. bought of E. & C.—the above charged to G. C.” the purchaser, J. L., added these words: “By order E. & C.,” it was held that this addition amounted to an acquittance of J. L., and was a forgery within the statute of 1804, c. 620, § 1. Com. v. Ladd, 15 Mass. 526.

Forgery—Memorandum.—A memorandum importing that one had paid a sum to another, but not importing any acknowledgment from that other of his having received it, is not such a receipt and acquittance as the statute 2 Geo. II., c. 25, § 1, makes it capital to forge and utter. R. v. Harvey, 1 Russ. & Ry. 227.

Forgery—Receipt.—A receipt for money as part of the purchase price of a farm is an acquittance within the statute of forgery, and an indictment for forgery thereof is good without charging any extrinsic dealings between the parties. The court said: "The word 'acquittance,' although perhaps not strictly speaking synonymous with receipt, includes it. A receipt is one form of an acquittance; a discharge, another. It is not questioned but that a receipt in full is an acquittance. Why, therefore, is not a receipt for a part of a demand or obligation an acquittance pro tanto? We are aware that lexicographers do not fully agree as to this; but in legal proceedings a receipt is regarded as an acquittance. See 2 Bish. Crim. Law, § 557; Rex v. Martin, 7 C. & P. 549, 32 E. C. L. 626; Reg. v. Houseman, 8 C. & P. 180, 34 E. C. L. 344; Reg. v. Atkinson, C. & M. 325, 41 E. C. L. 181; Com. v. Ladd, 15 Mass. 526; Whart. Prec. Ind. 383." State v. Shelters, 51 Vt. 102.

Forgery—Banker's Receipt.—Where A, having possession of a banker's receipt given upon a deposit of money, and conditioned that the money should be repaid on delivery of the receipt, wrote the name of the depositor across the face of the receipt, and delivered it up to the banker, and thereby fraudulently obtained the money, it was held he might be convicted of having forged an acquittance. Reg. v. Atkinson, 2 Moo. C. C. 278.

Distinguished from Release.—In Mitchell v. Pratt, Taney (U. S.) 448, it was held that a paper purporting to be a receipt by a seaman to the master of his vessel for twenty-five cents, "for assault and battery, in full of all dues and demands," with a witness's name to it, and on which are two wafer seals (in the absence of proof that either of the seals is that of the person giving the receipt), cannot operate as a release, in the technical sense of that word, as known to the common law. Such receipt may operate as an acquittance given upon the compromise and settlement of an unliquidated and disputed claim for damages for the assault.

1. Morgan County v. Johnson, 31 Ind. 467; Dollaway v. Turrill, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 400.

Malicious Prosecution—Acquittal by Jury.—In Thomas v. De Graffenreid, 2 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 143, where the declaration in an action for malicious prosecution set forth that the plaintiff had been acquitted, the court said that the word acquitted was a word of technical import, and must be understood in its technical sense, to wit, an acquittal on trial by jury; and where the proof showed that the grand jury had rejected the bill, this was held a fatal variance. To the same effect are Hester v. Hagood, 3 Hill (S. Car.) 196; Shock v. M'Chesney, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 473. And in Law v. Franks, Cheves (S. Car.) 9, it was held that an allegation that plaintiff was discharged is not supported by proof of an acquittal.

So in Morgan v. Hughes, 2 T. R. 231, it is said: "Saying that the plaintiff was 'discharged' is not sufficient; it is not equal to the word acquitted, which has a definite meaning. Where the word acquitted is used, it must be understood in the legal sense, namely, by a jury on the trial." See also Jones v. Gwynn, 10 Mod. 214.

But where the declaration stated "that the plaintiff had been acquitted by the grand jury's finding 'no bill,' and that the said prosecution is wholly ended and determined, and he, the said plaintiff, wholly discharged therefrom, as by the records and proceedings thereof remaining in the said court appears," the court held that it was a sufficient statement of the discharge of the plaintiff from the prosecution, and said: "But, secondly, it is contended that the proof did not support the allegation in the declaration; that the declaration alleges that he was acquitted, whereas the proof was that the grand jury found no bill against him, which was not in contemplation of law an acquittal. And in support of that ground the case of Thomas v. De Graffenreid, 2 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 143, is relied on. But that case is very distinguishable from this. In that case it was set forth in the declaration that the plaintiff had been acquitted, without specifying in what manner. The court held that acquitted was a technical word which meant acquitted on trial by petit jury, and being used without any qualification must be understood in its technical sense, and therefore showing that the grand jury had rejected the bill did not support the declaration. But in the case now under consideration it is stated that he was 'acquitted by the grand jury's finding no bill.' The manner of acquittal is set out in such a way as to show that it was not intended to be used in its technical sense. And although when a technical word is used without any qualification the court will give it its technical meaning, yet when it is accompanied with such qualifications as show that it was intended to be understood in a different sense, it will be taken with such qualifications. And although the declaration may not be drawn in the most technical form, I do not know that the facts

ACRE.—See note 1.

ACROSS.—This word means, in its common acceptation, from one side to the other, unless there is evidence that the parties intended to use it in a different sense.²

could have been set out with more precision. If it had been 'discharged' instead of acquitted, it is admitted that it would have been sufficient. And in common parlance, I think acquitted is as clearly expressive of the idea intended to be conveyed as 'discharged.' It is frequently used in that sense by the best pleaders, as will be seen by reference to the precedents. Chitty, giving the form of a declaration for maliciously charging the plaintiff of felony before a justice of the peace and causing him to be imprisoned on a warrant until he was discharged by the justice, concludes with saying, 'The said justice adjudged and determined that the said A B (the prisoner) was not guilty of the said supposed offense, and then and there caused the said A B to be discharged out of custody, fully acquitted and discharged' (2 Chitty's Plead. 250-1). It is not unusual to find it in all legal proceedings used in its vulgar sense, and it is only when it is used in reference to proceedings which seem to require that it should receive a technical application, and then without any qualification, that the court will be bound to understand it in that sense." Teague v. Wilks, 3 McCord (S. Car.) 461. Compare cases cited supra.

Civil as well as Criminal Cases.—In Dolloyway v. Turrill, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 400, it was held that the term acquitted referred as well to civil as to criminal prosecutions.

Nolle Prosequi Entered.—In Indiana, the clerk is not entitled to "extra services" where defendant is acquitted. It was held that he was not entitled where a nolle prosequi was entered. The court said: "Webster defines acquitted thus: 'Set free, or judicially discharged from an accusation; released from a debt, duty, obligation, charge, or suspicion of guilt.' So that when a nolle prosequi is entered and the defendant discharged, he is acquitted of the prosecution. The proper judgment in such cases is, that the 'defendant go hence acquit,' etc. And we think it very clear that such is the sense in which the word is used in the act." Morgan County v. Johnson, 31 Ind. 466.

1. "By the grant of an acre of land doth pass so much as is an acre by measure in that country, by the ordinary count and measure of the country." Shep. Touch. 95; Co. Litt., 5 B; O'Donnell v. O'Donnell, L. R. 13 Ir. 227.

Tax Assessment.—A prosecutor owned ten acres of upland and claimed a right of reclamation over twenty acres of land under water. It was held that a valuation of the whole "as thirty acres of land," at so much per acre, did not invalidate the tax. The court said: "So here the term 'acres of land' must be treated as describing the prosecutor's interests in the land, whatever they were; and the phrase '$17,500 per acre,' as indicating not the value of each acre by itself, but only a basis of calculation upon which the value of the prosecutor's rights in the whole tract may be computed." State v. Yard, 43 N. J. L. 124.

2. Under a grant of a right of way across the plaintiff's lot of land, the grantee was held not to have a right to enter at one place, go partly across, and then come out at another place on the same side of the lot. Comstock v. Van Deusen, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 163.

To the word across, unless it is qualified by some prefix, as "diagonally" or "obliquely," there is attached, in ordinary use, but one meaning, and that is a direction opposite to length. This is especially true when it is used in connection with parallel lines. Hannibal, etc., R. Co. v. Missouri River Packet Co., 125 U. S. 260. Compare Brown v. Meady, 10 Me. 395.

"Over" Synonymous with "Across."—The two words "over" and across may be used interchangeably, and as having the same meaning. Webster thus defines the word across: "From side to side; athwart; crosswise; quite over." Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Chicago, 141 Ill. 598.

Across Land Reserved.—Narrowest Point.—The grantor in a deed reserved to himself the right of passing and repassing with teams, in the most convenient place, across the land conveyed. It was held that the term across did not necessarily confine the right of way to crossing the lot at its narrowest dimensions. The court said: "The word across may mean 'over'; it does not necessarily exclude the idea of passing over a parallelogram in a longitudinal direction. To pass across a bridge is a common expression, but does not mean to pass from one side of it to the other." Brown v. Meady, 10 Me. 395, 25 Am. Dec. 248. Compare Hannibal, etc., R. Co. v. Missouri River Packet Co., 125 U. S. 260.

Across, Along, or Upon a Highway.—In Burt v. Lima, etc., R. Co. (Supreme Ct.), 21 N. Y. Supp. 432, it was held, where a railroad company was authorized to construct its road across, along, or upon any highway, that the occupation and use of the highways contemplated by the statute was to be casual or incidental, and that the grant did not authorize the railroad to build its entire line upon a highway between two villages.

Across the Waters of a Stream.—An act authorized a company to take toll for timber floated across the waters of the stream. It was held that this did not mean merely from one side to the other. The court said: "The exception also that the master should have found that the company was only authorized to take tolls for logs or timber floated across the waters of the stream is somewhat hypercritical. It cannot be held to mean floating or crossing over from side to side of the stream, as the word imports: a thing not needed, or within the purview or purpose of the act. The words are found in the same connection in the supplement to the act incorporating the Little Anderson Creek Navigation Company, a precisely similar improvement company, and were adopted by the framer of the act incorporating the Bennett's Branch Improvement Company. The object of this act, as was the Anderson Creek Company, was to improve the descending navigation of the stream for logs and lumber, and not to improve its crossings with lumber, and this is so said in every part of the act but in this single instance. We must construe the expression in subordination to the declared purposes of the act, and in accordance with all its provisions, and so the learned master and court construed it, and they could do no otherwise." Bennett's Branch Imp. Co.'s Appeal, 65 Pa. St. 251.

ACT. (See also ACTING, and the title STATUTES.)—In the legal sense this word may be used to signify the result of a public deliberation; also a decree, edict, law, judgment, resolve, award, determination. When a bill is duly passed by a legislative body it becomes an act of that body; that is, a thing done.¹ Illustrations of its popular use will be found in the note.²

Distinguished from "Upon," "Over," "In."—A charter of a street railway authorized it to construct its tracks "upon" and "over" certain streets, "except in" such as shall be fixed upon by the city council. It was held that this did not prevent the company from laying its tracks across one of the excepted streets. The court said: "It will be observed that the prepositions used in the language quoted to describe where the railway or railways may be constructed are 'upon' and 'over,' and that the preposition used for the excepted streets is 'in,' the preposition across being nowhere employed. This is significant; for to say of a railway that it is built upon, over, or in a street, which it merely crosses when following the course of another street, is not according to common usage." State v. Newport St. R. Co., 16 R. I. 533; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Dunbar, 100 Ill. 137.

Across Country.—The contract declared upon, and proved by the memorandum produced, was that the horses were to run four miles "across a country." The court said: "That is an expression of which we cannot take judicial notice. The meaning of that expression was a question for the jury, to be decided by them upon the evidence before them. The evidence showed that by this expression the rider is excluded from riding through an open gate." Evans v. Pratt, 3 M. & G. 762, 42 E. C. L. 396.

1. Chumaseo v. Potts, 2 Mont. 248.

An act is a statute or law made by a legislative body. People v. Tiphaine, 3 Park. C. Rep. (N. Y. Oyer & T. Ct.) 244.

"Act," "Bill," and "Law" Discussed. (See also BILL; LAW; and the title STATUTES.)—In discussing the meaning of the terms act, "bill," and "law" as used in constitutional provisions that no act, bill, or law shall contain more than one subject, the court in Sedgwick County v. Bailey, 13 Kan. 608, says: "The language of this constitutional provision differs in some respects in the different states. We shall notice some of these differences. In some of the states the word 'bill' is used, where in others the word act or 'law' is used. But, as the question is usually presented to the courts, it can probably make but little if any difference which one of the words is used. Each, as presented to the courts, means the final determination of the legislature upon the particular subject embraced in such 'bill,' act, or 'law.' The word act is probably the best word to use, for it includes no action of the legislature, or of any person, prior to the final passage of the act by the legislature, and it includes the whole of the act—nothing more and nothing less. The word 'law' is probably the worst word to use, for a portion of any act may be law, as well as the whole of the act. 'Law,' however, as here used, is intended to be synonymous with act. Our constitution, as well as those of Ohio, Nebraska, Pennsylvania, New York, Wisconsin, and perhaps some of the other states, uses the word 'bill.' The word 'bill' means the bill as it is first introduced into one of the houses of the legislature, and as it may at anytime be, in any of its stages, until it is finally passed by both houses of the legislature, signed by the officers of each house, signed by the governor, and filed away by the secretary of state, as the highest evidence of what the law is. When the bill is thus filed it is called the 'enrolled bill.' It is then the embodiment of the act—the law—that finally passed the legislature, and should contain but one subject, which subject should be clearly expressed in its title."

In Wahl v. Holt, 26 Wis. 703, it was held that the word "bill" in a statute was used synonymously with the words "law" or act.

In Southwark Bank v. Com., 26 Pa. St. 450, the court said: "A bill is the draft or form of an act presented to the legislature, but not enacted. An act is the appropriate term for it after it has been acted on by, and passed, the legislature. It is then something more than a draft or form. It has a legal existence as an act of the legislative body, because it becomes a law, without further action from any other branch of the government, if the executive take no measure to prevent it."

2. Act Complained of.—An English statute provided that an action against a justice of the peace for misconduct in office should be brought within six months after the act complained of. Where the act complained of was false imprisonment, it was contended that the action might be brought within six months after the quashing of the conviction. The contention was not allowed. The court said: "In argument it was contended that the six months might be construed to run from the quashing of the conviction; but the commitment is the act complained of, not the quashing of the conviction on the application of the party imprisoned. The quashing of the conviction is only a condition to the prosecution of the action, like the delivery of an attorney's bill, or the giving a notice of action; and there is nothing to determine in what order the conditions shall be complied with." Haylock v. Sparke, 1 El. & Bl. 471, 72 E. C. L. 471.

Whether "Act" Implies Intention. (See also the titles LIFE INSURANCE and ACCIDENT INSURANCE).—In Adkins v. Columbia L. Ins. Co., 70 Mo. 31, 35 Am. Rep. 410, where a policy provided against the death of the assured by "his own act and intention," it was contended that the word act necessarily implied intention. The court said: "While the words 'his own act and intention' have been construed to mean no more than the words, 'his own act,' on the ground that the word act necessarily implies intention (Chapman v. Republic L. Ins. Co., 6 Biss. (U. S.) 238), yet the addition of the word 'intention' shows that the parties were solicitous to avoid all question as to whether the policy was to be avoided by the physical act simply of the assured when unaccompanied by any corresponding intellectual purpose or act of the mind."

In Chapman v. Republic L. Ins. Co., 5 Fed. Cas. 481, case No. 2606; 6 Biss. (U. S.) 238, 4 Ins. Law J. 511, 7 Chi. Leg. News 186, 5 Bigelow Ins. Cas. 110, the court said: "The word act necessarily implies intention, and it seems to me the policy in this case differs in no material import from the one already decided by this court; that is to say, you get just as strong a sentence, and it means practically just as much, to say that the company shall not be liable if the assured comes to his death by his own act, sane or insane, as if you say the company shall not be liable if the assured comes to his death by his own act and intention, sane or insane."

Act or Device to Prefer a Creditor.—A Kentucky statute prohibiting any act or device in contemplation of insolvency, it was held that a transfer of choses in action came within these words. Taylor v. Taylor, 78 Ky. 470. See also the title INSOLVENCY.

Whether the Term Includes both Ministerial and Judicial Acts.—A Connecticut statute provided that no justice of the peace should act in any cause wherein he was attorney for either party, or had a pecuniary interest. It was held that by the term act judicial action alone was not intended, but every act or proceeding in a suit. Yudkin v. Gates, 60 Conn. 428. And in New Hartford v. Canaan, 52 Conn. 166, it is said: "This language is so exceedingly broad, embracing in terms any act and any proceeding (wherein the justice may be interested by reason of being an inhabitant and tax-payer in the town that is a party), that we do not feel at liberty to accept the ideas of the plaintiff's counsel and restrict its application exclusively to an actual trial in court before the interested magistrate."

"Act" Referring to Section of Statute.—The word act is generally used to designate the entire bill with all the parts adopted by a single effort of the legislative will; but the word may refer to a particular section in which it is used when the context indicates that such was the legislative intent. Satcher v. Satcher, 41 Ala. 26, 91 Am. Dec. 498. And to the same effect is Rawls v. Doc, 23 Ala. 249.

So in Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. Pack, 6 W. Va. 402, where in the re-enactment of a code a proviso was found that this act should not apply to any city or incorporated town, it was held that this referred to the preceding section. The court said: "The code is itself but one act of the legislature. No part of it, less than the whole, is properly designated as an act. So that if the proviso that this act shall not apply to any city or incorporated town was construed as if it was embodied in the code, the effect would be that no part of the code would apply to the inhabitants of any city or incorporated town. It cannot be supposed to have been the intention of the legislature, in this way, to exclude the body of the statute law of the state from operation in municipalities. To avoid such a conclusion, the legislative intent ordinarily indicated by this form of enactment must be discarded." And see Scheftels v. Tabert, 46 Wis. 444.

Real Covenants. (See also the title REAL COVENANTS).—"The covenant [i.e., for quiet enjoyment] is that the lessee should hold the premises without any lawful eviction, interruption, etc., by or from the lessor, or by or through her 'acts, means, right, title, forfeiture, privity, or procurement.' Now the word acts means something done by the person against whose acts the covenant is made; and the word 'means' has a similar meaning, something proceeding from the person covenanting." Spencer v. Marriott, 1 B. & C. 459, 8 E. C. L. 195, 2 D. & R. 665. See also Dennett v. Atherton, L. R. 7 Q. B. 316, 41 L. J. Q. B. 165, 20 W. R. 442; Stevenson v. Powell, 1 Bulstr. 182, Dart 884; Sug. V. & P. 602; Elph. 487, 488; 2 Platt 310.

All "reasonable acts," in a covenant for further assurance, mean such as the law requires, but do not include an unnecessary act. Warn v. Bickford, 9 Price 51. See also Pudsey v. Newsam, Yelv. 44; Dart 887; Sug. V. & P. 613. Or one that is impracticable. Elph. 493. See also REASONABLE.

ACTION.² (See also CAUSE; SUIT.)—An action is the lawful demand of one's right³ in a court of justice.⁴

1. Acting Officer.—The phrase "acting officer" is used to designate not an appointed incumbent, but merely a locum tenens who is performing the duties of an office to which he himself does not claim title. Fraser v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cl. 514.

Acting Attorney.—An English statute provided that no attorney should recover more than certain sums for appearing or acting on behalf of another in the County Court. In re Clipperton, 12 Q. B. 693, 64 E. C. L. 693. The court said: "We are further of opinion that the words 'acting on behalf of any other person' in the County Court include everything that is done by the attorney in regard to a suit in that court, whether before, or at, or after the hearing."

When the word is used in the expression "acting as attorney," it means no more than attending, and does not satisfy a statute which requires the attorney to state that he subscribes as such attorney. Everard v. Poppleton, 5 Q. B. 181, 48 E. C. L. 181.

Acting as Trustee.—Where a testator left certain property in trust, and declared that if either of the trustees should decline to act, the survivor of the trustees so acting should appoint other trustees, it was held that when both the trustees wholly declined to act in the trust, they had never been trustees so acting as to entitle them to appoint other trustees. Sharp v. Sharp, 2 B. & Ald. 405.

Consolidation of Railroads—Acting in the Sense of Operating.—Where it was agreed between consolidating railroads that one should be the "acting and controlling" company, the court in construing the agreement said: "The word acting, in the connection in which it is used above, does not signify, as argued, that this company was to be the 'agent' merely, and for a time, of the other companies. An agent is not, in reference to his principals, the 'controlling' person, but the reverse. Acting is used in the sense of operating. This was the operating and controlling company." Meyer v. Johnston, 64 Ala. 665.

Other Definitions.—An action is a lawful demand of one's right in the form given by law. Hall v. Decker, 48 Me. 255.

Action is a generic term, and means a litigation in a civil court for the recovery of an individual right or the redress of an individual wrong, inclusive, in its proper legal sense, of suits by the crown. Bradlaugh v. Clarke, 52 L. J. Q. B. 505. See also Atty.-Gen. v. Bradlaugh, 54 L. J. Q. B. 205, 14 Q. B. Div. 667, 52 L. T. 589, 33 W. R. 673.

An action is a judicial proceeding which will, if prosecuted effectually, result in a judgment. People v. Judge, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 398; People v. Colborne, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 380; Willey v. Shaver, 1 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 327.

As defined by Webster, an action is "a suit of justice; a claim made before a tribunal." Susquehanna Mut. F. Ins. Co.'s Appeal, 105 Pa. St. 615.

In In re Hunter's Will, 6 Ohio 501, this definition is given by the court: "I should define an action to be an abstract legal right in one person to prosecute another in a court of justice; and a suit, the actual prosecution of such right in a court of justice."

An action is an instrument whereby a party injured obtains redress for wrongs committed against him either in respect to his contracts, his person, or his property. Badger v. Gilmore, 37 N. H. 458.

An action is but the legal demand of a right, without regard to the form of the proceedings by which that right may be enforced. Or, as Bracton defines it, Actio nihil aliud est quam jus prosequendi in iudicio quod alicui debetur. Bridgton v. Bennett, 23 Me. 425.

New York.—An action is an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice, by which a party prosecutes another party for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense. New York Code Civ. Pro., § 3333; Ketchum v. Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 370; Austin v. Rawdon, 44 N. Y. 71; Bryan v. Wilkinson, 16 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Ct. App.) 281; Hallahan v. Herbert, 57 N. Y. 413; People v. Sturtevant, 9 N. Y. 268, 59 Am. Dec. 536.

California.—The definition of the California Code is the same as that of New York Code Civ. Pro., § 22. Hutchinson v. Ainsworth, 73 Cal. 455, 2 Am. St. Rep. 823.

Kansas.—And so in Kansas Code, § 6. Ames v. Kansas, 111 U. S. 460.

Distinguished from Suit.—Although the terms "suit" and "action" are frequently used interchangeably,¹ the former is the more comprehensive.²

1. McPike v. McPike, 10 Ill. App. 332; Magill v. Parsons, 4 Conn. 322; In re Receivership, 2 McCrary (U. S.) 180; Claffin v. Robbins, 1 Flipp. (U. S.) 605; Central Pac. R. Co. v. Dyer, 1 Sawy. (U. S.) 641; Page v. Brewster, 58 N. H. 126; Calderwood v. Calderwood, 38 Vt. 174; People v. Colborne, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 381; In re Hunter's Will, 6 Ohio 502; Clarkson v. Manson, 18 Blatchf. (U. S.) 448; Dullard v. Phelan, 83 Iowa 476; Miller v. Rapp, 7 Ind. App. 91.

Thus in Ex p. Milligan, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 112, it is said: "In any legal sense, action, suit, and cause are convertible terms."

And so "actions at law and suits at law are synonymous terms; they are one and the same thing." White v. Washington School Dist., 45 Conn. 61.

In Overseers of Poor v. Beedle, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 11, the court, by Allen, J., said: "The section under consideration provides that no 'suit' commenced, etc., shall abate, etc. The word 'suit' is here used in its modern sense, and as synonymous with action. A suit is defined to be 'the prosecution or presentment of some claim, demand, or request. In law language it is the prosecution of some demand in a court of justice.' (3 Story's Com. on Const., § 1719.) The words 'suit' and action are used as synonymous in the section of the statute now under consideration. By that section it is provided that 'the court in which any such action shall be pending shall substitute the names,' etc. A civil action is defined to be a legal demand of one's right; or it is the form of a suit given by law for the recovery of that which is due. Till judgment the suit is called an action. (Bouv. L. Dict., tit. Action.) A writ of error is not a suit or action, as those words are understood and used." See also Wilt v. Stickney, 15 Nat. Bank. Reg. 23. Compare Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 29.

2. Marion v. Ganby, 68 Iowa 142; McPike v. McPike, 10 Ill. App. 332; Ulshafer v. Stewart, 71 Pa. St. 174; Cornish v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 60 Wis. 476.

"Suit" is a term of wider signification than action, and may include proceedings on a petition. In re Wallis, L. R. 23 Ir. 7.

"Suit and action are often synonymous, though an action may be considered a form of a suit; and the latter is often applied to proceedings in equity, and actions to those at law, up to judgment." Hall v. Bartlett, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 300; Miller v. Rapp, 7 Ind. App. 91.

After Judgment — Execution. — According to Lord Coke, the word "suit" includes an execution, but the word action does not. Thus, if the body of a man be taken in execution, and the plaintiff releases all "suits," the execution is gone; but if he releases all actions, the defendant shall remain in execution. Co. Litt. 291 a; Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 29; People v. Colborne, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 381.

"Now the technical legal termination of an action is the judgment. All subsequent writs, whether of execution or scire facias, are new procedures, although founded upon the judgment. A suit till judgment is properly called an action, but not after; and therefore a release of all actions is regularly no bar to an execution." Tichenor v. Collins, 45 N. J. L. 124. See also Shields v. Lozeau, 34 N. J. L. 496, 3 Am. Rep. 256.

In Bolton v. Lansdown, 21 Mo. 400, it was held, where the saving clause in a statute of limitations provided that "the act shall not apply to actions brought before it takes effect," that this did not apply to executions. The court said: "The provision of the 32d article, that 'the act shall not apply to actions brought before it takes effect,' is referred to for this purpose, but cannot have the effect, unless we extend the meaning of the word action beyond its ordinary signification. It is said in Bacon's Abridgment (vol. i., 46, note b), 'The suit, till judgment, is properly called an action, but not after, and therefore a release of all actions is regularly no bar of an execution. (Co. Litt. 289 a; Roll. Abr. 291.)"

But under a statute which prescribed six years as the limitation of "actions against the sureties of executors, administrators, or guardians, for any misfeasance or malfeasance whatever of their principal, the time to be computed from the act done or omitted by their principal which fixes the liability of the surety" (Alabama Code, § 3226, subd. 7), the word actions, being liberally construed, was held to include a summary execution against the surety, on the return of "No property found" on an execution issued on a decree against his principal. Martin v. Tally, 72 Ala. 31.

Equity Proceedings.—Again, "suit" applies to proceedings both at law and in equity, while action is properly confined to proceedings at law. State v. Jennings, 56 Wis. 120; Didier v. Davison, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 515; People v. Colborne, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 381. But action may include proceedings in equity. Thompson v. Hubbard, 131 U. S. 150; Coatsworth v. Barr, 11 Mich. 199; Scott v. Smart, 1 Mich. 297; Corson v. Ball, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 452; Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 243.

"The statute gives them the right to maintain 'actions.' It does not say actions at law; but though the word actions is commonly used for suits 'at law,' it does not exclude suits in equity. All the definitions most familiar to lawyers give great latitude to the word. The old definition of Bracton, drawn from the civil law, and that of Lord Coke, have been kept alive and made familiar by constant quotation. An action, according to Bracton, is nihil aliud quam jus prosequendi in judicio quod sibi debetur; or, according to Lord Coke, 'a legal demand of one's right.' Blackstone (3 Com. 3) considers it 'a remedial instrument of justice, whereby redress is obtained for any wrong committed or right

In the notes will be found many illustrations of the scope of the term "action" as used in various connections, together with examples of various writs and proceedings which have been held to fall within the term, as well as those which have been held not to be included by it.¹

withheld.' Finally, Sellon, the most learned of the English writers on the practice of the court, says that it is 'the method prescribed by different statutes, or by the rules and practice of the respective courts, for the recovery of any debt due, or of an equivalent in damages for any injury sustained.' 1 Sellon's Pr. Intro. 72." Durant v. Albany County, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 86.

1. Suit in Admiralty Court.—In The Longford, 14 Prob. Div. 34, it was held that the word action did not apply to a suit in the Admiralty Court.

Appeal from Order of Removal in Settlement Case.—In Hildreth v. Overseers of Poor, 13 N. J. L. 5, it was held that appeals from orders of removal in settlement cases, and from orders of affiliation and maintenance were within the description "an action or suit of a civil nature."

Appeal from Probate. (See infra, this note, PROBATE PROCEEDINGS.)—A Connecticut statute provided that in an action by or against representatives, memoranda of the deceased might be received as evidence. It was held that an appeal from the probate of a will was not an action within the meaning of the statute. The court said: "The inquiry turns upon whether such an appeal is an action, by or against such representatives, within the meaning of that provision. That such appeal is an action within the intent of some statutory provisions (Gen. Statutes, § 794) is certain. 'But this is not an ordinary case, and has never been treated as such in this state, but as a statutory and special proceeding.' Livingston's Appeal, 63 Conn. 75. In reference, then, to such a proceeding, was it the intention of the legislature, by the provisions of the statute in question, to change the existing common law in regard to the entries and memoranda of alleged testators? It seems to us not, and that the case of Bissell v. Beckwith, 32 Conn. 509, and the opinion of this court by Baldwin, J., in the recent and still unreported case of Rowland v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 63 Conn. 415, abundantly show, first, that the statute should be construed according to the apparent intention of the legislature, to be gathered from the entire language used, in connection with the subject and the purpose of the law; and second, that such construction will not bring such appeal as the present within its purview. There was no error, therefore, in the ruling of the court below on this point." Barber's Appeal, 63 Conn. 413.

But in Stiles's Appeal, 41 Conn. 329, it was held that a statute providing that in any action pending in the Superior Court, if either of the parties shall die, his representative may enter and prosecute or defend, applied to appeals from courts of probate.

As Equivalent to Controversy.—A West Virginia statute provides that husband and wife shall not be examined against each other except "in an action or suit" between husband and wife. In Anderson v. Snyder, 21 W. Va. 645, it was held that the words "action or suit" are to be taken and held as synonymous with "controversy," and not merely as designating the particular mode in which a controversy may be presented to the court, and that the controversy must be between husband and wife.

Attachment.—In Jacoby v. Shafer, 105 Pa. St. 615, it is said: "It cannot be pretended that a proceeding by attachment for the purpose of collecting a debt is not an action in the full legal sense of the word."

Certiorari.—In People v. Court of Sessions, 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 431, it was held that a certiorari was not an action within the provisions of a statute providing that a successor in office should be substituted as party to an action upon the termination of his predecessor's term. Compare § 766 N. Y. Code Civ. Pro.

Claim Filed against the Estate of Decedent.—The Alabama Code provided that any action by or against a personal representative might be prosecuted by or against the successor of such personal representative who might be made a party by motion. It was held that a claim filed under an order of court against the estate of another decedent, and pending in that court for allowance or rejection, was an action within the statute. Reynolds v. Crook, 95 Ala. 570.

Confession of Judgment.—Where a statute provided for attorneys' fees in suits or actions, it was held that the act did not authorize the taxation of an attorney's fee, where a judgment was rendered by confession. Dullard v. Phelan, 83 Iowa 476.

Judgment on Bond and Warrant of Attorney.—But in Farrington v. Freeman, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 572, it was held that judgment obtained through a bond and warrant of attorney was a judgment in a personal action. The court said: "An action is defined to be the legal demand of one's right; and when it is brought to cover a debt, damages, or personal property, it is called a personal action. * * * Although no suit is pending when a bond and warrant of attorney are given, yet the very language of the latter instrument anticipates and recognizes the proceedings to be had by virtue of it as an action at law." But compare Livingston v. Harris, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 332.

Contempt.—In Johnston v. Com., 1 Bibb (Ky.) 600, it was held that proceedings for contempt were not an action. The court said: "The proceedings for contempts are not in their nature actions. * * * The person offending is not to be forever concluded of any right. There is not the presence of the three persons constituting a judgment; the award of punishment is made upon no consideration of a record before the court, it is but an order or rule upon the person; and the entry is without an ideo consideratum est."

Contested Election.—A contested sheriff's election before a justice of a county court was held not action within the meaning of a North Carolina statute entitling the successful party to costs. Patterson v. Murray, 8 Jones (N. Car.) 278.

Criminal Proceedings.—In Cannan v. Phillips, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 190, the court apparently confines the term action to civil proceedings. See also People v. Green, 1 Idaho 238; U. S. v. Ten Thousand Cigars, 1 Woolw. (U. S.) 125. But in Weeks v. Forman, 16 N. J. L. 243, it is said: "I conclude, therefore, that action is here used in the broader sense known to our law, which would include information, complaint, conviction, etc. It means no more than that the magistrate may hear, try, and determine any complaint or information of a breach of the law, convict the offender thereof, and thereupon adjudge the appropriate fine or amercement."

An Oregon act to prevent and punish gambling, made gambling a misdemeanor punishable by fine, and imprisonment until such fine was paid. The same act provided that all fines and forfeitures arising thereunder should be recovered by an "action at law," to be brought in the name of the state. It was held that a proceeding by indictment was an action at law within the meaning of this statute. State v. Carr, 6 Oregon 134.

Divorce Case.—In a statute providing for change of venue, a divorce case was held an action. Evans v. Evans, 105 Ind. 204.

Eminent Domain.—In Valentine v. Boston, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 201, it was held that proceedings to assess damages sustained by an owner of land in consequence of a highway being laid out over it were not an action.

Ex Parte Proceedings. (See infra, this note, PROBATE PROCEEDINGS.)—"An action is a lawful demand of one's right." Co. Litt. 285 a; 2 Institutes 40. "And such demand may be made judicially in an ex parte proceeding or application." Bruce v. Fox, 1 Dana (Ky.) 451.

Foreign Attachment was held a "suit" or action within the provision of an insurance policy. Harris v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 35 Conn. 310. And in Allen v. Partlow, 3 S. Car. 418, proceedings by foreign attachment were held to fall within the term action.

Habeas Corpus.—As to habeas corpus, see State v. Newell, 13 Mont. 305, and the title HABEAS CORPUS.

Insolvency Proceedings.—In Belfast v. Fogler, 71 Me. 403, it was held that proceedings in insolvency do not constitute an action within the meaning of that word as used in the Maine statute, saving pending actions from the effect of repealing statutes. See also Webster v. Androscoggin County, 63 Me. 27.

Mandamus. (See also the title MANDAMUS).—A proceeding by mandamus is an action at law within the meaning of a statute which provided that whenever any action at law should be tried by the Superior Court without a jury, the court should, upon the motion of either party, find the facts upon which its judgment was rendered, and make the finding a part of the record. State v. New Haven, etc., Co., 41 Conn. 134.

In People v. Colborne, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 380, mandamus was held an action. But compare Com. v. Lancaster County, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 8.

And in Chumaseo v. Potts, 2 Mont. 268, it is said that mandamus is not an action. The court said: "Burrill, in his Law Dictionary, in defining the term action, says: 'It is further to be observed that there are many judicial proceedings, conducted nearly in the same form as actions, before the same tribunals, and with the same general objects, viz., the enforcement of some legal right or remedy, which, nevertheless, are not technically considered as actions, nor so denominated. Of this description are the proceedings at law by writ of error, scire facias, mandamus, certiorari, habeas corpus, and the like.'"

So in People v. Sage, 3 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 57, it was held that a mandamus was not an action within the meaning of the statute providing that a court shall substitute the name of a successor in office upon the application of such successor or of the adverse party. The court said: "Is the proceeding by mandamus to be regarded as an action? If it is, the statute is imperative that the names of the successors to the defendants shall, upon the application of such successors, be substituted. The term 'action' means a legal demand of one's right, or, as it has been defined, it is 'the right of prosecuting to judgment for what is due to one's self.' The party complaining commences his action in his own name, and as a matter of right; but the writ of mandamus is only issued in the name of the people. It may be granted or withheld in the discretion of the court. Before a party is entitled to have it granted, he must show not only that he has a specific legal right to have the thing asked for done, but also that he is without a specific legal remedy."

Mechanic's Lien.—A proceeding in a justice of the peace's court under a mechanic's lien law was held an action in People v. Judge, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 400.

Penalty—Suit by Crown.—In Bradlaugh v. Clarke, L. R. 8 App. Cas. 354, the meaning of the term action is most elaborately considered. The case involved the construction of a penal statute, allowing a penalty of £500, "to be recovered by action in one of her Majesty's Superior Courts at Westminster," upon any member of the House of Commons, voting as such in the House, or sitting during any debate after the Speaker has been chosen, without having made and subscribed the oath thereby appointed. The question was whether this statute could be sued on by a common informer, or whether the crown alone could sue. The argument was wholly over the construction of the word action as used in the statute. It was held that the crown alone could sue, and that an action did not lie by a common informer. As Selborne, L.C., went into the subject very minutely, we quote at length from his opinion: "I am also satisfied, after full consideration, that the word action is (as Lord Justice Lush said) a generic term, inclusive, in its proper legal sense, of suits by the crown, and therefore not furnishing any sufficient ground for implying a right of action in a common informer. That it is used as nomen generalissimum in this particular statute seems probable, from the fact that it stands there alone without having superadded to it a number of other technical terms which are usually found associated with it in earlier statutes. Lord Coke (Coke Litt. 284b, 285a) adopts Bracton's definition of an action: 'Actio nihil aliud est quam jus prosequendi in iudicio quod alicui debetur.'

 In the third Institute he says: 'The king may have an action for such wrong as is done to himself, and whereof none other can have any action but the king, without being apprised by indictment, presentment, or other matter of record, as a quare impedit, quare incumbravit, a writ of attain, of debt, detinue of ward, escheat, scire facias pur repleader patent, etc. So also Fitzherbert: 'The king shall have an action of trespass.' In Comyn's Digest, 'Action' (B), the term is applied to various rights of suit by the crown, writ of right, writ of escheat, and other civil remedies, including debt and trespass; and in 'Action' (D) it is extended even to placita corone, or criminal proceedings, as it is also in Bacon's Abridgment ('Actions in General,' A). In the same abridgment it is said: 'The king, though the head and chief of his kingdom, may redress any injuries he may receive from his subjects by such usual common-law actions as are consistent with the royal prerogative and dignity.' And in Chitty, 'Prerogative,' p. 245: 'The general rule is that the king may waive his prerogative remedies and adopt such as are assigned to his subjects; he may maintain the usual common-law actions, as trespass quare clausum fregit, or for taking his goods.' These statements of the law are in accordance with the language of the statute 31 Eliz., c. 5, 'Concerning Informers,' which speaks of 'Actions, suits, bills, indictments, and informations,' with express reference to 'any forfeiture upon any statute penal, made or to be made, whereby the forfeiture is, or shall be, limited to the queen, her heirs or successors only.' Considering the nature of the subject with which that statute deals, I am not surprised at the reference which the appellant made to it in his argument at your lordship's bar. The conclusion to which I have been brought is that there is no difficulty in applying any part of the language of the clause in the Act of 1866, which creates the penalty sued for in the present action, to a suit by the crown; and, therefore, that no part of that language affords any sufficient ground for implying an intention on the part of the legislature to give a common informer, as well as the crown, a right of action for that penalty."

Petition for Location of a Highway.—In Webster v. Androscoggin County, 63 Me. 27, it was held that the word actions in a Maine statute, saving pending actions from the effect of future statutes, does not include a petition for the location of a highway pending before the county commissioners. The court said: "Is a petition for the location of a highway, pending before a board of county commissioners, an action pending, within this statute? A 'right of action' has been defined in the Roman law as jus prosequendi in iudicio sibi debetur." Coke declared that 'an action is a legal demand of a man's right.' And the action itself has been long considered to be the prescribed mode of enforcing a right in the proper tribunal. The pending petition is denominated a 'case' in section 6. But by R. S., c. 81, § 2, 'all civil actions except scire facias and other special writs shall be commenced by original writs,' etc., thus confining actions to courts of law. We think, therefore, that the word actions in c. 1, § 3, does not include petitions pending before the board of county commissioners, for the location of highways, and that the right of appeal was taken away from these appellants by the change of the statute above mentioned." See also Belfast v. Fogler, 71 Me. 403; In re Wallis, L. R. 23 Ir. 7.

Probate Proceedings. (See supra, this note, Appeal from Probate.)—A Wisconsin statute provides for change of venue where an impartial trial cannot be had in the county where the action is brought. It was held that this provision applied to the trial of issues of fact raised on appeal from the decision of the County Court in respect to admitting a will to probate. The court said: "It is true the word action is generally used in the chapter, but we do not suppose any restricted or technical meaning is to be given to that term as here used. It is broad enough in its signification to include this proceeding for the probate of a will." Jackman Will Case, 27 Wis. 412. But In re Hunter's Will, 6 Ohio 502, it was held that the application for probate of a will was not an action. The court said: "The application to make probate of a will is not included in the definition either of an action or suit. It belongs neither to the common-law nor equity jurisdiction conferred upon the courts of common pleas, but appertains to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the English courts, which is specially conferred upon our courts of common pleas as courts of probate. The proceeding to make probate of a will is ex parte, not adversary. No process is required to notify any whose interests are to be affected. No one is necessarily before the court other than the party applying to prove the will. No judgment is given. The order of probate is not conclusive upon the subject of it, for the statute law expressly provides a way in accordance with the common usages of chancery to contest and vacate the probate, if allowed. If rejected, another application may be made, and probate established on new and better proof."

In McBride's Appeal, 72 Pa. St. 480, it was held that the proceeding before the Orphans' Court in Pennsylvania for the distribution of the estate of a deceased wife was an action. See also Taylor v. Kelly, 80 Pa. St. 98.

Proceedings against the Executor or Administrator of a judgment debtor under the New York Code were held not to be an action, in Mills v. Thursby, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 432.

Removal Acts.—As to what constitutes a civil suit or action which may be removed from the state to the United States courts, see ENCYC. PL. AND PR., title REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

Replevin.—An action of replevin to recover damages is an action within the meaning of the Stat. 24 Geo. II., c. 44, which requires a plaintiff to demand a copy of the warrant of a justice under which an officer (defendant) acted before he brings his action. Pearson v. Roberts, Willes 668.

Scire Facias.—Scire facias is an action. People v. Clarke, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 150; Smyth v. Ripley, 33 Conn. 311; Ensworth v. Davenport, 9 Conn. 392; Fenner v. Evans, 1 T. R. 268; Grey v. Jones, 2 Wils. 251. See also Chestnut v. Chestnut, 77 Ill. 350.

In Gibbons v. Goodrich, 3 Ill. App. 590, it was held that scire facias to revive a judgment is an action within the meaning of the statute of limitations requiring all actions to be commenced within sixteen years.

In Pulteney v. Townson, 2 W. Bl. 1227, the question was whether scire facias was an action within the statute of 17 Car. II., which required bail upon writs of error. It was held that it was most clearly a personal action.

In Potter v. Titcomb, 13 Me. 36, scire facias was held to be an action subject to the statute of that state abolishing special pleading in civil actions.

In Gonnigal v. Smith, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 106, it is said that scire facias is a new action, and requires a new warrant of attorney.

In Greenway v. Dare, 6 N. J. L. 305, it is said further, scire facias is a new and independent action referring to the former proceedings, but wholly distinct from them.

In Kirkland v. Krebs, 34 Md. 93, the court says: "To the scire facias the defendant has a right to plead, and although generally termed a judicial writ it is classed and recognized by all the authorities as an action."

In Fenner v. Evans, 1 T. R. 267, a scire facias had been issued to revive a judgment entered prior to the Act of 17 Geo. III., c. 26, and execution had been taken out upon it. Upon a rule obtained to set aside the scire facias and execution, the question arose whether this proceeding was within the second section of that act, providing "that no action shall be brought on any such judgment already entered, etc." The court held that scire facias was an action within that section of the statute, and set aside both the writ and execution.

But in Heath v. Bates, 70 Ga. 636, it was held that a scire facias was not an action or suit, and that a former suit could not be pleaded in abatement to it. The court said: "In Bouvier's Law Dict., verbo Action, we find the distinction clearly marked out between an action in its legal sense and a suit of sci. fa. 'Actions,' he says, 'are to be distinguished from those proceedings, such as a writ of error, scire facias, mandamus, and the like, where, under the form of proceedings, the court, and not the plaintiff, appears to be the actor.' Citing Com. v. Lancaster County, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 9. A scire facias not being a suit or action, it follows that the pendency of a former suit cannot be pleaded in abatement to it, and hence the defense was properly disallowed by the court below." See, as supporting this view, Crisman v. People, 8 Ill. 351; Challenor v. Niles, 78 Ill. 78; Tichenor v. Collins, 45 N. J. L. 124.

Set-Off. (See also the title SET-OFF; and ENCYC. PL. AND PR., tit. SET-OFF.)—In Millet v. Watkins, 4 Bush (Ky.) 642, it was held that a set-off was neither, in the common or legal acceptation of the word, a suit nor an action; but in Warfield v. Gardner, 79 Ky. 586, it is said that by virtue of the code then in force the word action was to be construed to embrace a demand for a set-off or counterclaim.

It has generally been held, however, that although a set-off is in the nature of a cross action, and in the place and stead of a cross action, it is not an action. Taylor v. New York, 82 N. Y. 19.

The provision of the New York Code that no action on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace shall be brought in the same county within five years after its rendition, does not prevent parties thereto, and especially an assignee thereof, from using such judgment as a defense, set-off, or counterclaim. Clark v. Story, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 295.

So, notwithstanding the provision of the New York Code that "no action shall be brought upon a judgment rendered in any court of this State, except a court of justice of the peace, between the same parties, without leave of the court for good cause shown, on notice to the adverse party," it was held in an action upon contract, for goods sold and delivered, that the defendant might, without obtaining leave of court, set up in his answer, by way of set-off or counterclaim, a judgment recovered by him against the plaintiff before the suit brought by the latter was commenced. Wells v. Henshaw, 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 625.

Although by reason of the charter of a city no suit can be maintained upon a claim against it until after presentation to, and demand of payment from, an officer thereof, it was yet held that the claim may be set off in a suit against its owner by the city. Taylor v. New York, 82 N. Y. 10.

Notwithstanding the statute in Virginia (1 Va. Rev. Code 1819, p. 320, c. 85, § 23) prohibiting an action for clerk's fees until a return by the sheriff or sergeant, such fees were allowed as a set-off in Craigen v. Lobb, 12 Leigh (Va.) 630, the court citing Martin v. Winder, Doug. 199, note, and Bulman v. Birkett, 1 Esp. 449.

Under a statute providing that no attorney shall commence or maintain an action for the recovery of any fees, charges, or disbursements for business done by him until the expiration of one month after the delivery of a bill therefor, it has nevertheless been held that an attorney may set off his bill, although

ACTIVE TRUST. (See also the title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.)—Trusts are divided into two kinds: simple or passive, and active or special. In the former the trustee is passive and performs no duties, and the trust is therefore purely technical. In the latter he is active, being an agent to execute the donee's will, and the trust is operative.¹

it was not delivered a month before the commencement of the action; but it ought, if possible, to be delivered in time enough to be taxed, and at least should be delivered sufficiently early to prevent the plaintiff from being taken by surprise at the trial. Brown v. Tibbits, 11 C. B. N. S. 855, 103 E. C. L. 855, 31 L. J. C. P. 206; Martin v. Winder, Doug. 199, note; Bulman v. Birkett, 1 Esp. 449. See Harrison v. Turner, 10 Q. B. 482, 59 E. C. L. 481, and per Parke, B., Lester v. Lazarus, 2 C. M. & R. 669.

The Maine Process to Obtain Damages for Floating Land was held to be an action. Hall v. Decker, 48 Me. 255.

Used as Equivalent to a Right of Action.—Where a statute provided that an action for the death of a father should survive to the children upon the death of the widow, it was held that by action was meant right of action. David v. Southwestern R. Co., 41 Ga. 224.

Voluntary Submission to Court.—Judgment in a controversy voluntarily submitted without action by agreement of the parties is not a judgment in an action. Lang v. Ropke, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 701.

Writ of Error.—A writ of error has been held not to be an action within the provision of a statute permitting poor persons to sue in forma pauperis. Moore v. Cooley, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 412; McDonald v. New York Sav. Bank, 2 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 35.

In Overseers of Poor v. Beedle, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 11, a writ of error was held not to be an action within a statute providing that action should not abate under certain circumstances. But in Ulshafer v. Stewart, 71 Pa. St. 170, a writ of error was held an action.

"A proceeding in error is not properly an action within the meaning of the Code, and there is no express provision for reviving or continuing such proceedings in favor of or against the successor in interest of a party, or the representatives of a deceased party." Black v. Hill, 29 Ohio St. 88.

I. DEFINITIONS.—The expression "act of God" in the various connections in which it will be considered does not admit of satisfactory or accurate conception in the form of a definition,¹ though attempts to define it, of more or less ingenuity, have been and continue to be made. In a certain sense, every occurrence is mediately or immediately an act of God,² but it is with such happenings only as may have a legal significance that this article will deal. It will be found that the various definitions of the phrase differ rather in their mode of expression than in the substance of their meaning.

Lord Mansfield's Definition.—According to Lord Mansfield, by act of God is meant a natural necessity, which could not have been occasioned by the intervention of man, but proceeds from physical causes alone, such as the violence of the winds or seas, lightning, or other natural accident.³

1. Harper, J., in Ewart v. Street. 2 Bailey (S. Car.) 157, 23 Am. Dec. 132.

2. Green, J., in Gordon v. Buchanan, 5 Verg. (Tenn.) 81.

3. Lord Mansfield in Proprietors, etc., v.

Wood, 3 Esp. 127, and Forward v. Pittard, 1 T. R. 27. See also 2 Greenl. Ev. (14th ed.), § 209. Commenting on the above definition, the court in Fergusson v. Brelt, 12 Md. 9, 71 Am. Dec. 582, said: "This definition is

Other Definitions.—Again, it has been stated that the term “act of God” involves “some notion of an accident from natural causes, impossible to be foreseen, and therefore impossible to be guarded against.”¹ Still again, it is said about as accurate and specific as, perhaps, any that could be given. It excludes all circumstances produced by human agency, so that if divers causes concur in the loss, the act of God being one, but not the proximate cause, it does not discharge the carrier. To relieve him, the act of God must be the immediate cause of the loss, and without which it would not have occurred.”

This definition has been adopted in other cases. New Brunswick Steamboat, etc., Transp. Co. v. Tiers, 24 N. J. L. 697, 64 Am. Dec. 397; Reaves v. Waterman, 2 Spears (S. Car.) 197, 42 Am. Dec. 364.

Lightning, Tornadoes, Sudden Squalls—Exclusively Natural Violence.—In Friend v. Woods, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 189, 52 Am. Dec. 119, the court cites with approval a note to the case of Coggs v. Bernard, 1 Smith's Lead. Cas. (8th ed.) 199, where the American decisions are reviewed, and a definition given to the expression “act of God.” Here losses were ascribed to the act of God which “were occasioned exclusively by the violence of nature; by that kind of force of the elements which human ability could not have foreseen nor prevented; such as lightning, tornadoes, sudden squalls of wind.”

In Williams v. Branson, 1 Murph. (N. Car.) 417, 4 Am. Dec. 562, citing Abbot 169, Taylor, J., said that if a shallow were occasioned by a sudden and recent collection of sand in a place where ships could before sail in safety, the loss was attributable to the act of God or the perils of the sea.

Freshets—Changes of Channel—Deposits of Snags.—Frequent freshets, the continual changes of the channel, and deposits of snags thereby, arise immediately from no human agency and can be guarded against by no human skill, and hence come within the class of occurrences known as acts of God. Smyrl v. Niolon, 2 Bailey (S. Car.) 421, 23 Am. Dec. 146.

The Freezing of a Canal or a River upon which a common carrier was transporting goods has been held to be an act of God. Parsons v. Hardy, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 215, 28 Am. Dec. 521; Lowe v. Moss, 12 Ill. 477; West v. Steamboat Berlin, 3 Iowa 532; Vail v. Pacific R. Co., 63 Mo. 230; Harris v. Rand, 4 N. H. 259, 17 Am. Dec. 421; Worth v. Edmonds, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 40. Occurrences which might have been Anticipated.—But some authorities have held that the freezing of a canal or river does not constitute such an act of God as will excuse a carrier from resulting loss, on the ground that, at least in most cases, such an occurrence might have been anticipated. McGraw v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 18 W. Va. 365, 41 Am. Rep. 696. See also Cooper v. Young, 22 Ga. 272, 68 Am. Dec. 502; Engster v.

that by "act of God" is to be understood "any accident produced by physical causes which are irresistible; such as lightning, storms, perils of the sea, earthquakes, inundations, sudden death or illness."¹ Some authorities are content

Car.) 157, 23 Am. Dec. 132, while declaring that it was "difficult to define accurately the sort of accident which comes under the denomination "act of God," said that the act "seems to involve some notion of an accident from natural causes, impossible to be foreseen, and therefore impossible to be guarded against; such are the instances of storms, lightning, and tempests, enumerated by Lord Mansfield in Forward v. Pittard, 1 T. R. 33. Such is the instance of a shoal or bank unknown to navigators, or suddenly formed in the ocean."

In Long v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 147 Pa. St. 343, a flood of such extraordinary character that it could not have been foreseen or provided against was held to be an act of God.

Loss by Collision.—It has been necessary but rarely to determine the question whether a loss of goods by collision is within the exception of an act of God, for the reason that, generally, upon the shipment of goods a bill of lading is given, containing the exception of "perils of the sea and dangers of the river," or equivalent expressions. This point, however, has expressly arisen on several occasions, and has been decided in the negative. Plaisted v. Boston, etc., Steam Nav. Co., 27 Me. 132; Mershon v. Hobensack, 22 N. J. L. 372, 46 Am. Dec. 587; Lawrence v. McGregor, Wright (Ohio) 193.

In Hutchinson on Carriers, § 184, it is said: "Nor can a collision be claimed as the act of God; for no collision upon land can take place without the direct intervention of man, and if happening between vessels at sea in a tempest which made it inevitable, the tempest would be the vis major, and not the collision." Compare Hays v. Kennedy, 41 Pa. St. 378, 80 Am. Dec. 627.

It was decided in Plaisted v. Boston, etc., Steam Nav. Co., 27 Me. 132, 46 Am. Dec. 587, that the owners of a steamboat were liable for injury caused to the cargo by a collision, though no fault existed on the part of the carriers or their servants. The court first considered the question whether the disaster, as an inevitable accident, could be regarded as an act of God, and in that way the carrier exonerated; but the conclusion was reached that the two things, "act of God," and "inevitable accident," were by no means synonymous. The court said: "The accident in the case at bar as presented is no more referable to the act of God than is every event that occurs under his providence; and the collision having had its origin from the agency of man, without any concussion from any extraordinary violence of the elements, it must, in the absence of any modification of the general rule by the previous agreement of the parties, be held that the defendants are liable for the loss of the goods shipped by the plaintiff."

Lightning, Earthquakes, Tempests.—The term "act of God," said the court, in Central Line of Boats v. Lowe, 50 Ga. 511, "covers only natural accidents, such as lightning, earthquakes, tempests, and the like."

Sudden Gust of Wind.—The damage caused by a sudden gust of wind has been held attributable to the act of God. Nugent v. Smith, 1 C. P. Div. 423; The Lady Pike, 2 Biss. (U. S.) 141; Gillett v. Ellis, 11 Ill. 579.

Sudden Failure of Wind.—It seems that the sudden failure of wind may be regarded as much an act of God as the sudden violence of the wind. Thus, where a vessel was beating up the Hudson against a light wind, and while near the shore and on the point of changing tack, the wind suddenly failed, by reason of which the vessel drifted on the shore and soon sunk, it was held that the sudden failure of wind was an act of God, and the loss consequent thereupon was not chargeable to the carrier. Colt v. M'Mechen, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 160, 5 Am. Dec. 200.

Loss by Lightning—Fire from Other Cause.—In 3 Kent Com. (13th ed.) 217, it is said that a loss by lightning is within the exception of the act of God, but a loss by fire proceeding from any other cause is chargeable upon the ship-owner. See also Gilmore v. Carman, 1 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 279, 40 Am. Dec. 96. It has been held, however, that when a fire from burning woods was driven by a tornado into a town, and destroyed a lot of freight cars, the loss did result from an act of God. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Fries, 87 Pa. St. 234.

Great Chicago Fire.—In Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Sawyer, 69 Ill. 285, 18 Am. Rep. 613, it was held that a loss arising from the great fire in Chicago was not one arising from the act of God. Here it is said that by the act of God is meant something superhuman, or something in opposition to the act of man.

Vessel Striking on Rock.—In Williams v. Grant, 1 Conn. 487, 7 Am. Dec. 235, Swift, C. J., said: "Under the term 'act of God' are comprehended all misfortunes and accidents arising from inevitable necessity, which human prudence could not foresee or prevent." Applying this reasoning to the case at bar the same judge said: "If the situation of the rock was not generally known, and the master did not actually know it, then if he conducted properly in other respects, and no fault was imputable to him, his striking on the rock would be an act of God, an unavoidable accident, and he would not be liable for the loss." It would seem, however, to be the better doctrine to consider such accidents as more properly included in the class denominated "dangers or perils of the sea or river." And it has been expressly so held. In Steele v. McTyer, 31 Ala. 667, 70 Am. Dec. 521, the court decided that where a boat is wrecked upon a sunken log in the river bed, such loss is classed among the dangers of the river, and cannot properly be denominated a loss from the act of God, the

with the bare observation that an act of God is merely something superhuman, in contradistinction to the act of man.¹

II. THE EXPRESSIONS "INEVITABLE ACCIDENT" AND "PERILS OR DANGERS OF THE SEA OR RIVER" CONSIDERED.—To the non-definable character of the term "act of God" is perhaps due the confounding with it of various other phrases, of somewhat similar import.²

"Inevitable Accident" and "Act of God" Distinguished.—Thus it has been frequently maintained that the term "inevitable accident" is synonymous with "act of God."³ While it is clear that though every act of God is an inevitable accident, every inevitable accident is not an act of God.⁴

human agency directing the boat against the log being the immediate and direct cause of the loss. The court said: "Certainly it may have been, in some sense, by the act of God that the tree was thrown from its erect position and became fixed at the place where the boat struck it. But then it was not the act of God which caused the boat to impinge upon that log. The act of God was, at most, but a remote agency in the production of the loss; while the human act of directing the boat against the log was the immediate and direct cause of the loss." See also Sprowl v. Kellar, 4 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 382; Jones v. Pitcher, 3 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 135, 24 Am. Dec. 716. In Bentley v. Bustard, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 643, it was held that an accident occasioned by a vessel striking upon known or unknown obstructions is attributable to dangers of the river or perils of the sea, as the case may be, if in spite of reasonable care and skill the vessel was driven there by the natural force of wind and tempest.

1. The expression "act of God" is held to exclude all idea of human agency. When the effect, the cause of which is to be considered, is found to be in part the result of the participation of man, whether it be from active intervention, or neglect, or failure to act, the whole occurrence is thereby humanized, as it were, and removed from the operation of the rules applicable to acts of God. Polack v. Pioche, 35 Cal. 416, 95 Am. Dec. 115; Central Line of Boats v. Lowe, 50 Ga. 509; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Hedger, 9 Bush (Ky.) 645; Kiff v. Old Colony, etc., R. Co., 117 Mass. 591, 19 Am. Rep. 429; Michaels v. New York Cent. R. Co., 30 N. Y. 564, 86 Am. Dec. 415; Read v. Spaulding, 30 N. Y. 630, 86 Am. Dec. 426; Friend v. Woods, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 189, 52 Am. Dec. 119; Klauber v. American Express Co., 21 Wis. 21, 91 Am. Dec. 452.

In 2 Parsons on Contracts (5th ed.) 159, it is said: "We take the true definition of the 'act of God' to be, a cause which operates without any aid or interference from man. For if the cause of loss was wholly human, or became destructive by human agency and co-operation, then the loss is to be ascribed to man, and not to God, and to the carrier's negligence; because it would be dangerous to the community to permit him to make a defense which might so frequently be false and fraudulent."

2. There is some conflict as to whether losses occasioned by hidden obstructions in a river, such as rocks, logs, or sawyers, are attributable to acts of God, or whether such disasters are only included in "dangers of the river." In Turney v. Wilson, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 340, 27 Am. Dec. 515, it was held that while ordinarily a common carrier is liable for all losses not occasioned by the act of God or public enemies, he may limit his liability so as to exclude "dangers of the river," which mean all hidden obstructions in the river, such as rocks, logs, sawyers, etc., which could not be foreseen or avoided by human prudence. See also Jones v. Pitcher, 3 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 135, 24 Am. Dec. 716; Sprowl v. Kellar, 4 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 382; Steele v. McTyer, 31 Ala. 667, 70 Am. Dec. 516; Bentley v. Bustard, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 643.

Louisiana Code—Construction of "Fortuitous Event."—Art. 1933 of the Louisiana Civil Code provides that where by a fortuitous event or irresistible force the debtor is hindered from giving or doing what he has contracted to give or to do, or is from the same causes compelled to do what the contract bound him not to do, no damages can be recovered for the inexecution of the contract. "Fortuitous event" in this connection has been construed to mean the same as "act of God." Engster v. West, 35 La. Ann. 119, 48 Am. Rep. 232.

3. In Neal v. Saunderson, 2 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 572, 41 Am. Dec. 609, the court, quoting the statement of Judge Story to the effect that by the act of God is meant inevitable accident or casualty (Story on Bailments 25), makes a similar statement, holding the two phrases "inevitable accident" and "act of God" to be synonymous. For authority to the effect that "inevitable accident" and "unavoidable accident" have the same meaning as "act of God," see Whitesides v. Thurlkill, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 599; Fish v. Chapman, 2 Ga. 349, 46 Am. Dec. 393.

4. For example, the court, in Fergusson v. Brent, 12 Md. 9, 71 Am. Dec. 582, said: "Damage done by lightning is an inevitable accident, and is also an act of God; but the collision of two vessels in the dark is an inevitable accident, but it is not an act of God, such as the stroke of lightning, nor is it so considered by the authorities."

In Merritt v. Earle, 29 N. Y. 115, 86 Am. Dec. 293, it was said: "The expressions 'act of God' and 'inevitable accident' have sometimes been used in a similar sense and as equivalent terms. But there is a distinction. That may be an inevitable accident which no foresight or precaution of the carrier could prevent; but the phrase 'act of God' denotes natural accidents that could not happen by

"Perils of the Sea" and "Act of God" Distinguished.—The expression "perils or dangers of the sea or river" has in like manner, and with even greater inaccuracy, been used interchangeably with the phrase "act of God."¹

III. ACT OF GOD AS AFFECTING THE PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACTS.—1. Obligation Imposed by Express Contract—a. IN GENERAL.—It is a well-established rule of law that where a person creates a charge or obligation upon himself by express contract he will not be permitted to excuse himself therefrom by pleading an act of God rendering performance impracticable.²

the intervention of man, as storms, lightning, and tempest. The expression excludes all human agency."

Lord Mansfield, in Proprietors, etc., v. Wood, 4 Dougl. 287, 26 E. C. L. 353, said: "The general principle is clear. The act of God is natural necessity, as winds and storms, which arise from natural causes, and is distinct from inevitable accident." To the same effect see Plaisted v. Boston, etc., Steam Nav. Co., 27 Me. 132, 46 Am. Dec. 587.

The distinction between the terms "act of God" and "inevitable accident" is clearly made in Hale v. New Jersey Steam Nav. Co., 15 Conn. 539, 39 Am. Dec. 400. "If the defendants are common carriers," said the court, in this case, "the question must be, merely, What are the liabilities of common carriers? The answer is, For all losses, even inevitable accidents, except they arise from the act of God or the public enemy. 2 T. R. 34, 2 Ld. Raym. 918."

In Central Line of Boats v. Lowe, 50 Ga. 511, the court declared that there was "doubtless a distinction between an 'act of God' and an 'unavoidable accident'. The former covers only natural accidents, such as lightning, earthquakes, tempests, and the like, and not accidents arising from the negligence or act of man."

Distinguishing between the expression "act of God" and the words "the dangers of the river which are unavoidable," which appeared in a bill of lading exhibited in the case, it was said, by Green, J., in Gordon v. Buchanan, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 81: "The exception in this bill of lading of 'the dangers of the river which are unavoidable,' narrows down the liability of the owner of the boat. Many disasters which would not come within the definition of the act of God would fall within the exception in this receipt, such, for instance, as losses occasioned by hidden obstructions in the river, newly placed there, and of a character that human skill and foresight could not have discovered and avoided."

1. In Williams v. Grant, 1 Conn. 487, 7 Am. Dec. 235, Gold, J., seemed to regard the meaning of the term "dangers of the sea" as equivalent to that of "acts of God"; for where the vessel transporting the goods of the plaintiff ran upon a rock, and the goods were thereby damaged, the judge observed: "The defendants are indeed, by an express exception in the bill of lading, excused, so far as regards losses caused by 'dangers of the sea'. This exception, however, does not seem at all to qualify their liability; for by 'dangers of the sea' are meant no other than inevitable perils or accidents upon that element; and by such perils or accidents common carriers are prima facie excused, whether there is any such express exception or not." And in Tuckerman v. Stephens, etc., Transp. Co., 32 N. J. L. 320, the court was of opinion that the expressions "perils of the sea" and "act of God" were only different terms for the same thing.

In Crosby v. Fitch, 12 Conn. 410, 31 Am. Dec. 745, the phrases "inevitable accident" and "dangers of the seas" were held to be practically synonymous.

Paradine v. Jane, Alleyn 27, is frequently referred to as a leading case on this subject, discussing, as it does, not only the general rule, but the reason therefor, exceptions thereto, and illustrations thereof. Here it was held that when a party, by his own contract, creates a duty or charge upon himself, he is bound to make it good if he may, notwithstanding any accident by inevitable necessity, because he might have provided against this by his contract; therefore, if a lessee covenants to repair, the circumstance of the premises being destroyed by lightning, or thrown down by an inevitable flood of water or an irresistible tornado, will not effect his discharge.

In School Dist. No. 1 v. Dauchy, 25 Conn.

Destruction of Vessel Chartered; Covenant to Return.—Thus where the defendants had chartered a vessel, and given bond for its return in good order at a certain time, they were not released from their liability on the bond, upon destruction of the vessel, notwithstanding the fact that the loss occurred by an act of God.¹

Destruction of Premises—Covenant to Repair.—And where a tenant has covenanted to repair, and the premises are destroyed by lightning, flood, or other act of God, he must nevertheless perform his covenant, and rebuild if necessary.²

530, 68 Am. Dec. 371, it was contended on the part of the defendant that where the thing contracted to be done becomes impossible by the act of God, the contract is discharged. But the court said: "This is altogether a mistake. The cases show no such exception, though there is some semblance of it in a single case which we will mention. The act of God will excuse the not doing of a thing where the law had created the duty, but never where it is created by the positive and absolute contract of the party. The reason of this distinction is obvious. The law never creates or imposes upon any one a duty to perform what God forbids or what he renders impossible of performance, but it allows people to enter into contracts as they please, provided they do not violate the law."

In Dewey v. Union School Dist., 43 Mich. 480, 38 Am. Rep. 206, the defendants were sued by one who had been engaged to teach school for ten months at a fixed compensation of so much per month, for salary accruing during a period of several months when the school was closed on account of an epidemic of small-pox. The defendant pleaded, among other things, that the suspension was the effect of an overruling necessity, or, in other words, the act of God, which suspended the contract for the time being. The supreme court, in considering this question, said: "Beyond controversy, the closing of the schools was a wise and timely expedient, but the defense interposed cannot rest on that. * * * It is not enough that great difficulties were encountered, or that there existed urgent and satisfactory reasons for stopping the schools." For a very similar case, see Gear v. Gray (Ind. App., 1894), 37 N. E. Rep. 1059; also Barker v. Hodgson, 3 M. & S. 267, where it was held that an infectious disease at a port, which prevented commercial intercourse, did not discharge or qualify the covenant in the charter party.

The plaintiff sued the defendant for work done towards the erection of a mill, the structure, when partially completed, having been washed away by a freshet. The argument of the plaintiff was to the effect that recovery should be had for the amount contracted to be paid, although the work was not done, if its completion was prevented by an act of God. The court, however, said: "There is no such principle. He might, in such case, be entitled on a quantum meruit count to recover for what materials had been furnished, and the work which he had done, if it was worth anything." Doster v. Brown, 25 Ga. 24, 71 Am. Dec. 154.

Where, by the terms of the contract sued on, one party was to deliver, "as early next fall as the same will be dry enough to house, unavoidable accidents only excepted," the failure of crops, on account of unusual drought during the cropping season, was held not to be such an accident as would excuse the nonperformance of the contract. M'Gehee v. Hill, 4 Port. (Ala.) 170, 29 Am. Dec. 277.

Where a charter party required the keeping of a certain number of men on board as the crew, it was held to be no excuse that some of the crew deserted and others died. The party was bound to provide against such contingencies. Beatson v. Schank, 3 East 233.

In Ames v. Belden, 17 Barb. (U. S.) 515, it was held that the act of God cannot be pleaded in excuse of the performance of an express covenant when compensation in damages may be awarded.

To Excuse Performance of a Contract, the instrument itself must make some suitable provision. Bacon v. Cobb, 45 Ill. 52.

1. Steele v. Buck, 61 Ill. 343, 14 Am. Rep. 60; Wilmington Transp. Co. v. O'Neil, 98 Cal. 1. A case involving the same principle was that of Randall v. Johnson, 59 Miss. 317, 42 Am. Rep. 366, in which it was held that where there had been a written promise to pay for the rigging of a vessel ninety days after its first return trip, the promise was enforceable, though the vessel was lost at sea; and the court further held that the money was payable ninety days after the time usually required for such a trip.

2. Paradine v. Jane, Alleyn 27.

"When a tenant has covenanted to repair, and the buildings are destroyed by fire, or lightning, or the act of God as it is termed, the tenant must rebuild upon the demised premises. The reason is obvious. He has contracted expressly to do it, and it is possible for him to restore that which has been destroyed, and if he does not do it he must respond in damages. By rebuilding, it will answer the covenant to repair, and he cannot avoid his obligation by reason of the destruction of the building, even without fault on his part. It is the contract, and he must perform it. It is possible for him to comply, and the law will not excuse performance." Scott, J., in Steele v. Buck, 61 Ill. 343, 14 Am. Rep. 63.

In Ross v. Overton, 3 Call (Va.) 309, 2 Am. Dec. 552, the lessee of a mill, having covenanted, in addition to the rents reserved, to make certain improvements and deliver the mill with such improvements at the end of his term in proper tenantable repairs, and the mill during the term having been destroyed by an unexpected and extraordinary movement of the ice, three arbitrators, to whom the matter was referred, awarded that the lessee should pay the rent, notwithstanding

One of Two Alternative Obligations.—It has been held, however, that where one of two alternative obligations becomes impossible of performance by an act of God, the obligor, having been deprived of his election, is excused from the performance of the other.¹

Reason of Rule.—Although the rule of law holding the obligation imposed by an express contract to be unaffected by a subsequent act of God may, not infrequently, seem harsh in its operation,² the rule itself has its foundation in what has been denominated "good sense and inflexible honesty."³ For, where one of two innocent persons must sustain a loss, it is but just that the law should cast it upon him who has agreed to sustain it, or rather, should leave it "where the agreement of the parties has put it."⁴

b. WHERE THE CONTRACT HAS REFERENCE TO THE CONTINUED EXISTENCE OF A PARTICULAR PERSON OR THING—Rule Stated—Subsequent Death of Person or Destruction of Thing Discharges Obligation.—It has long been conceded that where a contract is entered into, of a continuing character, or to be performed at a future time, dependent upon the continued existence of a particular person or thing, or the continuing ability of the obligor to perform, subsequent death, destruction, or disability will excuse the obligor from compliance with the terms of the contract.⁵

ing the destruction of the mill, and should perform the other covenants contained in the lease, and the Court of Appeals expressed an opinion that the arbitrators had not mistaken the law.

"No rule of law," said the court in Trenton Public Schools v. Bennett, 27 N. J. L. 513, 72 Am. Dec. 374, "is more firmly established by a long train of decisions than this: that where a party, by his own contract, creates a duty or charge upon himself, he is bound to make it good if he may, notwithstanding any accident by inevitable necessity, because he might have provided against it by his contract; therefore, if a lessee covenant to repair a house, though it be burned by lightning or thrown down by enemies, yet he is bound to repair it." See also Walton v. Waterhouse, 2 Wm. Saund. 422 a, note 2.

Brecknock, etc., Nav. Co. v. Pritchard, 6 T. R. 750, was an action upon a covenant to build a bridge and keep it in repair; the defendant pleaded that the bridge was carried away by the act of God, in a great and extraordinary flood, although well built and in good repair. The plea was held bad on demurrer. See also Police Jury v. Taylor, 2 La. Ann. 272; Polack v. Pioche, 35 Cal. 416, 95 Am. Dec. 115.

1. Smith v. Durell, 16 N. H. 344, 41 Am. Dec. 732.

2. A singular concession, it would seem, was made to obviate the harsh operation of this rule, in 2 Selw. N. P. 393, alluded to by the court in Singleton v. Carroll, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 527, 22 Am. Dec. 95, where a lease, by indenture, was made of a meadow, bounded on one side by a river, and the lessee undertook to sustain and repair the banks to prevent the water from overflowing them, upon pain of forfeiting a sum of money, and by a sudden flood the banks were destroyed; it was adjudged that, although he was excused from the penalty because the injury was occasioned by the act of God, and therefore inevitable, he was bound to repair in convenient time because of his covenant.

3. Whelpley, J., in Trenton Public Schools v. Bennett, 27 N. J. L. 513, 72 Am. Dec. 373. Here it was said: "The cases make no distinction between accidents which could have been foreseen when the contract was entered into, and those which could not have been foreseen. Between accidents by the fault of the contractor, and those where he is without fault, they all rest upon the simple principle: such is the agreement, clear and unqualified, and it must be performed, no matter what the cost, if performance be not absolutely impossible."

In Steele v. Buck, 61 Ill. 343, 14 Am. Rep. 64, Scott, J., said: "The reason given for the rule is, that if an event happen which will occasion loss to one or the other contracting parties, yet the party who contracts that the event shall not happen, although he may be unable to perform his contract by reason of the act of God, he shall stand the risk and make good the loss. The party contracting assumes the responsibility for the consequences that may follow, if for any cause whatever he may be unable to perform his contract."

In Chitty on Contracts (11th Am. ed.) 1076 it is said: "In contracts from the nature of which it is apparent that the parties contracted on the basis of the continued existence of a given person or thing, a condition is implied that, if the performance becomes impossible from the perishing of the person or thing, that shall excuse such performance."

It is a general rule that death does not absolve a man from his contracts, but that they must be performed by his personal representatives, or their nonperformance compensated for out of his estate; however, it is a well-established exception to this rule, that in contracts in which performance depends upon the continued existence of a certain person or thing, a condition is implied that the impossibility of performance arising from the perishing of the person or thing shall excuse the performance. The implication arises in spite of the unqualified character of the promissory words, because, from the nature of the contract, it is apparent that the parties contracted upon the basis of the continued existence of the particular person or chattel. Yerrington v. Greene, 7 R. I. 589, 84 Am. Dec. 579.

Where a father had engaged and contracted to pay for tuition for his son, who by supervening illness was prevented from attending and receiving the contemplated instruction, the father was for this reason excused from the performance of his contract to pay for the prospective tuition. *Stewart v. Contracts for Personal Services.—Contracts for personal services, whether of the contracting party or a third person, requiring skill, and which can be performed only by the particular individual named, are not, in their nature, of absolute obligation under all circumstances. Both parties must be supposed to contemplate, as one of the conditions of the contract, the continuance of the ability of the person whose skilled services are the subject of the contract. Contracts for personal services are subject to this implied condition, that the person shall be able at the time appointed to perform them; and if he dies, or without fault on the part of the covenantor becomes disabled, the obligation to perform becomes extinguished. Dickey v. Linscott, 20 Me. 453, 37 Am. Dec. 67; People v. Manning, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 297, 18 Am. Dec. 451; Jones v. Judd, 4 N. Y. 411; Clark v. Gilbert, 26 N. Y. 279, 84 Am. Dec. 189; Spalding v. Rosa, 71 N. Y. 40, 27 Am. Rep. 7; Wolfe v. Howes, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 174; Gray v. Murray, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 167; Robinson v. Davison, L. R. 6 Exch. 269; Boast v. Firth, L. R. 4 C. Pl. 1.

In Dickey v. Linscott, 20 Me. 453, 37 Am. Dec. 67, it was proved that the defendant had entered into a contract with the plaintiff to perform certain manual labor for a stipulated period; that the defendant was prevented by sickness from beginning the work at the contemplated time, which disability continued during much the greater portion of the term. The plaintiff brought suit for failure to comply with the contract of services, but the court held that in a contract for the performance of personal manual labor requiring health and strength it must have been understood to be subject to the implied condition that health and strength remain to the party agreeing to perform the labor, and hence no recovery against the defendant was allowed to be had.

In Robinson v. Davison, L. R. 6 Exch. 269, where the defendant had contracted that his wife should play the piano for the plaintiff at a certain concert, and she was prevented by illness, it was held that the husband was not liable in damages for breach of the contract. "The parties must have known," said the court, "that their contract could not be fulfilled unless the defendant's wife was in a state of health to attend and play at the concert on the day named."

In Yerrington v. Greene, 7 R. I. 589, 84 Am. Dec. 580, it appeared that the plaintiff had been employed as clerk and agent of the defendant's intestate, in his business in New York and Philadelphia, for three years at a stipulated salary. The employer died during the term, and the plaintiff brought assumpsit against the administrators of the decedent for failure to carry out the contract. The court held that the death of the employer terminated the contract, upon the ground that the contract had been entered into upon the basis of the continued existence of both parties during the period of employment. See also Knight v. Bean, 22 Me. 531, in which the opinion was expressed that if one person should agree to attend and wait upon another personally for a year, and the person to be waited upon and attended should die before the expiration of the time, the other party would be absolved from his undertaking.

becomes impossible, and the obligor is released;¹ and the same rule was applied where an artist, who had contracted to paint a certain picture, became subsequently incapacitated from loss of sight.²

Reason of Rule.—The liability of an obligor in a contract having reference to the continued existence of a particular person or thing does not in strictness constitute an exception to the general rule as to the liability of obligors in express contracts, but results from a reasonable construction of the contract with reference to its subject matter.³

2. Obligation Implied by Law.—Where the law creates a duty or charge, and the party is disabled by an act of God, without any fault in himself, from performing it, and has no remedy over, then the law will excuse him,⁴ as in the case of waste when the premises are destroyed by tempest.⁵

Reason of Rule.—The distinction between the effect of the act of God upon the obligation of an express contract, and that of one which the law implies, has been held to rest upon the unwillingness of the law to at once create, impose, and exact the performance of an obligation forbidden or rendered impracticable by the interposition of Providence.⁶

IV. ACT OF GOD AS AFFECTING THE LIABILITY OF COMMON CARRIERS—

1. Upon Their Contracts as Insurers—a. IN GENERAL—Rule Stated.—A common carrier, liable as an insurer for the property intrusted to him for the purpose

In Pollock on Contracts (2d Am. ed.), p. 366*, it is said, quoting from the judgment of the court in Bailey v. De Crespigny, L. R. 4 Q. B. 185: "'Where it is an answer to a complaint of an alleged breach of contract, that the thing done or left undone was so by the act of God, what is meant is that it was not within the contract.' This * * * well shows the modern tendency * * * to reduce all the rules on this subject to rules of construction."

Substantial Performance.—This construction results from the fact that destruction of the thing or death of the person with reference to which the contract is made renders the performance thereof impossible. However, though literal and precise performance is rendered impossible, if substantial compliance may still be had it will be required. In 2 Parsons on Contracts (3d ed.) 185 the rule is laid down, which is cited with approval in Eugster v. West, 35 La. Ann. 119, 48 Am. Rep. 232, that "the nonperformance of a contract is not excused by the act of God where it may be substantially carried into effect, although the act of God makes a literal and precise performance of it impossible." Thus, where the defendant had contracted to carry a man from New York to San Francisco, the part of the voyage from San Juan del Sur to be made in a particular vessel, which was lost, it was held that if the loss or wrecking of the vessel was the act of God, it was the duty of the defendant to use all reasonable means in endeavoring to supply another vessel. The main thing was the agreement to carry the plaintiff from New York to San Francisco, and though the vessel in which a part of the trip was to be made was lost, the contract might have been substantially complied with by the provision of another vessel for the purpose. *Williams v. In Mill Dam Foundry v. Hovey, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 441, Shaw, C. J., said: "The distinction is now well settled between an obligation or duty imposed by law, and that created by covenant or act of the party. When the law creates a duty, and the party is disabled from performing it, without any default of his own, the law will excuse him; as in waste to a tenement, if the same be destroyed by a tempest or enemies, the lessee is excused. But when the party by his own contract creates a duty or charge upon himself, he is bound to make it good, notwithstanding any accident by inevitable necessity, because he might have provided against it by his contract."

In Patton v. Magrath, Dudley (S. Car.) 159, 31 Am. Dec. 552, the court, in considering the liability of common carriers for loss of or damage to goods intrusted to their care, laid down the generally recognized rule of law to the effect that the said liability extended to all cases, unless the loss occurred through the depredations of public enemies, or some act of Providence, against which human strength and care could not guard. "The sudden shifting of the channel," said the court, "or the recent introduction of a hidden sawyer or snag, which are among the natural incidents of our rivers, have been, when unknown, always holden within the latter exception."

In Forward v. Pittard, 1 T. R. 27, after the delivery of a certain amount of hops to a common carrier for transportation, a fire broke out about one hundred yards away from their place of storage, and, notwithstanding efforts to extinguish it, the flames finally reached the place of storage, consuming the building with the hops contained therein. With reference to the liability of a carrier, and also to the exception in the carrier's favor where the loss results from an act of God, Lord Mansfield, who delivered the opinion of the court, said: "Now what is the act of God? I consider it to mean something in opposition to the act of man; for everything is the act of God that happens by his permission; everything, by his knowledge. But to prevent litigation, collusion, and the necessity of going into circumstances impossible to be unraveled, the law presumes against the carrier, unless he shows it was done by the king's enemies, or by such act as could not happen by the intervention of man, as storms, lightning, and tempests."

The Freeing of Goods in Transit.—Where

Act of God must be Proximate Cause.—To exonerate the carrier, however, the act of God must be the immediate and proximate cause of the loss, and not the indirect or remote cause.¹

When Act of God the Remote or Indirect Cause.—Thus it has been held that although a hard frost may be considered an act of God, yet damage to goods on board a steam-vessel, by the leaking of a pipe which was burst by the frost, is a loss

there is no negligence on the part of the carrier, it seems that injury to the goods in transit by freezing will be attributed to the act of God. *Swetland v. Boston, etc., R. Illustrations.—The fact that a violent storm produced an unusually low tide, during which the defendant's barge was sunk by contact with a bulkhead which at ordinary low tide was too far below the surface of the water for the accident to occur, does not excuse a common carrier from responsibility. Under these circumstances, the projecting bulkhead, placed in position by human agency, is the proximate cause of the injury; the storm, strictly an act of God, being only the remote cause of the loss. New Brunswick Steamboat, etc., Transp. Co. v. Tiers, 24 N. J. L. 697, 64 Am. Dec. 397.

In Smith v. Sheppard (Abbot on Ship. pt. 3, ch. 4, § 1), a vessel was lost by striking a floating mast attached to a vessel which had been sunk by getting on a bank that had suddenly and unexpectedly been made dangerous by an extraordinary flood. Coming in contact with the mast attached to the sunken ship, the defendant's vessel was forced by it upon the bank altered suddenly by the flood, and was wrecked. The flood which changed the bank was the ultimate cause of the misfortune, but it was held to be too remote. The immediate cause of the loss was the coming in collision with a floating mast which some one had attached to the sunken vessel. To the same effect see Proprietors, etc., v. Wood, 4 Dougl. 290; McHenry v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 4 Harr. (Del.) 448; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Shea, 66 Ill. 471; McArthur v. Sears, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 190; Merritt v. Earle, 31 Barb. Where horses had been lost by the sinking of a river steamboat carrying them, the immediate cause of the accident being the contact of the steamboat with the mast of a sloop which had been sunk in a squall two days before, which mast protruded above the water fifteen feet or more at low water, and was plainly visible the day before as well as the day of the accident, the loss cannot be attributed to an act of God, so as to exempt the carrier from liability. Though the squall which sunk the sloop upon which the steamboat was wrecked was an act of God, it was but the remote or secondary cause of the accident. Merritt v. Earle, 29 N. Y. 115, 86 Am. Dec. 292.

Blythe v. Denver, etc., R. Co., 15 Colo. 333, 22 Am. St. Rep. 403, was an action brought against a railway company for damage to goods in its hands as a common carrier. It appeared that several cars, including the express car, were blown from the track by a gale into such a position that all of the goods must have been thrown into one corner at the top, and the car immediately took fire and burned so rapidly that the messenger escaped with difficulty. It also appeared that all this time the wind was so violent as to make it almost impossible to stand or walk, or to see for the dust in the air raised by the gale. It was held that the proximate cause of the loss was the act of God, and not the failure of the company to remove the goods from the car after it had been overturned.

In Adams Express Co. v. Jackson, 92 Tenn. 327, it was laid down as the rule that the act of God which will excuse a common carrier must be the proximate and not merely the remote cause. Hence the Johnstown flood, having occurred and been known before a shipment was undertaken, could not excuse the carrier from liability for loss occurring in the course of transportation, voluntarily undertaken with full knowledge of the situation.

"The act of God which excuses the carrier," said Daniel, J., in Friend v. Woods, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 189, 52 Am. Dec. 119. "must, therefore, I think, be a direct and violent act of nature."

for which the carrier may be held liable.¹ And if a cargo is injured by a storm at sea, during a deviation from the usual course by the master of the vessel, it has been maintained that the deviation is a sufficiently proximate cause of the loss to enable the freighter to recover.²

Act of God only One of Several Causes.—Nor is it an excuse if the act of God from which the loss results is but one of several causes, the combined operation of which produced the loss.³

b. NEGLIGENCE OF CARRIER AS A CO-OPERATIVE CAUSE—Carrier Not Exempted.—Where the negligence of the carrier concurs with an act of God in producing a loss, the carrier is not exempted from liability by showing that the immediate cause of the damage was the act of God;⁴ or, as it has been

In Williams v. Grant, 1 Conn. 487, 7 Am. Dec. 235, an action was brought against the owner of a vessel for injury to a quantity of salt shipped thereon, the injury resulting from the vessel's striking against a rock lying in the channel of the Providence river. The defendants introduced evidence to prove that the location of the rock was not generally known and that there had been no negligence on their part, imputing the injury to inevitable accident or act of God. The jury found a verdict for the defendants, whereupon the plaintiffs moved for a new trial. On argument of the motion, which was granted, the court observed with reference to the case: "If the rock on which this vessel struck had been generally known, then it was the duty of the master to have known and avoided it, and the loss would be imputable to his negligence. If the situation of the rock was not generally known, and the master did not actually know it, then, if he conducted properly in other respects, and no fault was imputable to him, his striking on the rock would be an act of God, an unavoidable accident, and he would not be liable for the loss."

The loss or damage to perishable articles in consequence of the weather, will not excuse the carrier, if it could have been prevented by due care and diligence. The carrier must show not only that it did all that was usual, but all that was necessary to be done under the circumstances. Wing v. New York, etc., R. Co., 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 235; Philleo v. Sandford, 17 Tex. 230.

Whenever the common carrier is exempt from liability for loss because of an act of God, he must be free from any previous negligence or misconduct by which that loss or damage may have been occasioned. For expressed, "where the loss is caused by the act of God, if the negligence of the carrier mingles with it as an active and co-operative cause he is still responsible."¹ A carrier by water is not excused from liability from loss by an act of God operating upon an unseaworthy vessel, nor would it avail him to show that the same loss might have occurred had the vessel been staunch and sound.²

though the immediate or proximate cause of a loss in any given instance may have been what is termed an act of God, yet if the carrier unnecessarily exposed the property to such accident by any culpable act or omission of his own he is not excused. Patton, J., in McGraw v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 18 W. Va. 365, 41 Am. Rep. 696.

In Wolf v. American Express Co., 43 Mo. 421, 97 Am. Dec. 407, Wagner, J., said: "The act of God which excuses the carrier must not only be the proximate cause of the loss, but the better opinion is that it must be the sole cause. And where the loss is caused by the act of God, if the negligence of the carrier mingles with it as an active and co-operative cause he is still responsible." See also Amies v. Stevens, 1 Stra. 128; Siordet v. Hall, 4 Bing. 607, 15 E. C. L. 87.

Delay as Co-operative Negligence.—There is some conflict of authority upon the question whether or not mere unnecessary delay, without other negligence, on the part of the carrier, consequent upon which is injury to or loss of the goods in transit by an act of God, is on the part of the carrier such participation in the cause of the disaster as will render him responsible in damages therefor. Some decisions, upon the principle that a common carrier is responsible for only the proximate, and not the remote, causes of his negligence, have held the carrier not liable under such circumstances. Memphis, etc., R. Co. v. Reeves, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 176; Caldwell v. Southern Express Co., 1 Flip. (U. S.) 85; Denny v. New York Cent. R. Co., 13 Gray (Mass.) 481, 74 Am. Dec. 645; Hoadley v. Northern Transp. Co., 115 Mass. 304, 15 Am. Rep. 106; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Burrows, 33 Mich. 6; Detroit, etc., R. Co. v. McKenzie, 43 Mich. 609; Ballentine v. North Missouri R. Co., 40 Mo. 491, 93 Am. Chicago, etc., R. Co.*, 63 Iowa 611; Gillespie v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 6 Mo. App. 554; McPadden v. New York Cent. R.

Co., 44 N. Y. 478, 4 Am. Rep. 705; McGraw v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 18 W. Va. 361, 41 Am. Rep. 696.

Some authorities, however, holding that the act of God which excuses the carrier must be not only the proximate but the sole cause of the loss, maintain that a delay on the part of the carrier is of itself such negligence as will render him liable for loss by an act of God to which the goods would not have been subjected but for the delay. Read v. Spaulding, 30 N. Y. 630, 86 Am. Dec. 426. And see Dunson v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 265; Bostwick v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 45 N. Y. 712; Conduct v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 54 N. Y. 500.

In Michaels v. New York Cent. R. Co., 30 N. Y. 564, 86 Am. Dec. 415, the carrier received certain goods for transportation, but unnecessarily delayed them, in consequence of which delay they were injured by a flood. The carrier was held liable for the loss, though the flood was the proximate cause of the injury. It seems, however, that the carrier was held liable in this case partly on account of the fact that ordinary care on his part after the delay occurred would have prevented the loss. Where perishable property, such as potatoes, is received by a common carrier at a season when very low temperature may be reasonably apprehended, great diligence should be used in forwarding such property with dispatch and haste; and where, by a delay of two or three days, the property is damaged by freezing, the carrier may be held liable for the injury. Hewett v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 63 Iowa 611; Wood v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 68 Iowa 491, 56 Am. Rep. 861; McGraw v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 18 W. Va. 361, 41 Am. Rep. 696. And see Tierney v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 76 N. Y. 305.

In Packard v. Taylor, 35 Ark. 402, 37 Am. Rep. 37, the carriers received and stored goods in a steamboat supported on a dock by a chain; the boat had two large apertures in her bottom. The chain slipped, and the boat was lowered into the water and immediately sunk. The court held in this case that, as there was no proof of any act of God which could have affected any vessel able to float at all, the act of God which shook the dock from under the vessel could not be regarded as the immediate cause of the damages.

A carrier is bound to provide a carriage or vessel in all respects adequate to the purpose, with a conductor or crew of competent

Qualification of Rule.—But if it can be established that the same loss not only might but must have happened had there been no fault on the part of the carrier, his negligence may be disregarded and the injury attributed solely to the act of God.¹

c. BURDEN OF PROOF—Burden upon Carrier to Show that Loss was Occasioned by Act of God.—When the fact of loss or damage to goods has been established, the burden of proof rests upon the carrier to show that the loss or damage was occasioned by an act of God.²

Whether Carrier must Show Affirmatively the Absence of Negligence.—It has been held that when this fact has been proved it amounts to a prima facie exoneration, and that the carrier is not required to go further and show affirmatively the absence of all negligence, the burden of proof of such negligence resting upon the other party.³ On the contrary, it has also been maintained that in setting skill or ability, and failing in these particulars, though the loss be occasioned by the act of God, the carrier may not set up a providential calamity to protect himself against what may have arisen from his own folly. Hart v. Allen, 2 Watts (Pa.) 114.

1. Loss Wholly Independent of Carrier's Fault.—A carrier will not be held responsible for loss occasioned by an act of God, even though he is in default, if he can show that the loss was wholly independent of his default, and not only might but must have happened in any aspect of the case. Collier v. Valentine, 11 Mo. 299, 49 Am. Dec. 81; Smith v. Whitman, 13 Mo. 358; Hill v. Sturgeon, 28 Mo. 328; Nettles v. South Carolina R. Co., 7 Rich. (S. Car.) 190, 62 Am. Dec. 409.

In New Brunswick Steamboat, etc., Transp. Co. v. Tiers, 24 N. J. L. 697, 64 Am. Dec. 404, the court seems to be of the opinion that although human negligence may have been a contributory cause of the injury occasioned principally by an act of God, if it can be established with certainty that the same loss would have happened had there been no negligence or default, or, as it was expressed in Davis v. Garrett, 4 M. & P. 540, 6 Bing. 716, "not only that the same loss might have happened, but that it must have happened," then the act of God would excuse the carrier from liability. "But," continues the court in New Brunswick Steamboat, etc., Transp. Co. v. Tiers, 24 N. J. L. 697, 64 Am. Dec. 394, "where one of the natural results of the negligence was to expose the goods to the very peril that occurred and proved the means of loss, it will be very unsafe to speculate upon the possibility that the same peril might have produced the loss without any negligence. In such a case the fact of negligence justly precludes the carrier from setting up the peril as an inevitable accident. To allow him to do this would expose the owner to the very difficulties the law, which deems the carrier an insurer against every cause of loss but two of a definite and specific character, was designed to guard against."

In Davis v. Garrett, 6 Bing. 716, 19 E. C. L. 212, the plaintiff put on board the defendant's barge lime to be conveyed from Medway to London. The master of the barge deviated unnecessarily from the usual course, and during the deviation a tempest arose and the lime became wet. The barge took fire thereby and the whole was lost. It was held that the defendant was liable, and the cause of the loss was sufficiently proximate to entitle the plaintiff to recover. See the observations of Tindal, C.J., in this case.

If the act of God was of such an overwhelming and destructive character as by its own force, and independently of the particular negligence alleged or shown, to produce the injury, there would be no liability, though there was some negligence on the part of the carrier. To create liability it must have required the combined effect of the act of God and the concurring negligence of the party to produce the injury. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Sulphur Springs Ind. School Dist., 96 Pa. St. 65, 2 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 166, 42 Am. Rep. 529.

Carrier Disregarding Directions of Shipper.—When a common carrier receives goods to be carried in a particular manner and position, he is bound to carry them in that way; and if, by a disregard of the directions, the goods are lost or damaged, the burden will be on him to prove that the loss was in no degree attributable to his breach of contract, but was occasioned solely by the act of God, or some other cause for the result of which the carrier is not liable. Hastings v. Pepper, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 41.

up an act of God, or other cause of loss for which the carrier is not responsible in the absence of negligence on his part, it is necessary to establish at the same time the fact that all due care and diligence were exercised by the common carrier.¹

2. Upon Their Contracts to Deliver within a Reasonable Time—Law Implies Promise to Deliver within Reasonable Time.—In addition to the undertaking to be responsible as insurers for the property committed to their charge, the law implies an undertaking on the part of common carriers to deliver the property within a reasonable time.²

Wall. (U. S.) 189; Wertheimer v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 17 Blatchf. (U. S.) 421; Denton v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 52 Iowa 161, 35 Am. Rep. 263; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Brady, 32 Md. 333; Mayo v. Co., 67 Pa. St. 211, 5 Am. Rep. 424.

After the damage to goods in the hands of a common carrier has been established, the burden of proof is upon the carrier to show that the injuries were occasioned by an act of God, or some act or peril which the law recognizes as constituting an exemption, and then it is still competent for the owner of the goods to show that the injury might have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable skill and attention on the part of the persons employed in the conveyance of the goods. Wolf v. American Express Co., 43 Mo. 421, 97 Am. Dec. 406.

The American editor of Smith's Leading Cases, in a note to the case of Coggs v. Bernard, p. 199, states the law as follows: "If the carrier prove that the injury or loss was occasioned by one of those occurrences which are termed acts of God, prima facie he discharges himself, and the onus of proving that the alleged cause or agency would not have produced the loss or injury without his negligence or defective means is thrown upon the plaintiff. But if the plaintiff can prove such negligence and defective means on his part as that, without their co-operation, the violence of nature might not have resulted in occasioning a loss, he shall recover. The true way of looking at this is, not that the carrier discharges his peculiar liability by showing an act of God, and is then made responsible as an ordinary agent for negligence, but that the intervention of negligence breaks the carrier's line of defense, by showing that the injury or loss was not directly caused by the act of God, or, more correctly speaking, was not the act of God."

When from the plaintiff's own evidence it appears that the act of God caused the injury to the goods, the carrier is exonerated from liability unless the plaintiff can show the participation of the carrier in some act of negligence which co-operated with the act of God to produce the loss. Davis v. Wabash, etc., R. Co., 89 Mo. 340. But when it appears that a loss caused by an act of God might have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable caution, the burden is upon the carrier to show that he exercised such care and caution as a prudent person would have employed. Davis v. Wabash, etc., R. Co., 13 Mo. App. 449.

Cooper, 28 Ga. 543; Wallace v. Clayton, 42 Ga. 443; Central Line of Boats v. Lowe, 50 Ga. 509; Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Benson, 86 Ga. 203, 22 Am. St. Rep. 446; Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., 65 Tex. 13, 57 Am. Rep. 589; Brown v. Adams Express Co., 15 W. Va. 812.

In respect to the burden of proof in cases involving the exoneration of a common carrier from liability by an act of God, the court in Davis v. Wabash, etc., R. Co., 89 Mo. 340, stated the rule in effect to be: When the burden is cast upon the carrier to exempt himself from liability, it must make a case in which no negligence of its own appears. In that event the carrier is excused, unless the plaintiff shows, or it appears from the facts in the case, that the carrier's negligence caused or co-operated to produce the loss complained of. If it appears from the plaintiff's own evidence that the act of God caused the injury to the goods, the carrier is exonerated from liability, unless the plaintiff shows that the carrier was guilty of some specific negligence which actually co-operated to produce the loss. See also Read v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 60 Mo. 206.

In Bell v. Reed, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 127, 5 Am. Dec. 398, it was held that the carrier must prove seaworthiness before an act of God can be set up as a defense; but that if the loss is prima facie attributable to an inevitable accident, and the owner of the goods alleges unseaworthiness, the onus probandi lies on him.

2. Law Implies Undertaking to Deliver within Reasonable Time.—In the absence of an express contract, no rule of law exists specifying the time within which delivery must be made, but the authorities generally agree that there is an implied promise to deliver within a reasonable time, and what is a reasonable time must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case. A carrier who fails to deliver the goods entrusted to him within a reasonable time is liable in damages for the delay. Vicksburg, etc., R.

How Excused by Act of God.—But an act of God will excuse the performance of this contract in the same manner as it relieves the carrier from responsibility upon the implied contract of insurance.¹

3. Upon Their Contracts to Perform Certain Stipulated Acts.—The liability of a common carrier upon an express contract to perform certain stipulated acts is not changed or modified by an act of God.²

Contracts of Carriers, and Contracts in General.—It will be observed that the rules on this subject which apply to the contracts of common carriers are in no wise different from those affecting the contracts of parties in general. The carrier's liability as an insurer results from the undertaking which the law implies—it is an implied contract, and affected by an act of God in the same manner as other implied contracts; and the same may be said of the contract to deliver within a reasonable time; and where the carrier has expressly undertaken to do a certain thing, his liability, as affected by an act of God, is the same as that of all other obligors in express contracts.³

IV. ACT OF GOD AS AFFECTING THE PERFORMANCE OF CONDITIONS—1. Conditions Precedent.—A right, depending upon a condition precedent, does not accrue unless the condition be performed, although the performance becomes impossible by an act of God.⁴

See also the title COMMON CARRIERS.

1. Delay Caused by Low Water.—A common carrier by water has been held excused from liability for delay in delivering goods caused by the low stage of water in a navigable river. Bennett v. Byram, 38 Miss. 17, 75 Am. Dec. 90; Silver v. Hale, 2 Mo. App. 557.

By Snowstorm.—In Ballentine v. North Missouri R. Co., 40 Mo. 491, 93 Am. Dec. 315, it was held that a common carrier could not be held responsible for delay in transporting freight, where the delay was occasioned by a snowstorm which hindered the carrier in the performance of his duty, as such storm was an act of God.

By Freezing of Canal.—It has been held that a common carrier is not liable for loss from delay due to the freezing of a canal upon which the goods were being transported. Beckwith v. Frisbie, 32 Vt. 559; Parsons v. Hardy, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 215, 28 Am. Dec. 521; Bowman v. Teall, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 306, 35 Am. Dec. 562; Empire Transp. Co. v. Wallace, 68 Pa. St. 302, 8 Am. Rep. 178.

2. When a carrier has made an express contract to carry and deliver within a specified time, he is bound to fulfil his contract. Nothing will excuse him, and he is liable for any delay, no matter from what cause it may have arisen. Beatson v. Schank, 3 East 233; Harmony v. Bingham, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 209; Collier v. Swinney, 16 Mo. 484; Tirrell v. Gage, 4 Allen (Mass.) 245; Place v. Union Express Co., 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 19; Texas Pac. R. Co. v. Nicholson, 61 Tex. 491; The Ship Harriman, 9 Wall. (U. Rep. 861. And see Dodge v. Van Lear, 5 Cranch (C. C.) 278.

In Barret v. Dutton, 4 Campb. 333, it was held that the freezing of the Thames, which rendered it impossible to load the ship, did not excuse the performance of the charter party. Gibbs, C.J., said: "There was an absolute undertaking by the freightor of this ship to load and discharge her in thirty days, and whether it was or was not possible for him to do so from the state of the weather is quite immaterial."

It was held in Shubrick v. Salmond, 3 Burr. 1637, that though contrary winds and bad weather would not allow of the captain's proceeding with his vessel to her port in South Carolina, as he had agreed to do, the covenantor was nevertheless liable.

A contract to deliver at a port implies delivery at a wharf or the like, and such delivery is not excused by prevention by ice, Hodgdon v. New York, etc., R. Co., 46 Conn. 277; Aylward v. Smith, 2 Lowell (U. S.) 192; nor by low water, Parker v. Winlow, 7 El. & Bl. 942, 90 E. C. L. 940.

A carrier who, by a bill of lading, agrees to deliver goods with the privilege of reshipping them at a particular place, is not authorized to stop short of that place; but if he does so, and the property is lost by storm, he is nevertheless liable. Cassilay v. Young, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 265, 39 Am. Dec. 505.

Contracts to be Responsible for Acts of God.—A common carrier may, by express contract, insure against loss by act of God, and then it will be held bound by its contract. Southern Express Co. v. Glenn, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 472.

3. See supra, this title, Act of God as Affecting the Performance of Contracts.

4. Where the substance of the agreement between the plaintiff and defendant was that the defendant would convey to the plaintiff certain trees, provided the plaintiff would execute and deliver notes therefor within a reasonable time, the plaintiff, after the lapse of a reasonable time, has no right of action

2. Conditions Subsequent.—Where a condition subsequent annexed to an estate becomes impossible of performance, by an act of God, the condition is void and the estate absolute.¹

3. Conditions Annexed to Bonds.—If the condition annexed to a bond becomes impossible of performance, by an act of God, its performance will be excused and the obligation discharged.² In the case of obligations taken in judicial proceedings, such as recognizances and replevin bonds, where, as in the latter instance, the condition is to deliver a living animal, the obligors are released if the animal die before the specified day, or if, in the former instance, the person whose appearance is to discharge the obligation dies before the appointed time or is physically unable to appear.³

ACT OF INSOLVENCY. (See also ACT, and the title INSOLVENCY.)—As regards banks, an act of insolvency is one which shows the bank to be insolvent, such as nonpayment of its circulating notes, bills of exchange, or certifi-against the defendant for failure to convey title to the trees in question, although the plaintiff was prevented from complying with the terms of sale by the sickness of his wife and by a freshet in a river beyond which the defendant resided. The court was of opinion that these occurrences were not such as to have prevented compliance, but held that it was altogether unnecessary to consider this question, on account of the familiar and well-established rule of law that a right, depending upon a condition precedent, does not accrue unless the condition be performed, although the performance becomes impossible by the act of God. Mizell v. Burnett, 4 Jones (N. Car.) 249, 69 Am. Dec. 744. To the same effect, it was held in Remy v. Olds (Cal., 1893), 34 Pac. Rep. 216, that when it is necessary for a party suing for breach of contract to show performance on his part before he can recover, it is not sufficient for him to prove an act of God preventing performance.

1. Hughes v. Edwards, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 489; U. S. v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 691; Sumpkin, J., in Taylor v. Sutton, 15 Ga. 103, 60 Am. Dec. 682; Merrill v. Emery, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 507; Whitney v. Spencer, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 39; Jones v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., 14 W. Va. 514.

In Nunnery v. Carter, 5 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 370, 78 Am. Dec. 231, it appeared that a certain amount of personalty had been given by will to the testator's son, on condition that he should support his mother, the testator's wife, during her life. The mother died before the testator's death, and the question arose whether or not the bequest was avoided on account of the impossibility of performing the condition. The court, while seeming to be of the opinion that technically the condition was precedent, held that "in reality and legal effect" it was subsequent, and, as such, could not, by becoming an impossible one, prevent the legacy from taking effect.

The court, in People v. Kingston, etc., Turnpike Road Co., 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 193, 35 Am. Dec. 551, placed corporate grants upon the same footing as individual grants, and held that in cases of conditions subsequent, if impossible to be performed, or rendered impossible by the act of God, the grantee is excused from the performance, and the estate is absolute.

2. Conditions Annexed to Bonds Generally.—People v. Manning, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 297, 18 Am. Dec. 451; Carpenter v. Stevens, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 590.

3. Conditions Annexed to Bonds Taken in Judicial Proceedings.—Scott, J., in Steele v. Buck, 61 Ill. 343, 14 Am. Rep. 63; Schwartz v. Saunders, 46 Ill. 22; People v. Manning, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 297, 18 Am. Dec. 451; Carpenter v. Stevens, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 590.

People v. Manning, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 297, 18 Am. Dec. 451, was an action of debt on a recognizance entered into by the defendants, conditioned for the appearance of one Chapman, on a day named therein, at a certain place, to answer for certain trespass and contempt for which he had been arrested. When the day came Chapman was violently ill and confined to his house and bed, unable to be moved, and so continued until a subsequent day, when he died. The court held that the recognizance in this case was like a bond with a condition a compliance with which has become impossible by the act of God, in which case the nonperformance is excused.

In Carpenter v. Stevens, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 590, after judgment for the return of an animal in an action of replevin, suit was brought on the replevin bond, to which was pleaded, by way of defense, that before the judgment in the original action was rendered the animal died, without the party's fault. This plea was held to be a valid defense of the action on the bond, as the death of the animal was regarded as an act of God.

In Baldwin v. New York L. Ins., etc., Co., 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 543, one of the conditions of a life insurance policy was that the insured should not go south of Virginia, which condition was subsequently modified by an indorsement on the back of such policy that the insured might reside anywhere in the United States, on condition that he was to be north of the southern boundary of Virginia by a certain date. The insured went south and was taken ill, being thereby prevented from going north before the date mentioned in the indorsement, and died south of Virginia. It was held that the policy was not thereby void.

cates of deposit; failure to make good the impairment of capital, or to keep good its reserve; in fact, any act which shows that the bank is unable to meet its liabilities as they mature, or to perform those duties which the law imposes for the purpose of sustaining its credit.¹

ACTUAL—ACTUALLY. (Compare CONSTRUCTIVE.)—Actual is something real in opposition to constructive or speculative, something existing in fact.²

1. In re Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, 1 Cent. L. J. 19.

National Bank Act.—In Irons v. Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, 6 Biss. (U. S.) 301, it was held that by the term act of insolvency as used in the National Bank Act, was clearly meant an act which would be an act of insolvency on the part of an individual banker, not simply such an act as authorizes the comptroller to appoint a receiver. The court said: "That is, the closing of the doors, refusal to pay depositors on demand, refusal to go on in the due course of business to transact its business as a bank, and discharge its liabilities to its creditors."

Closing Doors and Suspending Business.—"Whatever may be the rule as to when a bank may be said to be insolvent, the closing of its doors and suspension of its business must be deemed prima facie evidence of insolvency, and it is clear that such an act is an act of insolvency," as the term is used in the Michigan law. Stone v. Dodge, 96 Mich. 525.

2. State v. Wells, 31 Conn. 210. See also Astor v. Merritt, 111 U. S. 213.

This word actual is not unusual in legal phraseology, and is used as the opposite of "constructive." Thus we speak of actual possession, actual notice, actual fraud. McIntyre v. Sherwood, 82 Cal. 141.

The word actual does not, usually, advance the meaning. Speaking generally, a thing is not more itself because it is spoken of as "actual," nor is it an act more done or enjoined because it is said, or required, to be actually done. Thus the phrase "actual seizure" in § 1 English Mer. Law Amendt. Act 1856 (19 & 20 Vict., c. 97) means no more than "seizure." Gladstone v. Padwick, 40 L. J. Exch. 154, L. R. 6 Exch. 203.

"In law, it is true, the words actual and 'constructive' are the antitheses of each other when used in reference to treasons, notices, possessions, frauds, and in some other cases." In re Strawbridge, 39 Ala. 383.

Actual Annual Income.—A testator bequeathed all his real and personal estate to trustees in trust for his wife, with directions to sell and convert the same into money, and declared that his real estate, directed to be sold, should in equity be considered as converted into personalty as from the time of his decease, and that the actual annual income for the time being of his unconverted real and personal estate should be considered income for the purposes of his will, and be applied accordingly. It was held that the widow was entitled to the actual dividends becoming due after testator's death in the case of all the securities, except such as in their nature bore interest de die in diem. Unwin v. Eykyn, W. N. (66) 269.

Actual Bias. (See also the title JURY AND JURY TRIAL.)—"Actual bias" is the existence of a state of mind on the part of the juror in reference to the case, or to either of the parties, which will prevent him from acting with entire impartiality and without prejudice to the substantial rights of either party. People v. Wells, 100 Cal. 229.

Actual Confinement.—Actual confinement, in a statute relating to insolvent debtors, means either an actual imprisonment or "being upon the limits," the limits being simply by a fiction of law an extension of the prison walls. In re Moschberger, 10 N. J. L. J. 121, 12 N. J. L. 85.

Actual Contest.—The plaintiffs asserted that an "actual contest" was made in the probate court, and the counsel for the defendant claimed that there had been no "actual contest." The court said: "This depends upon what is meant by the term 'actual contest.' The natural import of the words, considered in connection with the context and subject matter of the question, is that the proceedings to prove the will were not entirely ex parte." Turnbull v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 409.

Actual Cash Payment. (See the title LIMITED PARTNERSHIP.)—The provision of a statute requiring a limited partner to contribute in "actual cash payments" is not violated by a payment in checks of third persons, it being conceded that they represented cash, and that the amount actually went into the firm business. Hogg v. Orgill, 34 Pa. St. 344.

Contra.—Authorizing a firm to apply for its benefit, and as part of its capital, United States bonds payable to bearer in the hands of a bailee, is not "an actual cash payment as capital" by a special partner, even though subsequently the bonds are applied for the benefit of the firm, and realize more than the necessary amount in cash. Haggerty v. Foster, 103 Mass. 17. See also Pierce v. Bryant, 5 Allen (Mass.) 91; Haviland v. Chace, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 283.

Actual Change of Possession. (See also the titles CHATTEL MORTGAGES; FRAUDULENT SALES AND CONVEYANCES; GIFTS.)—The statute of frauds to prevent sales and gifts in fraud of creditors requires "actual and continued change of possession." This phrase means an open, public change of possession, which is to continue and be manifested continually by outward and visible signs, such as render it evident that the possession of the judgment debtor has ceased. He must cease from the apparent as well as real ownership. Topping v. Lynch, 2 Robt. (N. Y.) 484, approved in Steele v. Benham, 84 N. Y. 634. See also Camp v. Camp, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 629; Randall v. Parker, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 73; Grant v. Lewis, 14 Wis. 487, 80 Am. Dec. 785; Brunswick v. McClay, 7 Neb. 137; Stevens v. Irwin, 15 Cal. 503, 76 Am. Dec. 500.

Where a vendor remains in possession of personalty as the agent of the vendee, there is not such an "actual change of possession" as the statute requires to prevent a presumption of a fraudulent sale. Grant v. Lewis, 14 Wis. 487, 80 Am. Dec. 785.

Where a mortgagee goes into a saloon and takes nominal possession of the tables, the mortgaged property, and puts them in charge of the bartender, where they are subsequently used by the mortgagor, there is not an "actual and continued change of possession" under a chattel mortgage. Brunswick v. McClay, 7 Neb. 137.

Actual Control, Care, or Management.—The Texas Code does not mean by these words actual possession. A person in constructive possession of an animal upon the range may, as an agent and the like, exercise "actual control, care, or management" without even reducing the animal into actual possession, and may thus constitute the owner within the meaning of the law. Moore v. State, 8 Tex. App. 496.

Actual Cost.—In Alfonso v. U. S., 1 Fed. Cas. 398, No. 188, the court, in referring to the Revenue Act of 1799, said: "I adhere to the doctrine laid down in the cases cited at the bar, U. S. v. Sixteen Packages of Goods, Fed. Cas. No. 16,303, 2 Mason (U. S.) 48; and Tappan v. U. S. Fed. Cas. 13, 749, 2 Mason (U. S.) 393, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 423: that actual cost in that section means the actual price paid for the goods by the party in the case of a real bona fide purchase, and not merely the market value of the goods." See also U. S. v. Twenty-six Cases, etc., 1 Cliff. (U. S.) 591.

In People v. Budd, 7 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 189, it was held that the provisions of a statute restricting charges for trimming and shoveling to the leg of the elevator, in the process of handling grain, to the actual cost, were intended to exclude any charge by the elevator beyond the sum specified for the use of its machinery in shoveling and the ordinary items of operating, and that the owners could not separate the charges for the various parts of the same service, and charge for the use of the steam-shovel furnished by them for elevating the grain, together with the sum which had been agreed upon between them and the laborers who shoveled the grain to the leg of the elevator.

Under a lease between two railroad companies whereby, when extra trains were required, the lessee was to be allowed "the actual cost of running the same," it was held that by the term "actual cost" was meant what was actually paid out. Lexington, etc., R. Co. v. Fitchburg R. Co., 9 Gray (Mass.) 226.

Actual First Cost.—The parties entered into an agreement that the plaintiff was to manufacture all goods sold by defendant, at an advance of eleven per cent. upon the actual first cost. Before this agreement was reduced to writing, certain estimates were made as to the actual first cost. The defendant contended that these estimates were to govern the actual first cost. The court said: "Had the question been left open by the agreement, I am not satisfied that the evidence discloses any agreement by the plaintiff to fix the actual first cost; but I do not inquire further as to this, being of the opinion that the parties have, by their agreement, precluded themselves from showing anything inconsistent with the natural meaning of the words 'actual first cost'; and thus I agree to the conclusion arrived at by the learned chief justice. Mr. Shepley argued that 'actual first cost' meant no more than 'cost.' In one sense that may be so; but the use of the three words as found in the agreement so emphasizes the meaning as to increase the difficulties in the company's way of showing a meaning differing from the natural and ordinary one." Black v. Toronto Upholstering Co., 15 Ont. 646.

Actual Damages. (See also the titles DAMAGES; EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.)—Actual damages are those which the injured party is entitled to recover for wrong received and injuries done, where none were intended. Ross v. Leggett, 61 Mich. 453, 1 Am. St. Rep. 608. The court in giving this definition was drawing a distinction between actual and "punitive," "exemplary," or "vindictive" damages. The Mississippi Code provides that the defendant in an attachment may recover actual damages suffered where the attachment was wrongful. In Marqueze v. Southeimer, 59 Miss. 440, the court said: "By actual damages we understand to be meant those actually sustained as the direct result of the wrongful attachment, and certainly traceable to it as a cause, and not such as are uncertain, contingent, speculative, and conjectural, or the result of the act of another person responsible for his own wrong."

So in Wilson v. Young, 31 Wis. 580, the court said: "By the term 'actual damages' I understand is meant all damages which the law gives as compensation for the injuries sustained, as distinguished from those which may be given in proper cases by way of example and punishment."

The actual damages sustained by the patentee are, according to the fourteenth section of the Act of July 4, 1836 (5 U. S. Stat. at Large 123), to be the sum fixed by the verdict. Stephens v. Felt, 2 Blatchf. (U. S.) 37.

Actual Dedication. (See also the title DEDICATION.)—In Longworth v. Cincinnati, 48 Ohio St. 646, the court said: "Actual dedication, we take it, means unconditional dedication."

Actual Delivery. (See also the title SALES.)—Actual delivery consists in the giving real possession of the things sold, to the vendee, or his servants or special agents who are identified with him in law, and represent him. Bolin v. Huffnagle, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 19.

Actual Determination.—A judgment of affirmance by default is not an actual determination. McMahon v. Rauh, 47 N. Y. 67. See also Caughey v. Smith, 47 N. Y. 244; Frank v. Benner, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 422. A re-mittitur controls the court below, and a judgment in pursuance of it cannot be said to be an actual determination. Wilkins v. Earle, 42 How. Pr. (N. Y. Ct. App.) 255.

Actually Dwells.—In Hay River v. Sherman, 60 Wis. 59, it was held that a pauper who was supported at a particular house actually dwelt there. The court said: "The place where he actually lodges and takes his meals must come within the meaning of the words 'actually dwells.' The statute is not, 'who actually dwells and has his home therein,' but 'who actually dwells or has his home * * * therein.' It contemplates that a person may have what may be called 'his home,' and yet be a subject of public charge; but, ordinarily, he is not so fortunate. Hence, to cover all cases, the disjunctive is used with the sweeping words 'actually dwells * * * therein.' The substance of the statute was taken from Massachusetts, though changed in phraseology and arrangement. There, instead of using the disjunctive, the words are 'who actually dwells and has his home within,' etc. This change is significant."

Actually Employed—Attorney.—Where 6 and 7 Vict., c. 73, § 12, required that an applicant for admission as an attorney shall be actually employed during the whole time of service under the articles in the business of an attorney, it was held that a period of eleven months, during which the clerk had been absent through sickness, could not be counted as service, as he had not been actually employed as an attorney or solicitor during the whole of the five years. Ex p. Moses, L. R. 9 Q. B. 1.

Actually Employed—Capital.—A corporation was not taxable for any capital "not actually employed" in the state of Michigan. It was contended that under this exemption a steamboat lying at Toledo, Ohio, and unproductive, was not taxable. The court said: "Looking at the whole subject, I think the term 'actually employed' has no reference to the actual use of the property purchased by the company, but is merely designed to distinguish the Michigan investment from the Indiana investment. Because the capital of a company or an individual has been used to purchase a steamboat, it cannot in any just sense be regarded as employed in every part of the world where the vessel may navigate, nor as unemployed when she is in ballast, or losing money, or laid up. The capital of an individual is regarded as employed or invested at the place where the owner does business. The capital of a New York or Boston merchant is employed in New York or Boston, no matter where his ships may be. This is the view taken by the Supreme Court of the United States in Hays v. Pacific Mail Steamship Co., 17 How. (U. S.) 596, where New York vessels employed in the California trade were held exempt from taxation in California." Michigan Southern, etc., R. Co. v. Auditor Gen., 9 Mich. 452.

Actually Engaged.—"In law, it is true, the words actual and constructive are the antitheses of each other, when used in reference to treasons, notices, possessions, frauds, and in some other cases. But here they are law terms—terms of art. This is not the manner in which the words of a statute are to be taken, unless that is evidently intended, which is not the case here. These words must be taken * * * in their 'natural import'—according to the common use of them.' And what is the natural import of 'actually engaged,' according to the common use of them? When we say in common parlance of a man, that he is actually engaged in farming or planting, does it necessarily imply that he must give his constant personal supervision to his farm or plantation? Does it mean anything more than that such a man has a farm or plantation in active operation on his own account, whether he conducts its daily affairs through an overseer or in person? The words embrace both cases. And so of many, if not most, other pursuits and occupations. The words 'actually engaged,' in common parlance, mean 'really or truly engaged;' engaged 'in fact,' and, according to the same law of common use, are the opposite or antithesis of 'seemingly' or 'pretendedly' or 'feignedly engaged.' In the common acceptance of the words, the same man may be actually engaged in two or more pursuits or occupations at the same time." In re Strawbridge, 39 Ala. 383.

Actual Expenses.—In Matter of Van Kleeck's Estate (Surrogate Ct.), 20 N. Y. Supp. 85, it was held that an administrator was entitled to an allowance for the time occupied in a trial, under a provision confining allowances by a surrogate to actual expenses.

Actual Force—Robbery.—Actual force means personal violence that occurs where injury is done to the person or where there is a struggle to obtain possession of the property. Long v. State, 12 Ga. 293.

"Constructive force" is a putting in fear. Long v. State, 12 Ga. 293. See also the title ROBBERY.

Actual Force—Insolvency Laws.—A Pennsylvania statute provides that an insolvent shall not be discharged until he has been confined sixty days, if he is in custody by virtue of a judgment in an action founded on actual force. In Dimmick's Case, 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 842, the court said: "The offense for which the petitioner was mulcted in damages was the removal of a sewing-machine. It is not pretended that he used any more force than was necessary for this purpose. True, he was angry, but there is no evidence that his anger manifested itself in any acts of violence, nor does the plaintiff, who was present at the removal, testify that she was put in fear. This is not enough. To constitute actual force within the meaning of the act, 'the force must be such as to put one standing in defense of possession, in fear of personal injury.' Widmier's Case, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 81. See also Graeff's Petition, 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 369."

Actual Fraud. (See also the title FRAUD.)—In Jefferson County Nat. Bank v. Streeter, 106 N. Y. 186, it was held that the words actual fraud are only satisfied where actual complicity or a conscious purpose on the part of the creditor to accomplish a known fraud is shown.

"Actual fraud implies deceit, artifice, trick, design, some direct active operation of the mind. Constructive fraud is indirect, and may be implied from some other act, or omission to act, which may be, in moral contemplation, entirely innocent; but which, without the explanation or actual proof of its innocence, is evidence of fraud." People v. Kelly, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 457. Fraud may be actual or constructive. Actual fraud consists in any kind of artifice by which another is deceived. Constructive fraud consists in any act of omission contrary to legal or equitable duty, trust, or confidence justly reposed, which is contrary to good conscience and operates to the injury of another. Jackson v. Jackson, 47 Ga. 109.

Actually in Session.—By a United States statute a marshal is entitled to fees for his attendance upon court while actually in session. It was held that a marshal is entitled to fees when, in accordance with a statute, he adjourns the court by virtue of an order directed to him by the judge. The court said: "We think the court should be deemed actually in session within the meaning of the law, not only when the judge is present in person, but when, in obedience to an order of the judge directing its adjournment to a certain day, the officers are present upon that day, and the journal is opened by the clerk, and the court is adjourned to another day by further direction of the judge." U. S. v. Pitman, 147 U. S. 671.

Actual Notice. (See also the title NOTICE.)—Notice is actual when one either has knowledge of a fact, or is conscious of having the means of knowledge although he may not use them. Speck v. Riffin, 40 Mo. 405; Maupin v. Emmons, 47 Mo. 304; Vaughn v. Tracy, 22 Mo. 417; Lemay v. Poupenez, 35 Mo. 71; Roberts v. Moseley, 64 Mo. 507; Musick v. Barney, 49 Mo. 458; Masterson v. West End Narrow Gauge R. Co., 5 Mo. App. 64; Porter v. Sevey, 43 Me. 519; Hull v. Noble, 40 Me. 459; Wilson v. Miller, 16 Iowa 111; Musgrove v. Bonser, 5 Oregon 313, 29 Am. Rep. 737; Curtis v. Mundy, 3 Met. (Mass.) 405; Williamson v. Brown, 15 N. Y. 359; Brinkman v. Jones, 44 Wis. 498; May v. Chapman, 16 M. & W. 361.

Actual notice is such as is proved to have been given to a party directly and personally, or such as he is presumed to have received personally, because the evidence within his knowledge was sufficient to put him upon inquiry; and actual notice may be proved by the facts of the case from which it can be inferred. Johnson v. Dooly, 72 Ga. 297.

Actual notice does not require positive and certain knowledge, such as seeing the deed; but that is sufficient notice which is such as men usually act upon in the ordinary affairs of life. When it is shown that purchasers are affected with a knowledge of such circumstances, then the foundation is laid from which the inference of actual notice may be drawn. Beatie v. Butler, 21 Mo. 323. See also Curtis v. Mundy, 3 Met. (Mass.) 405; Vaughn v. Tracy, 22 Mo. 415; Masterson v. West End Narrow Gauge R. Co., 5 Mo. App. 64.

The Kansas Code, concerning the opening-up of judgments rendered upon service by publication, provides as one condition that the party shall "make it appear to the satisfaction of the court, by affidavit, that during the pendency of the action he had no actual notice thereof in time to appear in and make his defense." To constitute the actual notice specified in the statute, it is not necessary that the defendant be fully informed as to the time of commencing suit, the court in which it is commenced, the property that has been attached, the exact amount claimed, the day named for answer, or other details of the action. It is enough that he is distinctly and clearly notified that a suit has been commenced and is pending against him, and notified from such a source and within such a time that by the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care and prudence he can ascertain all details and make his defense. Beckwith v. Douglas, 25 Kan. 234.

Actual Notice and Actual Knowledge.—In Cowan v. Withrow, 111 N. Car. 310, it was held that actual notice is not synonymous with actual knowledge or personal notice. That is to say, if the agent has actual notice the principal is charged with notice.

"The actual notice required by the statute [a registry statute] is not synonymous with actual knowledge. * * * We think the true rule is that notice must be held to be actual when the subsequent purchaser has actual knowledge of such facts as would 'put a prudent man upon inquiry which, if prosecuted with ordinary diligence, would lead to actual notice of the right or title in conflict with that which he is about to purchase.'" Brinkman v. Jones, 44 Wis. 519.

Actual Occupancy. (See also OCCUPANCY; POSSESSION.)—In People v. Campbell (Supreme Ct.), 22 N. Y. Supp. 458, it was held that the erection of a hunting lodge, to be occasionally used for hunting by one who makes no claim of ownership, does not constitute an actual occupancy within the meaning of a statute requiring notice of a tax sale to be served upon a person in actual occupancy of the land.

By actual occupant, in designating the individual against whom an action of ejectment might be brought, was intended no more than the "tenant in possession," as that term was used in the former practice. Occupant is he that has possession, one who has the actual use or possession of a thing. A soldier of the United States, claiming to be in charge, under superior officers, of real property, as property of the United States, is not the actual occupant, and an action cannot be maintained against him. People v. Ambrecht, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 97. An owner of land is not in the actual occupancy of the same, within the meaning of § 49 of the act concerning private corporations (Kansas Gen. Stat., ch. 23, p. 203), unless he is an actual resident thereon. Hunt v. Smith, 9 Kan. 145.

To create an actual occupancy, within the meaning of the statute respecting the sale of land for taxes, it is not necessary that the part actually occupied, of a lot of land sold for taxes, should be occupied professedly as a part of such lot. If such part is occupied as a part of another lot, it is equally an occupancy, and is as effectual as if it were occupied as a part of the lot sold. Smith v. Sanger, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 360.

Actually Occupied.—A person rented a house in which he resided. He let out beds by the night. It was held that a person who lives in a house, and merely lets out parts of it in the manner described, does not cease to be the actual occupier. Rex v. St. Giles, etc., 4 Ad. & El. 497, 31 E. C. L. 118; Rex v. Pakefield, 4 Ad. & El. 612, 31 E. C. L. 152. A let a shed contiguous to a passage-way between the shed and A's store, and received the rent, knowing that the shed was used for gaming. It was held that A did not actually occupy the shed. Com. v. Dean, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 387.

Actually Open for Business.—An insurance policy upon a store provided that the owner should keep a set of books, and keep them in a fire-proof safe at night and at all times when the store was not actually open for business. It was held that the books need not be kept in a safe from sunrise to sunset. The court said: "A store is actually open for business when it is lighted up and the merchant or his clerk is there ready, able, and desirous to sell goods, or do anything else that constitutes a part of the work or labor of conducting the mercantile business. A store is as much 'open for business' while the merchant is waiting for customers, during his customary business hours, as it is when the customers are present. An essential and indispensable part of the daily business was actually in progress when the fire broke out. The clerk was writing up the day's business in the books, in accordance with the custom and usage in country stores, where the salesman does duty as bookkeeper also, country merchants rarely employing professional bookkeepers. This work was going on in strict compliance with the covenant exacted from the plaintiffs by the defendant; and if the defendant desired to prohibit the plaintiffs from complying with this covenant by doing the work in the store after sunset, in accordance with the custom and usage of country merchants, it should have inserted a stipulation in the policy to that effect." Jones v. Southern Ins. Co., 38 Fed. Rep. 23.

Actual Ouster. (See also OUSTER.)—By actual ouster is not meant a physical eviction, but a possession attended with such circumstances as to evince a claim of exclusive right and title, and a denial of the right of the other tenants to participate in the profits. Burns v. Byrne, 45 Iowa 285.

Actual Record. (See also the titles RECORD; RECORDING ACTS.)—The Georgia Code provides that a mortgage shall have no precedence over liens obtained prior to the actual record of the mortgage. Upon the phrase "actual record," the court in Benson v. Green, 80 Ga. 232, said: "This section of the code refers to the actual record; and we think that means the spreading of the mortgage on the record, not the filing of it with the clerk."

Actual Residence. (See also DOMICIL; RESIDENCE.)—Actual residence is personal presence in a place. Culbertson v. Floyd County, 52 Ind. 368; Sears v. Boston, 1 Met. (Mass.) 250.

Although a party may derive his title to different tracts of land from different sources, yet if the tracts adjoin one another and are all in one inclosure, and there is no one but the owner residing thereon, such residence is an actual residence upon all the tracts. Wharton v. Bunting, 73 Ill. 16.

In Burton v. Perry, 146 Ill. 71, it was held that actual residence as used in a statute of limitation did not apply to an unlawfully acquired possession.

Actual Residence Distinguished from Legal

Residence.—The Kentucky Code provided that a plaintiff to a divorce suit must prove a residence of one year in the state. In Tipton v. Tipton, 87 Ky. 245, the court said: "There is a broad distinction between legal and actual residence. A legal residence (domicil) cannot, in the nature of things, coexist in the same person in two states or countries. He must have a legal residence somewhere. He cannot be a cosmopolitan. The succession to movable property, whether testamentary or in case of intestacy, except as regulated by statute; the jurisdiction of the probate of wills; the right to vote; the liability to poll-tax, and to military duty, and other things—all depend upon the party's legal residence or domicil. For these purposes he must have a legal residence. The law will, from facts and circumstances, fix a legal residence for him, unless he voluntarily fixes it himself. His legal residence consists of fact and intention; both must concur; and when his legal residence is once fixed, it requires both fact and intention to change it. As contradistinguished from his legal residence, he may have an actual residence in another state or country. He may abide in the latter without surrendering his legal residence in the former, provided he so intends. His legal residence, for the purposes above indicated, may be merely ideal, but his actual residence must be substantive. He may not actually abide at his legal residence at all, but his actual residence must be his abiding-place."

Actual Service.—A requirement that one shall be actually served with notice does not preclude service by publication. Martin v. Burns, 80 Tex. 676.

Actual Seizin.—"Seizin in fact, or in deed, as Lord Coke calls it, or actual seizin, means possession of the freehold by the pedis positio of one's self or one's tenant or agent, or by construction of law, as in case of a commonwealth's grant, a conveyance under the statute of uses, or doubtless of grants or devise, where there is no actual adverse occupancy. Seizin in law is a right to the possession of the freehold, when there is no adverse occupancy thereof, such as exists in the heir after descent of lands upon him before actual entry by himself or his tenant. 2 Minor Inst. 107, citing 3 Th. Coke Litt. and other authorities there cited. See also 4 Kent Com. 486, n. (a); 1 Lomax Dig. 5-64." Carpenter v. Garrett, 75 Va. 129.

Actual Seizure.—An execution debtor was possessed of a mansion-house and grounds, and also of a farm, which, with the exception of two outlying fields, adjoined the grounds and formed part of one block with them. The farm was in the debtor's occupation, although the accounts were kept distinct. The farm-house was a mile distant from the mansion-house in a direct line. On the 19th of May a writ of fi. fa. was executed at the mansion-house by the under-sheriff, who informed persons in charge there, including the steward of the estate, that all the goods on the estate were seized; and a man was left in possession. No act of seizure was done at the farm-house or upon the farm on that day, the under-sheriff intending what he had done to be a seizure of the whole; but on the following day a man was put in possession at the farm-house. The goods on the farm were claimed by assignees under a bill of sale which was made for an antecedent debt, and for the purpose of giving it a preference over the execution, and which was executed on the evening of the 19th after the seizure at the mansion-house was completed. At the time of the execution of the bill of sale it was known to the solicitor of the assignees that the judgment creditor had threatened to seize, and that a writ of fi. fa. on the same judgment had been executed in another county; and it was believed by him, but not known, that a writ had been delivered to the sheriff of the county in which the goods lay. It was held that what was done on the 19th of May amounted to an actual seizure of the goods on the farm and at the farm-house. Gladstone v. Padwick, L. R. 6 Exch. 203.

Actual Settler.—"I have before explained who may be an actual settler to demand a warrant—namely, one who has gone upon and occupied land with a bona-fide intention of an actual present residence; although he should have been compelled to abandon his settlement, by the public enemies, in the first stages of his settlement. But actual settlement intended by the ninth section (Act 3d April, 1792-3, Smith's Laws Penn. 209) consists in clearing, fencing, and cultivating, two acres of ground, at least, on each hundred acres, erecting a house thereon for the habitation of man, and a residence of five continued years next following his first settling, if he shall so long live. This kind of settlement more properly deserves the name of improvements, as the different acts to be performed clearly import. This will satisfactorily explain what at first appeared to be an absurdity in that part of the proviso which declares that 'if such actual settler shall be prevented from making such actual settlement.'" Per Washington, J., in Balfour v. Meade, 1 Wash. (U. S.) 26.

A Texas school land statute gives to actual settlers residing upon such land the prior right of purchase. It was held that actual residence was necessary. The court said: "An actual settler upon land is one who has actually established his residence upon it, and not one who has inclosed it and cultivated it, intending at some future time to live upon it. The use of the word actual would seem to have been intended to prohibit the courts from extending the meaning of the word 'settlers' by construction, and to confine the benefits of the provisions to those only who come within the literal meaning of the term." Baker v. Millman, 77 Tex. 46; and see also Bratton v. Cross, 22 Kan. 678.

So as to what constitutes "settlement" under a Texas homestead law, the court, in Busk v. Lowrie, 86 Tex. 132, said: "The language of the statute was used by the legislature for a definite purpose, which was to secure real bona-fide settlers upon the land. The word actually is used in the sense of being a real, and not a constructive or virtual, settlement. The courts of this state have so construed the same language used in pre-emption laws."

In Swan v. Busby, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 63, it was held that actual residence upon land is necessary to constitute one an "actual settler" within the Texas statute of 1887. The court cited Baker v. Millman, 77 Tex. 46; Metzler v. Johnson, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 137; Atkeson v. Bilger, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 99; Burleson v. Durham, 46 Tex. 152.

In the saving clause of a resolution of congress, granting certain lands to a railroad, when platted and surveyed, "expressly saving and reserving all rights to actual settlers," it was held that the words "actual settlers" did not refer to any other settlers than those who were actual settlers before and at the time of the filing of the plat, and those subsequently settling could acquire no rights. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Orton, 32 Fed. Rep. 459.

Actually Sold.—Under a Nebraska statute the county treasurer was entitled to additional fees where lands were actually sold for delinquent taxes. It was held that the failure to collect the purchaser's bid precluded the treasurer from recovering this additional compensation. The court said: "When are lands actually sold at a tax sale so as to entitle the treasurer to his fees? Clearly, when the sale is completed; when he has collected from the purchaser the amount of the bid." Miles v. Miller, 5 Neb. 272. See also Fiedeldey v. Diserens, 26 Ohio St. 312.

Actual Time.—A prisoner was sentenced to the penitentiary for life. The governor afterwards commuted his sentence in the following words: "to nine years of actual time in the penitentiary." It was held that by actual time in this commutation was meant nine full years in the penitentiary, and that the prisoner was not entitled to the good-conduct reduction of time. The court said: "To construe the commutation in accordance with the contention of counsel for the petitioner would be a palpable violation of that elementary rule of construction, viz., that effect will be given when possible to all of the terms and conditions of the instrument in question. In our view, the term 'nine years of actual time in the penitentiary' must be held to mean nine years exclusive of any reduction on account of good time. The demurrer to the petition will be sustained, and the petition dismissed." In re Hall, 34 Neb. 206.

Actual Use.—A United States statute exempted from customs duties wearing apparel in actual use. In Astor v. Merrit, 111 U. S. 213, it was held that this does not require that the wearing apparel should be actually worn. The court said: "The word actual, in the lexicon, has as a meaning 'real' as opposed to 'nominal,' as well as the meaning of 'present.' 'In use' is defined to be 'in employment'; 'out of use' to be 'not in employment'; 'to make use of, to put to use,' to be 'to employ, to derive service from.' These definitions aid in showing that it is too narrow a construction of the words "in actual use," as applied to this case, to say that they require that the wearing apparel should have been actually worn."

Church property in actual use was exempted from taxation by a Pennsylvania statute. It was held that actual use meant exclusive use, and that a mere concurrent or alternate occupation by the church did not come within the requirement of the exemption. Philadelphia v. Barber, 160 Pa. St. 127.

Actual Military Service. (See also the title NUNCUPATIVE WILLS.)—The privilege of making nuncupative wills is given to soldiers in actual military service. The will of a soldier made while in the barracks is not privileged. Drummond v. Parish, 3 Curt. 522; In re Phipps, 2 Curt. 368; In re Johnson, 2 Curt. 341; In re Pery, 2 L. T. 335. And so where an officer died while on a tour of inspection of the troops which he commanded, it was held that he was not in actual military service. In re Hill, 1 Rob. 276. So a sergeant with his regiment at Malta, under orders for the West Indies, was held not to be in actual military service. In re Norris, 3 Notes of Ecc. Cas. 197. A soldier passing from one regiment to another, both being in actual service against the enemy, was held to be in actual military service. Herbert v. Herbert, D. & Sw. 10. A soldier joining a regiment with a view of marching against the enemy, was held to be in actual military service. In re Thorne, 4 S. & T. 36. A soldier who has received a mortal wound on the battle-field is entitled to make a nuncupative will. In re Farquhar, 4 Notes of Ecc. Cas. 651; In re Churchill, 4 Notes of Ecc. Cas. 47; In re Prendergast, 5 Notes of Ecc. Cas. 92.

The term "service," in its restricted sense, is the exercise of military functions in the enemy's country in the time of war, or the exercise of military functions in the soldier's own state or country in case of insurrection or invasion; and in this sense the words of the statute, "actual military service," should be understood. Van Deuzer v. Gordon, 39 Vt. 111.

"But having marched into the enemy's country, from which he never returned, being encamped among a hostile population, and acting in conjunction with soldiers who were confronted by the rebel army, although he was in winter quarters, and not at the time of writing occupied with any present movement of the troops, but was apparently on some service detached from his own regiment, we cannot say that he was not a soldier in actual service." Leathers v. Greenacre, 53 Me. 573.

Actual military service is confined to those who are on an expedition. A soldier at home on furlough cannot make a valid nuncupative will within the provision made in favor of soldiers in actual military service. In re Smith's Will, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 104. See also Gould v. Safford, 39 Vt. 498.

A person in the naval service of the United States is not within the actual military service within an attachment statute. Abrahams v. Bartlet, 18 Iowa 513.

Actual Value. (See also VALUE.)—In Cummings v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 162, it is said: "The phrases 'salable value,' 'actual value,' 'cash value,' and others used in the directions to assessing officers, all mean the same thing, and are designed to effect the same purpose."

"The expressions 'actual value,' 'market value,' or 'market price,' when applied to any article, mean the same thing. They mean the price or value of the article established or shown by sales, public or private, in the way of ordinary business. Century Dictionary; Anderson's Law Dictionary; Murray v. Stanton, 99 Mass. 348; Cliquot's Champagne, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 114." Sanford v. Peck, 63 Conn. 493.

Actual Cash Value.—As a basis for taxation actual cash value means the price at which any piece of real estate, or personal or movable property, would sell for cash in the ordinary course of business, free from all incumbrances, otherwise than by a forced sale. Morgan, etc., R., etc., Co. v. Board of Reviewers, 41 La. Ann. 1156, 33 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 438. See also the title TAXATION.

Same—Insurance.—So where the term was used in an insurance policy it was held that actual cash value meant the sum of money the insured goods would have brought for cash, at the market price at the time when and the place where they were destroyed. Mack v. Lancashire Ins. Co., 2 McCrary (U. S.) 211. See also Wolfe v. Howard Ins. Co., 7 N. Y. 583.

In Birmingham F. Ins. Co. v. Pulver, 126 Ill. 336, 9 Am. St. Rep. 598, the trial court instructed the jury to estimate the plaintiff's damages according to the "fair cash value" of the property destroyed. The policy required that the estimate should be the actual cash value of the property. It was therefore contended that the instruction of the court was erroneous. The appellate court refused to sustain this contention, saying: "Between these two forms of expression we are unable to perceive any practical difference. The actual cash value of property is the price which it will bring in a fair market, after fair and reasonable efforts have been made to find the purchaser who will give the highest price. The actual cash-value, then, is the fair or reasonable cash price for which the property can be sold in the market. We see, therefore, no impropriety in explaining the 'actual cash value' as meaning the 'fair cash value,' or in using the two phrases as practically synonymous." And see the titles FIRE INSURANCE; MARINE INSURANCE. See also Wolfe v. Howard Ins. Co., 7 N. Y. 583.

Actual Market Value.—Within the provisions of a revenue law that goods shall be assessed at the actual market value, it was held that the words "actual market value" included the costs of boxing, packing, and covering in all cases where the merchandise in question was actually purchased in the boxes, packages, and coverings, and is usually so purchased and sold for shipment into foreign markets. Cobb v. Hamilton, 5 Fed. Cas. 1128, No. 2922, citing Barnard v. Morton, 2 Fed. Cas. 837, No. 1005; Grinnell v. Lawrence, 11 Fed. Cas. 54, No. 5831; Belcher v. Linn, 24 How. (U. S.) 535; Knight v. Schell, 24 How. (U. S.) 530; Wilson v. Maxwell, Fed. Cas. No. 17834.

The market value of goods is the price at which the owner of them, or the producer of them, holds them for sale—the price at which they are freely offered in the market; such price as he is willing to receive if the goods are sold in the ordinary course of trade; the

ACTUS DEI.—See the title ACT OF GOD.

ADD.—The word "add" means to join or unite, as one thing to another, or as several particulars, so as to increase the number, augment the quantity, enlarge the magnitude, or so as to form into one aggregate.¹

ADDITION—ADDITIONAL.—These words denote the idea of joining or uniting one thing to another.²

price which the purchaser must pay to get the goods. That is the actual market value. 3109 Cases of Champagne, 1 Ben. (U. S.) 241. See also 1209 Quarter Casks, etc., of Sherry Wine, 2 Ben. (U. S.) 249; Six Cases of Silk Ribbons, 3 Ben. (U. S.) 536.

Actual Total Loss.—See the title ABANDONMENT AND TOTAL LOSS (IN MARINE INSURANCE), Vol. I., p. 4.

Actual Possession.—See POSSESSION, and the title ADVERSE POSSESSION.

Actually Dangerous.—See DANGEROUS.

Actual Place of Abode.—See PLACE.

Actually Due and Payable.—See DUE.

Actually Chargeable.—See CHARGEABLE.

1. Webster's Dictionary, followed in Hancock County v. State, 119 Ind. 476. In this case it was held, where the legislature speaks of adding to a tax a penalty of ten per cent, that it was intended to increase the tax by that amount, and that the penalty attaches to and becomes a part of the tax.

Adding New Parties.—An Alabama statute permits the complaint to be amended by "striking out and adding new parties." This was held not to warrant the striking out of a sole plaintiff's name and substituting another. The court said: "It is impossible for us to say that the legislature, when it used the words 'adding new parties,' meant substituting a different party altogether." Leaird v. Moore, 27 Ala. 328.

2. The term additional embraces the idea of joining or uniting one thing to another, so as thereby to form an aggregate. We add by bringing things together. "Additional security" is that security which, united with or joined to the former, is deemed to make it as an aggregate sufficient as a security from the beginning. State v. Hall, 53 Miss. 644.

Where a court orders a bond to be given "in addition to" the one originally taken, such additional bond does not supersede the original one. Walter v. McSherry, 21 Mo. 76.

In Addition.—"The words 'in addition' do not ordinarily mean 'exclusive of,' but are diametrically opposed to the idea of diminution or abatement, but signify an increase of or accession to." Macdonald v. Trojan Button Fastener Co. (Supreme Ct.), 29 N. Y. St. Rep. 867.

Repairs—Additions.—It was agreed between partners that expenses for repairing were to be paid out of the profits, but additions by one of the partners. It was held that a new foundation, for a new engine put in the mill in place of an old one displaced, built because the foundation of the old engine would have been insufficient for the new one, must be considered an addition and not as repairs. Dummell v. Henderson, 23 N. J. Eq. 175.

Mill and Additions.—In Hill v. Townsend,

69 Ala. 286, there was a sale of a "mill and its additions." It was held that the word additions as used in the contract did not embrace detached articles of personal property purchased to aid in the operation of the mill, such as oxen, carts, etc.

Mill—In Policy of Insurance.—An insurance policy covered a "planing-mill building and addition and machinery therein." The engine room from which the motive power of the mill was furnished was situated twenty-two feet from the mill building, connected therewith by a shaft for the transmission of power, and a spout through which shavings were forced to the engine room. A roadway passed between the buildings. It was held that the word addition covered the engine room and engine. Home Mut. Ins. Co. v. Roe, 71 Wis. 33.

Mechanic's Lien Law. (See also the title MECHANIC'S LIEN.)—A New Jersey statute declares that "an addition erected to a former building shall be a building for the purpose of this act." It was held that a piazza was an addition within the meaning of this section. Whitenack v. Noe, 11 N. J. Eq. 321. In Updike v. Skillman, 27 N. J. L. 133, it is said: "An 'addition erected to a former building,' to constitute a building within the meaning of the mechanic's lien law (Nix. Dig. 487, § 5), must be a lateral addition. It must occupy ground without the limits of the building to which it constitutes an addition; so that the lien shall be upon the building formed by the addition, and the land upon which it stands." In this case it was held that a new story on an old building was not an addition within the act.

Any Addition of Building.—Where the owner of two adjoining messuages conveys one of them, and it is agreed by him and his grantee that if the latter shall make "any addition of building" westwardly, he shall not extend it northwardly beyond a certain line, the grantee is not thereby restricted from raising his building higher, though by so doing he interrupts the access of light and air to the windows of the grantor's house. Atkins v. Bordman, 2 Met. (Mass.) 457, 37 Am. Dec. 100.

All Future Erections or Additions.—"The right of a tenant to remove trade fixtures may doubtless be qualified by the covenants in the lease. But we are of opinion that the covenant to deliver up in good order 'all future erections or additions' to or upon the premises is limited, in purpose and effect, to new buildings erected or old buildings added to, * * * and cannot be extended so as to deprive the tenants of the right to remove trade fixtures, much less personal property, put by them upon the premises during the term." Holbrook v. Chamberlin, 116 Mass. 162.

ADDRESS OF LETTERS. (See also the title LETTERS.)—The subject of sufficiency or mistake in the address of a letter containing notice of dishonor will be fully treated under the title BILLS AND NOTES. As to notices generally, see the title NOTICE. At this point it is proposed to give some general illustrations as to sufficient and insufficient addresses, which will be found set out in the notes.¹

1. Domicil or Residence.—It is not necessary that notice should be addressed to the place of the party's domicil. If addressed to the place of his actual residence it is sufficient. Young v. Durgin, 15 Gray (Mass.) 264. Thus a notice may be sent to a senator, addressed to him at Washington, when the senate is in session. Chouteau v. Webster, 6 Met. (Mass.) 1, 39 Am. Dec. 705.

Residence or Place of Business.—Notice may be addressed either to the residence or the place of business of the person to be notified. Columbia Bank v. Lawrence, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 578; U. S. Bank v. Carneal, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 549; Williams v. U. S. Bank, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 96; Van Vechten v. Pruyn, 13 N. Y. 549; Cuyler v. Nellis, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 398; Reid v. Payne, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 218; Montgomery County Bank v. Marsh, 7 N. Y. 481; Morton v. Westcott, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 425; Exchange, etc., Co. v. Boyce, 3 Rob. (La.) 307; Adams v. Wright, 14 Wis. 408; Stedman v. Gooch, 1 Esp. 3.

But in Van Vechten v. Pruyn, 13 N. Y. 549, 2 Ames Cas. 438, it was held, where the residence of an indorser of a note was in the same village as that in which the note was held, and he was at home three days in the week, that it was insufficient to direct the notice to his place of business in a distant city, there being no evidence that the notice actually reached him.

Sufficient Address.—The full name of the party to whom the notice is to be sent, and the name of the town or city, is a sufficient address. True v. Collins, 3 Allen (Mass.) 440.

A notice addressed to "W. E. Rose, Columbia, S. C." was held sufficient. Benedict v. Rose, 16 S. Car. 629.

"Where the party to be charged has added to his signature the name of a place, it is sufficient in addressing the notice to follow the signature and name given." 2 Ames Cas. Bills and Notes, p. 849. See Mann v. Moors, R. & M. 249, 21 E. C. L. 429; Burmester v. Barron, 17 Q. B. 828, 79 E. C. L. 828.

Where a mistake is made in the address, but the notice is nevertheless duly received, it will be sufficient, Walter v. Haynes, R. & M. 149, 21 E. C. L. 402; unless the error in the address is calculated to mislead the party to be notified, Story Promissory Notes (7th ed.), § 347.

Mistake.—A notice addressed to Darcy instead of Davey is insufficient. Davey v. Jones, 42 N. J. L. 28.

A Mistake in the Name of the Post-office to which a notice of protest is directed does not render the notice inoperative, where it appears that the post-office is as well known by one name as the other; a notice directed to Geddesburgh, when it should have been Geddes, was accordingly holden good. Geneva Bank v. Howlett, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 329.

Mistake—Directions Too General.—The address must not be too general, and notice of dishonor sent to a large city, addressed to an indorser by his surname only, is insufficient. 2 Ames Cas. Bills and Notes, p. 849; Walter v. Haynes, R. & M. 149, 21 E. C. L. 402; True v. Collins, 3 Allen (Mass.) 440.

So it is not sufficient to direct a notice generally to a parish, county, or township in which there are a number of post-offices. Bénel v. Tournillon, 6 Rob. (La.) 500; and see also True v. Collins, 3 Allen (Mass.) 438.

Mistake in Address—Estoppel.—A party may be estopped from taking advantage of a mistake in a letter addressed to him, where such mistake was caused by the manner of his own writing. Manufacturers', etc., Bank v. Hazard, 30 N. Y. 226; Hewitt v. Thompson, 1 M. & Rob. 541.

Two Towns of the Same Name.—Where there are two towns of the same name, an address to be sufficient must name the state as well as the town. Beckwith v. Smith, 22 Me. 125, 38 Am. Dec. 290.

Death of Party upon Whom Notice is to be Served.—Upon the death of the indorser a notice directed to the legal representatives of J. M. B., deceased, was held sufficient where no legal representatives had been appointed at the time of dishonor. Boyd v. City Sav. Bank, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 501.

The legal representative of a dead man is his administrator or executor, and, therefore, a notice addressed through the mail to the "legal representative" of Hardeman, deceased, the indorser, in due time, to the last residence of the deceased, is good, though it does not appear that the legal representative ever received it. Pillow v. Hardeman, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 538, 39 Am. Dec. 195.

But if a representative has been appointed, he should be addressed by name. Smalley v. Wright, 40 N. J. L. 471.

It has been held that notice addressed to the estate of the deceased is insufficient, as the term might apply to heirs at law as well as to the personal representatives. Massachusetts Bank v. Oliver, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 557.

Where the sender of the notice is unaware of the death of the addressee, a notice addressed in the name of the deceased is sufficient. Stewart v. Eden, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 121, 2 Am. Dec. 222; Barnes v. Reynolds, 4 How. (Miss.) 114; Maspero v. Pedesclaux, 22 La. Ann. 227; Cosgrave v. Boyle, 6 Can. Supreme Ct. 178.

An Agreement to Employ the Plaintiff in a particular capacity cannot be inferred from the direction upon a letter addressed by the defendant to the plaintiff in that character, the letter itself relating to the quantum of salary only. Chiodi v. Waters, 1 Stark. 335, 2 E. C. L. 132.

I. INTRODUCTORY—SCOPE OF ARTICLE.—The treatment of this subject will conform to the limits marked out by the definitions given in the succeeding section. It will be strictly a discussion of ademptions, and will not extend to advancements,¹ revocation of wills,² or the satisfaction of legacies.³

Each of these topics may be investigated under its appropriate title elsewhere in this work.

II. DEFINITION.—The term “ademption,” as its etymology implies,¹ literally means removal or extinction;² and the phrase “ademption of legacies” denotes the obliteration of testamentary bequests, either by the voluntary act of the testator or by the loss or destruction of the thing bequeathed, and without the consent of the legatee.³

Confined to Legacies.—Ademption is applied to legacies alone; and as the latter term is confined to bequeathed personal property, ademption must be similarly restricted. It is never properly used concerning devises of real estate.⁴

Not Applicable to Intestate Succession.—A legacy, too, presupposes the making of a testament; and the term “ademption,” therefore, is not applicable in cases of intestate succession.

III. DISTINCTIONS.—The term “ademption” has been so often confused with certain others, which either denote analogous doctrines, or belong to other branches of the law and express corresponding rules there, that it is necessary at the outset to keep clearly in mind the distinction between these various terms and the exact scope of the phrase which forms the subject of this treatise.

Ademption and Satisfaction Distinguished.—Ademption is probably most often confused with satisfaction; and while these two terms have sometimes been used loosely and interchangeably, each has now come to possess a distinct meaning, which has been awarded it by eminent judicial authority. The term “satisfaction” is used to denote the extinction of a legacy which the testator has bound himself to bestow, and the result is effected jointly by the act of the testator and the consent of the legatee.⁵ Ademption, as has already been shown,

1. From adimere, to take away.

2. In Gill's Estate, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 141, it was said: “The radical error of the auditor consists in his having given Mrs. Miller credit, in settling the account of the legatees of John Gill, for a bequest which had no existence, and which was extinguished; this being the true idea conveyed by the technical phrase ‘ademed.’”

3. Ademption of Legacies Defined.—The phrase “ademption of legacies,” while both ancient and of common occurrence, has been seldom satisfactorily defined either by judges or text writers. Most of the attempted judicial definitions omit some important element of the doctrine which the phrase is used to express, and contain only one phase of it. See, for example, the following: “Ademption is the extinction or satisfaction of a legacy by some act of a testator, which is equivalent to a revocation of the bequest, or indicates the intention to revoke; and the rule is applied where the testator is a parent of the legatee, or stands in loco parentis.” Burnham v. Comfort, 108 N. Y. 539, 2 Am. St. Rep. 462, repeated in In re Turfner's Estate (Surrogate Ct.), 23 N. Y. Supp. 139. This is really a definition of ademption by advanced portions, and does not cover those forms of ademption which take place by alienation, transformation, removal, etc. See infra, this title, Modes of Ademption. Perhaps as near an approach to a comprehensive and accurate definition as has been made by the courts is the following, from Cozzens v. Jamison, 12 Mo. App. 456: “Ademption is the technical term used to describe the act by which a testator pays in his lifetime to his legatee a general legacy which, by his will, he had proposed to give him at death; or else the act by which a specific legacy has become inoperative on account of the testator having parted with the subject.”

4. Ademption not Predicable of Devises.—See Burnham v. Comfort, 108 N. Y. 535, 2 Am. St. Rep. 462, where the court, by Gray, J., says: “The rule of ademption is predicable of legacies of personal estate, and is not applicable to devises of realty. Story Eq. Jur., § 1111; 2 Wms. Exrs. (5th Am. ed.) 1202; 1 Roper on Leg. 365; Davys v. Boucher, 3 Y. & C. 397; Langdon v. Astor, 16 N. Y. 34.” See also Clark v. Jetton, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 236; Weston v. Johnson, 48 Ind. 6; Marshall v. Rench, 3 Del. Ch. 256; Hansbrough v. Hooe, 12 Leigh (Va.) 316, 37 Am. Dec. 659. But see an article in 33 American Law Register and Review, 779, 781, for an attempt to extend the meaning of ademption to devises of real property.

5. Satisfaction Distinguished from Ademption.—This application of the word, though now well established, is comparatively recent. The first careful judicial distinction between the words “ademption” and “satisfaction” appears to have been made in Chichester v. Coventry, L. R. 2 H. L. Cas. 71, where Lord Romilly presents the following exhaustive discussion: “I think that a full view of the cases, and a consideration of the doctrine on this subject, do not justify the observation that there exists no distinction between ademption and satisfaction, an observation which is not, so far as I have been able to examine the cases, to be found in any other case on the subject, and which, if adopted, would often entangle the court in this difficulty, that it would be hard to dis-takes place regardless of the legatee's consent.¹ In some of the New York cases ademption has been treated as applicable only to specific, and satisfaction only to general, legacies.² But this distinction has not been generally adopted; and in view of the high standing of the courts which have established the distinction first mentioned, it seems likely that their terminology will prevail, and it is in this sense that the words will be used in the following pages.

Ademption and Revocation of Wills Distinguished.—The doctrine of ademption, if not the term itself, has sometimes been confused with the analogous rule of revocation of wills by subsequent conveyances. Revocation, however, is predicable only of devises of real property, and, as has already been shown, the rule of ademption operates only upon personality.³

Ademption and Advancements Distinguished.—The term "advancements" is not infrequently used in judicial opinions to express one form of ademption, viz., that which takes place by virtue of a gift from the testator to the legatee. But this use of the term "advancements" is unauthorized, as the latter is cover how any question of election could ever arise; and accordingly the vice-chancellor in this case below expressed himself as unable to understand how election was or could be dealt with in the case of Thynne v. Glengall, 2 H. L. Cas. 131. I venture to think that the distinction is marked, and that it is recognized in all the decided cases on the subject. It appears to me to be accurately expressed by the legal terms ademption and satisfaction. The general question was, I think, well expressed by Lord Cranworth during the argument, when he said, that in cases where it arises the second instrument must be read as if the maker of that instrument had expressed in it that he intended the benefit thereby given to be taken in substitution for the benefit given by the former instrument. In truth, in both cases, the second gift is given in substitution for the former benefit. The distinction between ademption and satisfaction lies in this: in ademption the former benefit is given by a will, which is a revocable instrument, and which the testator can alter as he pleases, and consequently, when he gives benefits by a deed subsequently to the will, he may, either by express words, or by implication of law, substitute a second gift for the former, which he has the power of altering at his pleasure. Consequently, in this case the law uses the word ademption, because the bequest or devise contained in the will is thereby adeemed, that is, taken out of the will. But when a father, on the marriage of a child, enters into a covenant to settle either land or money, he is unable to adeem or alter that covenant; and if he gives benefits by his will to the same objects, and states that this is to be in satisfaction of the covenant, he necessarily gives the objects of the covenants the right to elect whether they will take under the covenant or whether they will take under the will. Therefore this distinction is manifest. In cases of satisfaction the persons intended to be benefited by the covenant, who, for shortness, may be called the objects of the covenant, and the persons intended to be benefited by the bequest or devise—in other words, the objects of the bequest—must be the same. In cases of ademption they may be, and frequently are, different. The cases of Durham v. Wharton, 3 Cl. & F. 146, and of Thynne v. Glengall, 2 H. L. Cas. 131, afford striking and leading instances of each of these two cases."

In the later case of Tussaud v. Tussaud, 9 Ch. Div. 380, it was observed by Cotton, L. J.: "It must be remembered that the case is one, not of ademption, but of satisfaction; and the two classes of cases are pointedly distinguished in the case of Chichester v. Coventry, L. R. 2 H. L. Cas. 71. In a case of ademption, where the will is first, that is a revocable instrument, and the testator has an absolute power of revoking or altering any gift thereby made. But where the obligation is earlier in date than the will, the testator, when he makes his will, is under a liability which he cannot revoke or avoid. He can only put an end to it by payment, or by making a gift with the condition, expressed or implied, that the legatees shall take the gift made by the will in satisfaction of their claim under the previous obligation. It is therefore easier to assume an intention to adeem than an intention to give a legacy in lieu or in satisfaction of an existing obligation. We mention this to show that many decisions, where, in cases of ademption, differences between the two provisions have been held insufficient to prevent the presumption against double portions from applying, cannot be considered as authorities in the present case."

See, to the same effect, Cooper v. McDonald, L. R. 16 Eq. 267; and see Pomeroy Eq. Jur., § 524, where the author discusses the distinction on the basis of these English authorities.

3. See supra, this title, Definition. And see Kirk v. Eddowes, 8 Jur. 532, where Vice-Chancellor Wigram, commenting upon a passage from Roper on Legacies, observes that the writer has not "sufficiently kept in view the distinction between ademption and revocation."

IV. MODES OF ADEMPTION—1. By Portions, on the Analogy of Advancements—
a. BY PERSONS IN LOCO PARENTIS—(1) The Doctrine Stated Generally.—Having thus defined the doctrine of ademption and considered its general characteristics, it is next in order to discuss the circumstances under which the rule operates, and the facts which will justify a court in holding that a legacy has been adeemed. Probably the most common form of ademption is that which takes place when the amount of the legacy is paid by the testator; but there is a marked difference in this particular between a bequest by one who owes a parental duty to the legatee and one who is a mere stranger. The rule governing the first of these cases involves an important, much discussed, and sometimes misunderstood proposition of law, viz.: Where (a) a testator (b) standing in loco parentis (c) makes a gift (d) to his legatee of a (e) certain (f) considerable amount, (g) substantially identical in kind with (h) a prior bequest, the courts will, (i) without direction in the testament, (j) presume, unless a contrary intention be shown, that such gift was intended to be applied as a part of the legacy; and the latter will be treated as (k) adeemed pro tanto or in toto, according as it exceeds or merely equals the gift.²

The Reasons for the Rule, as quaintly stated by Lord Hardwicke, are: "This court inclines against double portions: another good one; the court considers it as a performance of what was intended to be done, and paying the debt of nature which he owed his child."³

3. Reason for the Rule.—Watson v. Lincoln, Ambl. 325.

A recent expression of the same reasons by the Supreme Court of Maryland is as follows: "It is a rule adopted by courts of

The Presumption seems to be equally strong where a gift is made through a third party acting at the instance of the testator as when made directly by the testator.¹

(2) The Doctrine Analyzed and its Qualifications Discussed.—It will be observed that the various elements which comprise the proposition of law embodying this doctrine have been separately stated and numbered above.³ Each of these elements forms an essential feature of the rule as it has been gradually developed and rounded out by the authorities, and each will now be discussed in detail and in the light of the authorities.

(a) Giver must be a Testator.—At the outset it must be clearly understood that ademption is predicable only of a gift by one who has made a will or testament; it does not apply to gifts by an intestate,³ because ademption is a branch of the law of legacies and presupposes the making of a valid instrument of testamentary bequest. The term "advancements" applies to gifts under corresponding circumstances, made by a decedent who has left no will; but it is limited strictly to intestate succession, and is not properly used of gifts by one who has made a prior bequest.⁴

The doctrine of "advancements," therefore, while presenting many analogies to the topic here discussed, is treated elsewhere.⁵

(b) Testator must be in Loco Parentis.—A most important element of the rule of ademption by advanced portions is that the testator must be one who owes a parental duty to the legatee, or, in the language of the courts, the former must stand in loco parentis to the latter.⁶

equity to prevent a child from getting a double portion, an inequality which it is fair to presume the testator did not intend." Wallace v. DuBois, 65 Md. 153.

In Pym v. Lockyer, 5 Myl. & C. 35, Lord Chancellor Cottenham thus elaborates upon the reason for the rule: "The presumption of equity is against double portions, because it is not thought probable, when the object appears to be to make a provision, and that object has been effected by one instrument, that the repetition of it in a second should be intended as an addition to the first. The second provision, therefore, is presumed to be intended as a substitution for, and not as an addition to, that first given; but, when the gift is a mere bounty, there is no ground for raising any presumption of intention as to its amount, although such amount be comprised in two or more gifts. The first question to be asked is, whether the sums given are to be considered as portions, or as mere gifts; and upon this subject certain rules have been laid down, all intended to ascertain and to work out the intention of the giver. In the case of a parent, a legacy to a child is presumed to be intended to be a portion; because providing for the child is a duty which the relative situation of the parties imposes upon the parent: but that duty which is imposed upon a parent may be assumed by another, who, for any reason, thinks proper to place himself, in that respect, in the place of a parent; and, when that is so, the same presumption arises against his intending a first gift to take effect as well as a second; because both, in such cases, are considered to be portions."

Circumstances Necessary to Constitute the Relation.—The qualification itself is universally recognized, but, as is well remarked in one of the cases, "the chief difficulty in its application seems to have arisen from the inquiry, 'What are circumstances sufficient to invest the testator with the assumed relation of parent to the legatee?'"¹ Perhaps the most successful attempt at a definition of this phrase is the following, made by an eminent English jurist in a comparatively recent case:² "A person in loco parentis means a person taking upon himself the duty of a father of a child to make a provision for that child. It is clear that in that case the presumption can only arise from the obligation, and therefore in that case the doctrine can only have reference to the obligation of a father to provide for his child, and nothing else." The phrase, therefore, applies ex vi termini to a father,³ and may include a grandfather who has made settlements upon his grandchildren,⁴ and probably also an aunt⁵ or an uncle,⁶ though the latter has been excluded.⁷

Under the test announced above,⁸ a mother is not within the rule;⁹ a grandfather is probably not included,¹⁰ but it seems that a grandmother may be.¹¹

Father of Illegitimate Child—Common-law Rule.—At common law the father of an illegitimate child did not stand in loco parentis to such child.¹²

Common Law Modified by Statutes of Affiliation.—But under the test heretofore stated the rule would probably now be different as a result of statutes of affiliation, because by these there arises not merely a moral but also a legal obligation to support the child.¹³

Testator's Housekeeper.—A testator does not per se stand in loco parentis to his

I cannot do better than refer to the definition of it given by Lord Eldon in Ex p. Pye, 18 Ves. Jr. 140, referred to and approved of by Lord Cottenham in Powys v. Mansfield, 3 Myl. & C. 359. Lord Eldon says it is a person 'meaning to put himself in loco parentis; in the situation of the person described as the lawful father of the child.' Upon that Lord Cottenham observes, 'But this definition must, I conceive, be considered as applicable to those parental offices and duties to which the subject in question has reference, namely, to the office and duty of the parent to make provision for the child. The offices and duties of a parent are infinitely various, some having no connection whatever with making a provision for a child; and it would be most illogical, from the mere exercise of any of such offices or duties by one not the father, to infer an intention of such person to assume also the duty of providing for the child.'" housekeeper so as to effect an ademption of a legacy to her by a subsequent gift of a house and lot, there being no evidence of intention to adeem.¹

Proof of the Relation.—The assumption of the parental relation may be proven by extrinsic parol evidence, and need not be collected from the face of the testament.²

(c) Advanced Portion must be a Gift.—Where the portion advanced to the legatee is something to which the latter is entitled from the testator, the rule of ademption of course does not apply,³ for the transaction then becomes merely the liquidation of an indebtedness.

The Presumption of an Intent to Adeem is raised only where no obligation exists on the part of the testator to make the advance.⁴

(d) Gift must be Made to Legatee.—Nor does the doctrine of ademption obtain where the gift is made to another than the legatee, however close the donee's relationship to the latter. For example, a subsequent gift to the legatee's husband will not operate as an ademption of the prior bequest;⁵ though it seems that a contrary rule has been observed in cases of intestate succession, and that advancements to a son-in-law have been treated as advancements to his wife.⁶

(e) Legacy must be Certain as to Amount and Time of Accrual.—In an early English case it was stated by eminent authority that "there is no case where the devise has been of a residue (that is uncertain, and at the time of the testator's death may be more or less) in which a subsequent portion given has been held to be an ademption."⁷ The rule thus formulated has continued to be one of the im-

In this last case Lord Chancellor Cottenham says: "Whether the donor had, for this purpose, assumed the office of a parent, so as to invest his gift with the character of a portion, may be proved by extrinsic evidence, such as the general conduct of the donor towards the children, or by intrinsic evidence from the nature and terms of the gift. If the former be alone relied upon, it may prevail, although it should appear that the donor did not assume all the duties of a parent, or effectually perform those which he had undertaken: the question being, merely, whether the facts proved fairly lead to the conclusion that he intended to provide a portion for the child, and not merely to bestow a gift. Upon this point, Powys v. Mansfield, 3 Myl. & C. 359, founded upon Carver v. Bowles, 2 R. & M. 301, and many other cases, is conclusive. Such evidence of general conduct towards the child is of far less importance than that which relates to the pecuniary provision for it, whether that be found in the instruments containing the gifts or in extrinsic circumstances; and, as part of such extrinsic circumstances, the general conduct of the donor towards the family, and particularly towards the other children of it, may, very properly, be included in the consideration of his objects and intentions." 5. Subsequent Gift to Legatee's Husband.—Ravenscroft v. Jones, 32 Beav. 669. In this case Sir John Romilly, M.R., said: "I admit that if the money had been given to the daughter, either directly or indirectly, or settled partly for her benefit, I might then infer that it was intended as an advance to her. But there is nothing of the sort here. It was given apparently to the husband himself to do him good in his business. That is not an advance to her, and I think it is not an ademption. I am not aware of any case which goes to that extent, and I do not think it advisable to extend the doctrine of ademption further."

See to the same effect Hart v. Johnson, 81 Ga. 734; Rains v. Hays, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 303, 40 Am. Rep. 39. Compare Duckworth v. Butler, 31 Ala. 164; and see Yundt's Appeal, 13 Pa. St. 575; Kreider v. Boyer, 10 Watts (Pa.) 54. In this last case, alleged parol declarations by the testator tending to show that a loan to the son-in-law was intended as an advanced portion to the daughter were held inadmissible.

portant qualifications of the doctrine here under discussion, and later cases fully support the principle that the bequest must be of an amount definite and certain, or a subsequent gift will not adeem it.¹

Departure from Early English Rule.—But in so far as the early English announcement above referred to excluded from the operation of the rule of ademption all those testaments which provided for bequests of a residuary amount, the cases thus holding can no longer be regarded as of unquestioned authority, since they have been overruled in England;² and this departure has been followed by several courts in this country.³

Early Rule Prevails in Some Jurisdictions.—Still there are other jurisdictions in which the early doctrine apparently prevails, even since the change of the law in Great Britain, and where it is held that the bequest of the residue of an estate is not a case where the rule of ademption can operate.⁴

A Qualification subsidiary to the foregoing is that the rule of ademption does not obtain where the bequest is contingent and the subsequent gift certain.⁵

(f) Gift must be of a Substantial Amount.—Another limitation upon the doctrine—one which has crept in by virtue of more recent adjudications—is that the gift which will work an ademption must be of a substantial amount and not entirely disproportionate to the amount of the legacy. Thus, payments of insignificant sums of money⁶ or small presents⁷ to the legatee will not be considered by the courts in estimating the amount of the legacy. In Indiana, 512; and Devese v. Poutet, Prec. Ch. 240, note, where the legacy was of a residue left after the payment of a debt charged on the estate, the amount being uncertain.

2. Early Doctrine Overruled in England.—See Thynne v. Glengall, 2 H. L. Cas. 131; Montefiore v. Guedalla, 6 Jur., N. S. 329. In the latter case the court says: "It was contended in the argument, that all doubt on the subject is removed by the decision in the case of Thynne v. Glengall, 2 H. L. Cas. 131, the argument being that satisfaction and ademption are on the same footing in this court, by reason of the doctrine against double portions. I think the principle is the same in both cases, viz., that a parent does not intend to perform the duty twice of providing for a child. Seeing, then, that satisfaction and ademption rest on the same grounds, this court is not bound to apply the rule as to satisfaction, which is established by Thynne v. Glengall, 2 H. L. Cas. 131, to ademption, particularly as the previous cases, from which a contrary doctrine has been derived, are far from conclusive. Of the two cases of Freemantle v. Bankes, 5 Ves. Jr. 79, and Farnham v. Phillips, 2 Atk. 215, it appears that the former was heard as a short cause; and the latter could hardly be considered of much authority, as Lord Hardwicke himself expressed doubts as to the correctness of the doctrine then laid down. (His lordship then referred to the several cases of Watson v. Lincoln, Amb. 326; Rickman v. Morgan, 1 Bro. C. C. 63, 2 Bro. C. C. 394; and Bengough v. Walker, 15

Ves. Jr. 507.) On the whole, I think, the point must depend on the intention of the testator; and although the uncertainty of the amount of the residue ought to be taken into consideration, yet it ought not to decide the question. Here the terms of the residuary gift raise a strong presumption in favor of ademption, and the slight difference between the trusts of the residue and the trusts of the settlement is not sufficient to rebut that presumption." even the payment at various times of amounts aggregating in all one-ninth of the entire bequest was held not to effect an ademption.¹

(g) Advanced Portion must be Ejusdem Generis.—The gift which will work an ademption of the prior legacy must be substantially one of the same class of property with the legacy itself, or, to use a technical term, it must be ejusdem generis.² Thus it was held at an early day that a pecuniary legacy to a son was not adeemed by a subsequent gift of a stock of jewelry;³ nor is such a bequest extinguished by a conveyance of real property to the legatee;⁴ nor by the furnishing of the legatee's house at the expense of the testator.⁵ So it has been held that such articles as "jewelry, guns, pistols, tricycles, and scientific instruments" were not ejusdem generis with a gift of "furniture, goods, and chattels."⁶

A subsequent gift of money to bind out the legatee as an apprentice was refused allowance as a partial ademption of the latter's legacy.⁷

1. Gift One-ninth Part of Legacy—No Ademption.—State v. Crossley, 69 Ind. 208. The amount of the legacy here was nine hundred dollars, and the legatee acknowledged the receipt in all of one hundred dollars. The court said: "It seems to us that the one hundred dollars given the relatrix by the testator, in his lifetime, under this evidence, cannot be regarded as an ademption of a like amount of her legacy, under his will, for the reason that the evidence utterly fails to show that the testator, in making such gift, intended that it should operate as such an ademption. The rule upon this point, as we understand it, is that where one who has made his will, giving a legacy to a child, afterward, during life, gives a portion to or makes provision for such child, it will be deemed, even if not so expressed, an ademption or satisfaction of such legacy, if the circumstances indicate that intention, if it is not less than the legacy, if it is certain and of the same general nature; but if the difference between the gift inter vivos and the legacy named in the will be large and important, then the presumption of an intention to substitute the portion for the legacy ought not to and will not be allowed to prevail. Weston v. Johnson, 48 Ind. 1; Story Eq., § 1111; Stokesberry v. Reynolds, 57 Ind. 425. It cannot be questioned or denied, we think, that there is much confusion and uncertainty, both in the reported cases and in the legal text-books, in regard to the question we are now considering. This has arisen in part, perhaps, from an inapt use of words, or from giving or attempting to give to words of a technical import and use their plain and ordinary meaning. Thus the word 'portion,' which is so often used with reference to the gift inter vivos, which shall operate as an ademption of a given legacy, is clearly a word of technical import when used in that connection. It is generally used for the purpose of indicating or signifying that part of a person's estate which a child would be entitled to upon the death of such person, but which has been given to the child by such person, while living, as an advancement or provision. Where, as is this case, there is great disparity between the gift made inter vivos and the legacy to the child bequeathed in the will, the amount of the legacy being largely in excess of the amount of the gift, it seems to us that the gift cannot be regarded as either a portion or an advancement, within the legal meaning of those terms, which will operate either as an ademption or a satisfaction pro tanto of the legacy, unless the testator, in making the gift, declare his intention, or unless the circumstances clearly indicate such intention, that such gift shall so operate. On this point, therefore, we conclude, as we began, with the opinion that the evidence in the record fails to show that the testator intended, in giving said sum of one hundred dollars to the relatrix, under the circumstances, that such gift should operate as an ademption or satisfaction of a like amount of the legacy bequeathed to her in his will."

Bennet*, 3 Atk. 77. The master of the rolls says in the opinion in the former case: "The plaintiff's counsel insist, that as the thousand pounds was given to bind the defendant out apprentice, that the testator having afterwards done this himself, it is a partial ademption, and ought to be taken

Qualifications.—But it is said also that the gift by way of advancement need not be in all respects identical with the legacy,¹ and that the courts will not regard slight circumstances of difference.² For example, a bequest of money has been held adeemed by a subsequent gift of stock.³

Intention of Testator Controlling.—The question of what gifts are ejusdem generis, frequently becomes one of the intention of the testator, and such intention, rather than the character of the property, will determine.⁴

Accomplishment by Testator of Purpose for which Legacy is Given.—Where the legacy is given for a specified purpose, the accomplishment thereof by the testator is also an ademption;⁵ and in this connection the rule of ejusdem generis is often applied. A bequest of a certain sum for the purpose of putting out the son of the testator as an apprentice was held to be adeemed pro tanto by subsequent expenditures in putting him out as a clerk in the Navy Office.⁶ So the bequest of a certain sum for the purpose of liquidating a church debt is adeemed if the testator subsequently pays the debt himself.⁷ But a legacy for the erection of a church building, not to be paid until the property should be free from debt, has been held not to be adeemed by contributions from the testator during his lifetime.⁸

out of the portion; and they have compared this to the case of a person's giving A a thousand pounds by will to build him a house; if the testator in his lifetime lays out that sum upon a house for A, it is a satisfaction, and A shall not have the thousand pounds under the will; and that as the defendant in the present case has had the thing intended, he shall not have the legacy. But I think the present case differs from that which has been cited, because the thousand pounds is not given for the putting him out as an apprentice only, but for other purposes, maintenance, etc.; neither are the executors obliged to expend such sums as shall be necessary for apprenticing him, out of the thousand pounds, but they may do it out of the interest and produce of it. The defendant, besides, might have chosen some other business, or perhaps none at all. Therefore those cases wherein ademption has been allowed must be confined to such instances where a testator gives a legacy for one particular purpose only, and after that applies a sum of money to the same purpose."

2. Hartopp v. Hartopp, 17 Ves. Jr. 196.

3. Bequest of Money Adeemed by Gift of Stock.—Phillips v. Phillips, 34 Beav. 19; Bengough v. Walker, 15 Ves. Jr. 507. Compare Lawes v. Lawes, 20 Ch. Div. 81, 89, which, however, was a case of satisfaction, the father having given a bond for the payment of the legacy.

4. Question of Intention.—Jones v. Mason, 5 Rand. (Va.) 577, 16 Am. Dec. 761; May v. May, 28 Ala. 157, the court in the latter case saying: "It is objected that the advancements and bequests are not ejusdem generis. This makes no difference, if it were the intention of the testator to substitute the one, in whole or in part, for the other. Jones v. Mason, 5 Rand. (Va.) 577, 16 Am. Dec. 761, and cases there cited. But the objection is not well founded in fact. The portions given off are of the very property of the testator's estate which would have been subject to division among the legatees had the testator died the day before he made the advancements. Be this, however, as it may, if it was the intention of the testator to execute his will, in part, by placing the older children in possession of something like the shares which would fall to them under the will, then the legacies are adeemed, pro tanto. The following cases show that the intention is to be looked to, and will prevail, whether the thing given by the will and that advanced be of the same kind or not: Hoskins v. Hoskins, Prec. Ch. 263; Chapman v. Salt, 2 Vern. 646; Jones v. Mason, 5 Rand. (Va.) 577, 16 Am. Dec. 761; Rickman v. Morgan, 1 Bro. C. C. 63, 2 Bro. C. C. 394, 15 Ves. 507. The objection, that the gift to Moore and wife by the will differs from that made by the testator when he gave off to them their respective portions, is fully met by this view. He was making provision for these grown and married children, to meet their then exigencies, rather than withhold their shares until after his death."

6. Rosewell v. Bennet, 3 Atk. 77. But see Roome v. Roome, 3 Atk. 181, where the legacy was given for other purposes as well as for binding out the legatee as an apprentice, and subsequent expenditures for the latter purpose were held not to work an ademption.

8. Keiper's Appeal, 124 Pa. St. 193. The Object of Gift Different from Purpose Expressed in Will.—And generally where the object of the gift is not the same as the purpose expressed in the testament, there will be no ademption.¹

(h) The Gift must be Subsequent to the Testament.—Another important qualification of the doctrine of ademption by gifts in the nature of advances is that it applies only to such as are made subsequently to the testament.² And where the gift was made subsequently to the will, but the latter was afterwards confirmed in its full amount by a codicil, no ademption was allowed.³ Even where a small portion of the gift, which consisted of a series of deposits, was made after the will, nothing was allowed by way of ademption pro tanto.⁴

(i) No Direction in Testament Necessary.—The basis of the doctrine of ademption by portions is the implied intention of the testator.⁵ It is not, therefore, necessary to look to the terms of the testament itself for any authority to put the rule into operation.

When Testament Provides for Ademption.—Sometimes, however, that instrument does provide for an ademption,⁶ and then, of course, no question of intent can arise.

When Testament Contains Provisions against Ademption.—Not infrequently, also, a will contains provisions against ademption; and these, of course, are fully respected and prevent the operation of the rule.⁷

(j) Advanced Portion only Presumed to be Intended to Adeem: Rebuttal of the Presumption.—The propositions discussed in the foregoing pages might, in one sense, be termed a rule of evidence rather than of substantive law, for the professed guide of the courts in applying it is the intent of the testator;⁸ and the ascertainment of this intent involves an examination of evidence. Now the fact of an advance portion having been given is but one element, though a most important one, of the evidence from which the testator's intent is to be derived. Proof of the advance gift raises a presumption that it was intended to reduce proportionately the amount of the legacy.⁹

theory of the court in this case seems to have been that while contributions were made towards the building fund, a proper construction of the will permitted the amount of the legacy to be applied on the church debt.

1. Debeze v. Mann, 1 Cox 346, 1 Rev. Rep. 57; Pankhurst v. Howell, L. R. 6 Ch. 136, where the testator bequeathed two hundred pounds to his wife to be paid ten days after his decease, and subsequently gave her two hundred pounds ready money; it was held that the legacy was not adeemed.

This rule does not seem to have obtained at an early period. In Upton v. Prince, Cas. temp. Talb. 71, the legacy was reduced to the extent of the prior gift under circumstances which do not seem distinguishable from those in the foregoing cases.

money. We are not able to see how a legacy can be adeemed by a gift made before the execution of the will in which the legacy was given. The small deposit which was made subsequent to the making of the will was but carrying out a purpose entertained long prior thereto; and the legacy contained in the will was not, as we think, adeemed pro tanto by the deposit mentioned."

Eveland*, 126 Ill. 37.

Since the application of the rule would have diminished the proportion of two of the legatees and doubled the portion of a third, the court, in the absence of other evidence, assumed that the testator intended not to adeem. Hopwood v. Hopwood, 22 Beav. 488.

Presumption may be Rebutted by Parol.—But the presumption thus raised may be rebutted by parol evidence to the contrary,¹ and the operation of the rule of ademption thus prevented.

Other Evidence Admissible to Confirm the Presumption.—And so, too, in promotion of the search for the real intention of the testator, after evidence has been admitted to repel the presumption that the legacy was intended to be adeemed, other evidence is admissible to confirm the presumption.²

3. Testator's Declarations Admissible.—Rosewell v. Bennet, 3 Atk. 77; Zeiter v. Zeiter, 4 Watts (Pa.) 214, 28 Am. Dec. 698; Johnson v. Belden, 20 Conn. 322 (a case of advancement); Wallace v. DuBois, 65 Md. 160; Richards v. Humphreys, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 133. In this last case the court says: "If the money is advanced or paid by the father under such circumstances as not to raise a presumption of satisfaction of the legacy, parol evidence may be offered to show that such was his intention."

In Kirk v. Eddowes, 3 Hare 509, 8 Jur. 532, Vice-Chancellor Wigram says: "The declarations by the testator, which accompany the transaction, have been objected to. Why should they not be admitted? They are of the essence of the transaction, the true nature of which cannot be known without them. The rule which excludes the evidence of the intention in the case of a gift by an instrument in writing does not apply. It cannot be contended, on the part of Mrs. Kirk, that payment to her husband of the amount of the legacy at her instance would not have precluded her from claiming under her father's will, or, in other words, that the advance would not have adeemed the legacy. If that is not so, it must be contended that an advance by the testator to a legatee, under an agreement in writing that he shall accept the advance in satisfaction of the legacy, will leave the legatee at liberty to claim the legacy, notwithstanding the advance; and if such an argument be not, in the case supposed, admissible, it must be under some rule which requires that such a transaction should not be valid unless reduced into writing. That, however, cannot be contended for. The evidence does not touch the will: it proves only that the gift did take place after the date of the will; and, upon that, the court is called upon to decide, whether the legacy was or not thereby adeemed. There does not appear to be any ground for rejecting the evidence upon the hypothesis supposed. But how does the question stand upon authority? The cases of Monck v. Monck, 1 Ball & B. 298; Rosewell v. Bennet, 3 Atk. 77; Thellusson v. Woodford, 4 Madd. 420; Bell v. Coleman, 5 Madd. 22; Biggleston v. Grubb, 2 Atk. 48; Hoskins v. Hoskins, Prec. Ch. 263; Chapman v. Salt, 2 Vern. 646; Powel v. Cleaver, 2 Bro. C. C. 499; Grave v. Salisbury, 18 Ves. 152, 1 Bro. C. C. 425, and Ex p. DuBost, 18 Ves. Jr. 140, are all authorities in favor of the admission of the evidence; and of these, the cases of Rosewell v. Bennet, 3 Atk. 77; Biggleston v. Grubb, 2 Atk. 48, and Monck v. Monck, 1 Ball & B. 298, are referred to with approbation by the lord chancellor of Ireland in Hall v. Hill, 1 D. & W. 94. Admitting, then, that parol evidence is inadmissible to prove that a will or other instrument was intended not to have a particular effect, still I think the court in the case supposed would feel bound to admit the evidence. This subject has been elaborately considered in 1 Roper on Legacies 341; but the writer has not, I think, sufficiently kept in view the distinction between ademption and revocation. But it has been said that a distinction exists in the present case, because, in the cases cited, the advance was made to the legatee himself, whereas, in the case before the court, it was made to the husband of the legatee. That, however, does not render the evidence inadmissible.

the legatee's presence,¹ but not in Connecticut, where a contrary rule prevails by force of statute.² In New York it is held that the declarations must have been contemporaneous with the making of the gift;³ but a different rule has been announced in Illinois.⁴ Charges on the testator's books have been held in Massachusetts to be legal proof of advanced portions;⁵ but in New York the rule prevails that the books are admissible only in connection with evidence aliunde.⁶ Declarations are not competent for the purpose of converting a loan by the testator to his son-in-law into an advancement to his daughter.⁷

The Silence of the Legatee, when the testator states that a portion of the bequest has been paid, does not constitute assent by the former, if the facts disclose that there has been no such payment.⁸

A Subsequent Unfulfilled Promise of a further gift is not sufficient to repel the presumption that the first gift was intended to adeem the legacy.⁹

(k) Ademption Operates pro Tanto only.—There is some early support for the view that a legacy is completely adeemed by a subsequent gift, even though the amount of the latter be much smaller than the bequest.¹⁰ But this doctrine has long since been repudiated; and the rule now prevailing is that the legacy, if greater than the gift, is reduced only to the extent of the latter.¹¹

A Presumption Merely.—Like the doctrine of ademption itself, the qualification that it operates pro tanto seems also to be only a presumption; but it is one which is not rebutted by evidence that the legatee expressed to the testator a preference for receiving a smaller amount down, rather than waiting for the entire legacy, even though the smaller amount was actually paid.¹²

Manner of Estimating the Reduction.—In estimating the amount of the reduction to be made, the value of the advanced gift at the time of making it must be taken.¹³

(3) The Doctrine Criticised.—The rule of ademption by advanced portions, though now, allowing for its many qualifications and limitations, firmly settled, has been the subject of considerable adverse comment. An eminent authority spoke of it as "a sort of artificial rule in the application of which illegitimate children have been very harshly treated, upon an artificial notion that the

and in more than one of the cases in which the evidence has been admitted the same circumstance occurred."

ciple, but showing the fallacy of much of the reasoning, that the portion, though much less than the legacy, has been held a satisfaction in some instances upon this ground, that the father, owing what is called a debt of nature, is the judge of that provision, by which he means to satisfy it; and though at the time of making the will he thought he could not discharge that debt with less than £10,000, yet by a change of his circumstances, and of his sentiments upon that moral obligation, it may be satisfied by the advance of a portion of £5000." Compare Hartop v. Whitmore, 1 P. Wms. 681; Clarke v. Burgoine, Dick. 353. Reports of the two latter cases are declared by Lord Cottenham to have been erroneous. See Pym v. Lockyer, 5 Myl. & C. 27, 39.

father is paying a debt of nature, and a sort of feeling upon what is called a leaning against double portions."¹

Rule not to be Extended.—This criticism, although not impairing the general validity of the doctrine, discloses the attitude of the courts towards it, and becomes important, when new phases of the doctrine arise, in determining how far it should be extended. The prevailing view appears to be that the rule should be confined within strict limits, and not carried further than the decisions have already gone.²

(4) Statutory Modifications of the Doctrine.—In some jurisdictions the common-law rule of ademption has been so modified as to require the testator's intention to adeem to be expressed in writing.³

b. ADVANCES TO STRANGERS.—Thus far the effect of subsequent gifts, where the legatee is one to whom the testator owes a parental duty, has been considered.

No Presumption of Intention to Reduce the Legacy.—A different rule prevails where no such relation exists and both the legacy and the gift are made by one who does not technically stand in loco parentis. Under these circumstances no presumption arises that the gift was intended to be applied in reduction of the legacy.⁴ Accordingly, a legacy to one's housekeeper, who is also a relative by marriage, is not adeemed by a subsequent purchase for her by the testator of a house and lot, there being no evidence of an intention on the testator's part to place himself in loco parentis.⁵

2. By Alienation—a. SALES AND GIFTS—General Rule as to Existence of Subject of Bequest.—"The law is settled that a legacy is adeemed if the specific thing does not exist at the testator's death."⁶ The foregoing terse announcement of the law is a summary of a long line of adjudications, and expresses the principle upon which rest several distinct forms of ademption.

Sale of Property Bequeathed.—It is one of the results of this doctrine that the

See also 2 Williams on Executors (7th Am. from 9th Eng. ed. 642), where the author says: "An artificial doctrine prevails in courts of equity, the establishment of which has excited the regret and censure of more than one eminent modern judge, though it has also met with approbation from other high authorities." And see 2 Woerner Law of Administration, § 448, where it is mentioned as "an arbitrary doctrine prevailing in courts of equity." See also Evans v. Beaumont, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 603, where the court says: "By these rules an arbitrary presumption is made against the child, or one standing in the place of a child, that a double portion is not intended, and the party only entitled to take the latter or compelled to elect between the two, while the stranger has no such difficulty in his way, and is presumed to be entitled to the bounty of the testator in both cases, until his right is disproven. We can but feel that a rule, as said by Lord Thurlow, that rests on the principle that a father has less affection for his child than a stranger, is not soundly based in reason, and not such as should be upheld by judicial adoption in our state. It is based on a logic that may be specious, but certainly is not found to have any foundation in the nature of the case, nor does it tend to reach the ends of either legal or natural justice. See 2 Story Eq. Jur., §§ 1100, 1110."

2. Rogers v. French, 19 Ga. 316; Watson v. Watson, 33 Beav. 574, where Sir John Romilly, M.R., observes that the rule is technical, and one not to be extended, and that it more often defeats the intention than gives effect to it.

3. See, for example, California Civ. Code, § 1351. These and other statutory changes of the rule can best be examined by the practitioner in connection with the enactments in force in each particular jurisdiction.

4. No Presumption where Bequest is to a Stranger.—Allen v. Allen, 13 S. Car. 525, 36 Am. Rep. 716. In this case the court says: "In case of a legacy to a stranger (and in this respect even grandchildren are regarded as strangers) no such presumption arises, and unless there is proof showing that the subsequent advance was intended as a satisfaction of the legacy, there will be no ademption, and the legatee will be entitled to both." Ex p. Pye, 18 Ves. Jr. 140; Richardson v. Richardson, Dudley (S. Car.) 184. Compare Ex p. Pye, 18 Ves. Jr. 140; Shudal v. Jekyll, 2 Atk. 516; Powel v. Cleaver, 1 Bro. C. sale by the testator of the property previously bequeathed adeems the legacy, if the latter be a specific one.¹

Subject Matter of Bequest Replaced by Other Property of Like Character.—This doctrine seems to obtain even though the property bequeathed and sold is afterward replaced by other property of a similar character. Thus the surrender of promissory notes which form the subject of a bequest, and the reconveyance to the testator of the property for which they had been given, adeems the legacy, even though the testator afterward sells the property and takes other notes for the same.²

So where a husband bequeathed certain long annuities to his wife, but subsequently sold them and with the proceeds purchased more annuities, which differed from the others only by being terminable three months earlier, the legacy was held to have been adeemed.³

1. Ademption by Sale of Property.—Ashburner v. Macguire, 2 Bro. C. C. 108, 2 White & Tudor Lead. Cas., pt. 1, 246* (where Lord Chancellor Thurlow says: "The testator, after making his will, sold his stock, which made it as if it had never existed; the legacy is adeemed according to all the cases"). This doctrine is confirmed by the following authorities: Updike v. Tompkins, 100 Ill. 411; Tolman v. Tolman, 85 Me. 317; Brady v. Brady (Md., 1894), 28 Atl. Rep. 515; White v. Winchester, 6 Pick. See also, among the earlier English cases, Sleech v. Thorington, 2 Ves. 561; Drinkwater v. Falconer, 2 Ves. 623; Humphreys v. Humphreys, 2 Cox 185; Birch v. Baker, Moseley 374.

Starbuck v. Starbuck, 93 N. Car. 183, contains the following statement of the rule: "Specific legacies are said to be adeemed when, in the lifetime of the testator, the particular thing bequeathed is lost, destroyed, or disposed of, or it is changed in substance or form, so that it does not remain, at the time the will goes into effect, in specie, to pass to the legatees. If the subject matter of such legacies ceases to belong to the testator, or is so changed as that it cannot be identified as the same subject matter, during his lifetime, then they are adeemed—gone—and never become operative. This is so because the thing given is gone, and nothing remains in that respect upon which the will can operate. Snowden v. Banks, 9 Ired. (N. Car.) 373; Tayloe v. Bond, Busb. Eq. (N. Car.) 5; Anthony v. Smith, Busb. Eq. (N. Car.) 188; Walton v. Walton, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 258, 11 Am. Dec. 456; Williams on Exrs. 1132; Redf. on Wills, pt. 2, 528."

Bequest of Proceeds.—But where the proceeds of the sale of property were bequeathed, and after the sale was made the proceeds were reinvested, but they were still traceable and there was no substitution, it was held that the legatees were entitled to the bequest, and that there was no ademption. Nooe v. Vannoy, 6 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 185. Compare Clark v. Browne, 2 S. & G. 524, where a gift of "whatever sum may be received from my claim on A B" was held not to be adeemed by the testator's acquisition of it in his lifetime, where he separated it and did not mingle it with the general mass of his property. And see McNaughton v. McNaughton, 34 N. Y. 201, where the court, by Porter, J., says: "The bequest was of the proceeds of his real estate, and in that sense it was specific; but it was in no sense a specific bequest of the proceeds of the farm which he afterward sold. If the latter had been its character, it may well be questioned whether the sale would have operated as an ademption of the gift. Coleman v. Coleman, 2 Ves. Jr. 639; Ogle v. Cook, cited in Collins v. Wake-man, 2 Ves. Jr. 686; Havens v. Havens, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 324; Gardner v. Printup, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 83; Pierrepont v. Edwards, 25 N. Y. 128." See further, Warren v. Wigfall, 3 Desaus. (S. Car.) 47.

The Direction in a Will that the Proceeds of a certain mortgage owned by the testatrix should be used to pay an existing mortgage against her estate was held to require the application to the purpose indicated, of certain railroad bonds in which the proceeds had been invested. Hopkins v. Gouraud (Super. Ct.), 23 N. Y. Supp. 189.

Unexecuted Intention.—Where a testator, residing in Jamaica, who had bequeathed a part of a larger sum, then in the hands of agents in England, afterwards removed to Philadelphia, and seven days before his death in that city wrote to his Jamaica agent, directing him to order the English agents to invest all the moneys in their hands, the fact that the latter had invested the funds of their own accord prior to the receipt of the letter from the Jamaica agent was not regarded as an ademption of the legacy. Basan v. Brandon, 8 Sim. 171. Here the vice-chancellor said: "A mere unexecuted intention to change the state of a fund, which the testator might have revoked, and which, in fact, was never carried into execution, can-

Doctrine Operates pro Tanto only.—The doctrine of ademption by alienation operates pro tanto only; so where but a part of a legacy has been alienated, the remainder still passes to the legatee.¹ Accordingly, where a will and testament devises real estate and bequeaths personalty, a subsequent conveyance of the real estate will not result in adeeming the legacy.²

Intention of Testator—English Rule.—There is some early English authority for the view that the question whether or not a legacy has been adeemed does not depend upon the supposed intention of the testator, but is to be determined solely according to the strict rule requiring the property bequeathed to remain in specie and a part of the testator's estate.³ There are, however, English cases to the contrary.⁴

United States Rule.—In the United States the doctrine of the latter line of cases has been generally followed; and in deciding questions of ademption the courts here have been disposed to observe the same rule which prevails elsewhere in the construction of wills and testaments, and to hold legacies adeemed only where the testator apparently so intended.⁵

It is Held in England that the sale, by order of court, of shares of stock belonging to a lunatic, and which he had bequeathed, works an ademption of the legacy.⁶

not in any sense be considered as an ademption."

So a Legacy of the Amount of the Bond and mortgage, to be collected three years after the decease of a testator's wife and divided among certain legatees, was held not to be adeemed by the fact that the testator subsequently took from the obligors an assignment of another bond and mortgage, of equal amount, in lieu of the first. Stilwell v. Doughty, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 311, citing Baker v. Rayner, 2 Russ. 125; Smith v. Fitzgerald, 3 Ves. & B. 52. But Stilwell v. Doughty, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 311, was criticised and disapproved in Georgia Infirmary v. Jones, 37 Fed. Rep. 754.

1. Ademption pro Tanto.—Walton v. Walton, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 258, 11 Am. Rep. 456; Warren v. Taylor, 56 Iowa 182, citing Zimmerman v. Zimmerman, 23 Pa. St. 375; Swails v. Swails, 98 Ind. 514, citing Hawes v. Humphrey, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 350, 20 Am. Dec. 481; Brown v. Thorndike, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 388; Skerrett v. Burd, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 246; Carter v. Thomas, 4 Me. 341; Hoitt v. Hoitt, 63 N. H. 475.

Most of the above are cases involving devises, and holding that a revocation by a partial conveyance of the devised estate is pro tanto only; they serve to illustrate, however, the analogous doctrine which has become well settled in regard to personal estate.

2. Warren v. Taylor, 56 Iowa 182. In this case the court said: "Although the will, by the act of the testator, ceased to be operative, or rather never became operative, as to the real estate * * *, this did not work a revocation as to his personal estate. Where a testator undertakes to dispose of both personal and real estate, and he subsequently conveys the real estate, it will not, in general, work a revocation of his will as to the personal property of which he dies seized. The conveyance of a part of the estate devised works a revocation pro tanto only."

3. Question of Testator's Intent.—Ashburner

v. Macguire, 2 Bro. C. C. 108, 2 White & Tudor Lead. Cas., pt. 1, 246*; Stanley v. Potter, 2 Cox 180. In the latter case Lord Chancellor Thurlow says: "I do not think that the question in these cases turns on the intention of the testator. The idea of proceeding on the animus adimendi has introduced a degree of confusion in the cases which is inexplicable, and I can make out no precise rule from them upon that ground."

5. See Patton v. Patton, 2 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 494, where the bequeathed property had been sold by an agent without the knowledge of the testator, and the sale was held not to effect an ademption, the inquiry of the court being largely one as to the testator's intention. Compare Blake's Succession, 43 La. Ann. 845, where the court, in construing a similar question, says: "The testator's intention is his will. This is the first rule of interpretation, to which all others are reduced. The intention must be enforced as far as it can be done legally." See also Swails v. Swails, 98 Ind. 511; White v. Winchester, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 48.

In Beall v. Blake, 16 Ga. 119, the court, in commenting on the view of Lord Thurlow in Ashburner v. Macguire, 2 Bro. C. C. 108, 2 White & Tudor Lead. Cas., pt. 1, 246*, observes that in England the rule is changed by statute (1 Vict., c. 26, § 23), and says: "The effect of these enactments must be, in a great measure, if not altogether, to suppress Lord Thurlow's innovation and to make the old rule of its pristine breadth—to make it a rule without exception—the old rule that the testator's intention gives law to his will."

Doctrine not Applicable to General or Demonstrative Legacies.—The doctrine of ademption, however, applies only to specific legacies or those which are identified and limited to particular objects;¹ it does not obtain in the case of general or demonstrative legacies.² The distinction between these two classes of legacies, and the determination of what ones are specific and what general, is an extensive subject in itself, and belongs rather to the general discussion of legacies, where it may be consulted.³

b. CONVEYANCES OF REAL ESTATE—SURRENDER OF LEASES.—As was stated at the outset of this article, the doctrine of ademption is limited strictly to legacies of personal estate; it does not properly apply to devises of real property.⁴ Hence a discussion of the effect of a subsequent conveyance of devised real estate, though analogous to the doctrine of ademption, is to be sought elsewhere.⁵

Subsequent Conveyances.—It is sufficient here to observe that a similar result, known in the law of wills as revocation, follows a subsequent conveyance of devised property, and that, to the extent of the portion thus alienated, the will is inoperative.⁶ The variations and amplifications of this doctrine may be found in the discussion of wills and their revocation.

Leasehold Interests and Terms for Years.—The doctrine of ademption, however, applies to legacies of leasehold interests and terms for years.

Common-law Rule.—And at common law the legacy of a specific interest of this class is adeemed if the testator subsequently surrenders the lease;⁷ but even at common law this was not true in the case of a general legacy;⁸ nor where the terms of the testament included property to be acquired in the future;⁹ nor where the interest bequeathed was merely an equitable one.¹⁰

Statutory Modifications.—And in many of the states of the Union, as well as in England, the foregoing rule has been changed by legislative enactment so as to limit the doctrine of ademption to those cases where, under corresponding circumstances, the revocation of a will would be effected. The subject should,

Freer, 22 Ch. Div. 622. In the former of these two cases, the vice-chancellor says: "The order in lunacy was plain. There might, no doubt, have been a direction accompanying the order, that the proceeds of the shares were to belong to the same persons as were the owners of the original shares. But the order contains no such provision. What, then, is the result? All the authorities show that the conversion must be treated as a lawful conversion, exactly as if the testator had himself converted the shares into consols. Such an act on his part would clearly have adeemed the gift."

by Lord Hardwicke in Sparrow v. Hardcastle, 7 T. R. 412, note, is that "the estate is gone, and the will has lost the subject of its operation."

7. Ademption by Surrender of Lease.—Abney v. Miller, 2 Atk. 593, where Lord Hardwicke says: "I will consider it, in the first place, as if it had been an express legacy, or gift of the term, to the three cestui que trusts; for, suppose he had said, I give and bequeath both the leases to my mother, etc., equally, share and share alike, and afterwards the testator renews the leases, what would have been the effect in point of law? There is no doubt but, in this case, it would have been an ademption or revocation; and even if the executrix had assented, the legatees could never have recovered the term upon the renewal by an ejectment, for the thing itself is annihilated and gone." Compare Hone v. Medcraft, 1 Bro. C. C. 261; Cooper v. Mantell, 22 Beav. 223; Rudstone v. Anderson, 2 Ves. 418; Porter v. Smith, 16 Sim. 251.

therefore, be investigated by the practitioner in the light of statutes in force in his own jurisdiction.

c. PLEDGES AND MORTGAGES.—It seems that the mere pledging or pawning of the bequeathed property does not operate as an ademption;¹ but the mortgage of real estate which has been devised is a revocation, though pro tanto only, of the will.² It is, however, not an entire revocation, even where the mortgage is executed to the devisee.³ And under a statute limiting revocation by subsequent conveyance to cases where the testator so intended, it seems that a subsequent mortgage of the devised property is not even an ademption pro tanto.⁴

d. LOSS, DESTRUCTION, ETC.—The voluntary disposition of property after its bequest will, as we have seen, effect an ademption of the legacy; and the result is not different where the alienation of the thing bequeathed is without the agency of the testator, and even contrary to his wishes.

Ademption not Confined to Cases of Voluntary Disposition of Property.—In this particular at least, the view taken in the more modern decisions, that ademption by alienation takes place only in accordance with the intention of the testator, certainly does not apply; for the loss or destruction of the property, however much resisted by the testator, leaves the legatee shorn of his bequest.⁵

Instances of Application of Rule.—Thus, where certain specific chattels were bequeathed, and the testator, after insuring them, took them with him on a sea voyage, and the vessel was lost, and the goods and the testator with it, the court held that the legatee was not entitled to the insurance money which the executors had meanwhile collected for the loss of the goods, the latter constituting a total ademption of the legacy.⁶

So, under a specific legacy of certain cows, none of which were living at the time of the testator's death, nothing passed to the legatee.⁷

But where the testator bequeathed shares in an insurance company, which, after the making of the testament, lost its capital stock but subsequently replaced it, and the testator filled up a portion of his shares, the latter were held to pass to the legatee.⁸

3. By Transformation, Alteration, and Conversion—General Rule.—It has been shown above that the doctrine of ademption requires, in order to make the legacy effective, that the bequeathed property should exist in specie at the time of the testator's death.⁹

4. Stubbs v. Houston, 33 Ala. 555.

5. Loss or Destruction of Subject of Bequest.—Durrant v. Friend, 5 D. & S. 343; Brady v. Brady (Md., 1894), 28 Atl. Rep. 515; Kunkel v. Macgill, 56 Md. 123. The court in the latter case said: "If the legacy is to be considered specific, then, in the event of the testator's parting with the thing or property bequeathed, or if from any cause it should be lost or destroyed, the legacy fails."

In Updike v. Tompkins, 100 Ill. 406, Walker, J., for the court, said: "The doctrine is firmly settled, and uniform in its application, that where a specific article is bequeathed, its sale, loss, or destruction cannot be replaced by substituting another article in its stead."

6. Property Lost at Sea—Legatee not Entitled to the Insurance.—Durrant v. Friend, 5 D. & S. 343.

7. Brady v. Brady (Md., 1894), 28 Atl. Rep. 515.

8. Havens v. Havens, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 324. In this case the court reasons as follows: "If, as is contended, there was a revocation here, it must be placed on the ground of intention. But there is nothing from which to infer such an intention. The value of the stock was gone, and the testator's filling it up would rather argue a design to keep his bequest good. It is like the case in the old books, where the testator bequeaths a ship, and afterwards, by piecemeal, repairs or renews it, so that there remains little or nothing of the old matter or stuff; his will is not by this presumed to be changed, and it is deemed to be the same ship in law. (Swinb. on Wills, p. 7, § 20; Godolph. Orph. Leg. 401.) It is argued that this is not the same stock which the testator bequeathed. I think otherwise, and that it is identically the same, to the extent of the forty shares."

9. See supra, this title, Sales and Gifts. And

Result of Strict Application of the Rule.—It will be seen that the strict application of this rule operates to extinguish the legacy not only in cases where the testator has parted with property, as is shown in the foregoing section, but also where there has been such a change in its form as leaves it no longer the specific thing which was bequeathed. It was long ago observed by an eminent judge, that "where the testator alters the form so as to alter the specification of the subject—as by making wool into cloth, or a piece of cloth into a garment—there the legacy is adeemed because the subject-matter cannot be restored to its former state."¹

Change from One Species in Legal Classification to Another.—A similar rule prevails, of course, where, though the property has undergone no change as the result of a mechanical operation such as just illustrated, it is converted by the testator from one species in legal classification into another; as, for example, where a testator who had bequeathed "all my debentures" subsequently exercised an option given him by the company who had issued them, and converted them into debenture stock, it was held that nothing passed to the legatee.² So where a testator bequeathed certain shares described as standing in the names of his trustees, to be transferred into his own name, but the transfer was never made, and the shares were paid off by the company and reinvested according to the testator's desire, it was held that the legacy was adeemed.³

Change Effected by Legislative Enactment.—But ademption does not result where the change in the legal character and classification of the property is effected through legislative enactment.⁴

Conversion without Knowledge of Testator.—And in this connection, as in the case of alienation, it is held that if the conversion of the property from one form into another is without the testator's knowledge or intention, or is tortious, it will not have the effect to adeem the legacy; as, where certain bequeathed chattels were converted into money during a period when the testator was of unsound mind, it was held that his legatee was nevertheless entitled to the money.⁵

A Change in Articles of Partnership, a portion of whose profits had been bequeathed by one of the partners, was held not to be such a transformation of the subject of the legacy as to work an ademption.⁶

4. By Removal—General Rule when the Property is Localized by the Instrument.—Where the language of the testament is such as to localize the subject of the legacy, it see particularly Pattison v. Pattison, 1 Myl. & K. 12; Ashburner v. Macguire, 2 Bro. C. C. 108, 2 White & Tudor Lead. Cas., pt. 1, 246*; Humphreys v. Humphreys, 2 Cox 185; Ford v. Ford, 23 N. H. 212; Beck v. McGillis, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 35.

Here the vice-chancellor said: "It appears to me that this will is not sufficient to pass the new thing which the testator acquired, and which he took in exercise of his option instead of the thing which he had bequeathed by his will. I hold it to be a substantially different thing from that which he gave, and that it does not answer the description contained in the will."

3. Harrison v. Jackson, 7 Ch. Div. 339. Compare Partridge v. Partridge, Cas. temp. Talb. 226.

(Pa.) 483 (where bequeathed stock was changed from state to national bank stock as the result of an act of congress). Compare Oakes v. Oakes, 9 Hare 666. In re Pitkington's Trusts, 6 N. R. 246; Sheffield v. Coventry, 2 R. & M. 317; Bringham v. Cuthbert, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 398.

5. Jenkins v. Jones, L. R. 2 Eq. 323. Here the vice-chancellor said: "I think that, as it was by no act of the testator that the chattels were converted, for he never intended any conversion, but intended that the specific legatee should have his farming stock, I ought to refuse the motion to vary the certificate."

6. Backwell v. Child, Ambl. 260. In this case, one of the partners by will gave one ninth of one twelfth of the profits to his other partners, and on the expiration of the partnership renewed it with the same individuals, giving them a greater interest than under the former articles. It was held that they were entitled to one ninth of the testator's interest.

is the general rule that the removal of the goods during the testator's lifetime results in ademption,¹ even where the removal was occasioned by the expiration of the testator's lease.²

Bequest of Bank Deposit—Effect of Withdrawal.—So, in a recent nisi prius case in Pennsylvania, it was held that a specific bequest of money deposited in a bank was adeemed by its withdrawal therefrom before the testator's death.³

Removal by Fraud, etc.—It was said in one of the early cases that "if the goods had been removed by fraud or practice on purpose to disappoint the legacy, or by a tortious act, unknown to the testator, that might have entitled her to relief."⁴ So where the testator bequeathed certain property which he had in his capital message, but which he was prevented from occupying by the refusal of his tenant to admit him, it was held that the property passed under the bequest.⁵

Removal by Necessity.—It has been said that the "removal of goods for a necessary purpose" will not result in adeeming a legacy of the same.⁶

Temporary Removal.—It has also been laid down that if the removal of the subject of the bequest is only temporary, and with the intention of returning it, the legacy will still pass.⁷

When the Element of Locality is Unimportant.—And where the circumstances were such as to exclude the notion that the element of locality had any necessary connection with the bequest, the doctrine of ademption has been held not to apply;⁸ as where there was a bequest of plate and linen in a certain house, but which were usually removed by the testator from one house to another, and happened to be at his country house—the one not described—when he died, they were held to pass to the legatee.⁹ So a bequest of "all my interest in my house at [naming the location], the furniture, books, pictures, wines, etc.," was held not to be confined in its operation to the particular articles which might be at the particular locality described.¹⁰ And where the language of the testament was, "I give to my wife all my household furniture," etc., "and all other effects of the like nature, and all wines," etc., "which shall at my decease be in or about my dwelling-house," the court inferred that the testator meant to make two sentences, and that the limitation to his "dwelling-house" applied only to the latter part, leaving the furniture, etc., which had been removed, to pass nevertheless to the legatee.¹¹

5. By Acquisition—General Rule.—Quite the opposite of the principle upon which legacies are held to be adeemed by alienation, but somewhat analogous to the grounds of ademption because of the removal or transformation of the thing bequeathed, is the rule that where the subject of the legacy is, at the time of making the testament, in the hands of another than the testator, a subsequent acquisition of it by the latter effects an ademption of the legacy.¹

Jur. 629. Here Knight Bruce, V.C., says: "There may be room to suspect or conjecture that, in using the expressions 'the furniture, books, pictures, wines, etc.,' the testator had in his mind only such effects, within the description, as were then, or as at his death might be, in the dwelling-house then occupied by him; especially when their place in the will is observed. But the expressions themselves have not necessarily so restricted a meaning—have not necessarily any local reference. It would, I think, be giving too much weight to the use of the definite article, and the particular position of the phrase, so to confine the construction. The language must, I conceive, be taken to have been used generally, not with regard to any particular place, nor with regard only to such 'furniture, books, pictures, wines, etc.,' as he had when he made his will."

Collection of Promissory Note.—Thus, a bequest of money due on a promissory note is adeemed upon a subsequent collection thereof by the testator.²

Money on Deposit—Unliquidated Claims.—The same principle applies to a legacy of money on deposit³ or of unliquidated claims.⁴

Foreclosure of Mortgage.—So the foreclosure of a mortgage by the testator adeems his prior bequest thereof.⁵

Collection of Insurance Policies.—And where a testator who had bequeathed his entire interest in two policies of insurance afterwards collected the proceeds thereof and invested them in securities, it was held that the legacy failed by reason of such collection.⁶

Doctrine Confined to Specific Legacies.—The doctrine of ademption by acquisition applies, of course, to specific legacies only, and does not obtain in the case of general and demonstrative or pecuniary bequests.⁷ This, again, necessitates the determination as to which class the legacy in question belongs—a discussion of which will be found elsewhere in this work.⁸

Distinction between Cases of Enforced and Voluntary Payments.—In some of the authorities, especially the earlier ones, a distinction is sought to be drawn between payments made by the debtor voluntarily and without action on the part of the testator, and payments which the latter requires or compels. In the decisions above referred to, it was held that enforced payments only, and not those voluntarily made by the debtor, would result in ademption.⁹ But at an

1. General Rule in Case of Ademption by Acquisition.—This doctrine is very old. Statements of it are found in Crockett v. Crockett, 2 P. Wms. 164; Rider v. Wager, 2 P. Wms. 328. See also the following English authorities: Ashburner v. Macguire, 2 Bro. C. C. 108, 2 White & Tudor Lead. Cas., pt. 1, 246*; Bodrick v. Stevens, 3 Bro. C. C. 431; Fryer v. Morris, 9 Ves. The doctrine is supported by the following American authorities: Georgia Infirmary v. Jones, 37 Fed. Rep. 750; White v. Winchester, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 48; Ford v. Ford, 23 N. H. 212; *Wyckoff v. 6. Barker v. Rayner, 5 Madd. 209, on appeal 2 Russ. Ch. 123. Lord Eldon, in delivering the opinion on appeal, is careful to distinguish this from a case where the proceeds are bequeathed. See supra, this title, Sales and Gifts.

7. Fryer v. Morris, 9 Ves. Jr. 360.

For a recent example see Ives v. Canby, 48 Fed. Rep. 718, where a bequest of "$2000 of the South Ward bonds of Chester, Pennsylvania," by one who owned bonds of that class to the amount of $10,000, was held not to be adeemed by the payment of the bonds. Compare Corbin v. Mills, 19 Gratt. (Va.) 438.

8. See the title LEGACIES AND DEVISES.

9. See Ashburner v. Macguire, 2 Bro. C. C. 108, 2 White & Tudor Lead. Cas., pt. 1, 246*, where Lord Thurlow, in attacking this doctrine, makes the following statement: "As to the ademption, one maxim has gained so much ground as to have been a governing rule, and has been recognized by Lord Talbot and Lord Hardwicke. It is, that where a debt is bequeathed and is afterwards extinguished by the act or concurrence of the testator, as by demand or suit, the legacy is adeemed; but if paid in without suit or demand there is no intention to adeem; and there are innumerable authorities that a legacy of a debt is not adeemed by a voluntary payment."

In Coleman v. Coleman, 2 Ves. Jr. 639, the lord chancellor comments on the foregoing as follows: "It has been said that the distinction is exploded. The application of the distinction may often fail extremely in the particular case; but where the testator is compelled to receive payment of the debt, a pretty strong presumption arises that there is no variation of intention; where he goes of himself, no necessity urging him, and destroys the form of the thing specifically given, that is a good ground of argument the other way. I think Lord Camden decided very rightly." See also Thomond v. Suffolk, 1 P. Wms. 461, where the lord early period this distinction was questioned; and the rule seems now to prevail that payments, however procured, if accepted by the testator, leave nothing to pass to the legatee.¹

Limitations of the Rule.—There are, however, some other limitations upon the rule which are now generally recognized. The mere renewal, by permission of the testator, of notes which have been bequeathed, is not an ademption of the legacy;² nor does the exchange of one class of evidences of a bequeathed indebtedness for another have that result.³ So the transfer of bequeathed stock standing in the name of trustees, into the testator's name, has been held not to effect an ademption.⁴

V. REVIVAL OF ADEEMED LEGACIES—Subsequent Codicil Confirming the Will.—A legacy which has once been adeemed by a gift made after execution of the will is not revived by a subsequent codicil confirming the will in general terms.⁵

General Legacy Made Specific by Later Instrument.—Where a testator, having made a general bequest, by a subsequent instrument makes it specific, the ademption of the specific legacy alone will not revive the general one.⁶

Intention of Testator.—But this rule does not apply, of course, where the codicil discloses a manifest intention to renew the legacy. In such case it will pass entire notwithstanding a gift made in the interval between the will and the codicil.⁷ And the existence of a codicil, though not decisive of the question, will not be ignored where other circumstances indicate that the testator intended the legatee to have a double portion.⁸

chancellor seems to recognize an exception to the rule of ademption if the subject of the legacy "be paid in to the testator unasked for." This doctrine has also found some support in the United States. See Stout v. Hart, 7 N. J. L. 424, where the English cases are cited and approved; but even the New Jersey rule now seems to be contrary to the foregoing. See Wyckoff v. Perrine, 37 N. J. Eq. 122.

1. Ashburner v. Macguire, 2 Bro. C. C. 108, 2 White and Tudor Lead. Cas., pt. 1, 246*, where Lord Thurlow, in a vigorous judgment, rejects the attempted exception in toto. Wyckoff v. Perrine, 37 N. J. Eq. 122. And see generally the authorities cited supra, this title, By Acquisition, note 1.

3. Change of Character of Evidence of Indebtedness.—Erwin's Succession, 33 La. Ann. 63. In Stilwell v. Doughty, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 311, the assignment of another bond and mortgage was accepted by the testator in lieu of the one bequeathed. The doctrine of this case was disapproved in Georgia Infirmary v. Jones, 37 Fed. Rep. 750.

4. Dingwell v. Askew, 1 Cox 127.

5. Drinkwater v. Falconer, 2 Ves. 623. Here the court said: "A lapsed legacy, by devisee's dying in life of testator, could not be made good by such direction in a codicil, nor, by parity of reason, could a legacy adeemed, which is as much gone as a legacy lapsed."

In Powys v. Mansfield, 3 Myl. & C. 359, Lord Cottenham says: "The codicil can only act upon the will as it existed at the time; and, at the time, the legacy revoked, adeemed, or satisfied, formed no part of it. Any other rule would make a codicil, merely republishing a will, operate as a new bequest, and so revoke any codicil by which a legacy given by the will had been revoked, and undo every act by which it may have been adeemed or satisfied. The cases are consistent with this rule, as Drinkwater v. Falconer, 2 Ves. 623; Monck v. Monck, 1 Ball & B. 298; Booker v. Allen, 2 R. & M. 270. And the case of Roome v. Roome, 3 Atk. 181, is not an authority against these decisions, because the codicil was not considered in that case as reviving an adeemed legacy, it having been decided that there was no ademption; but the codicil was referred to as an additional proof that no ademption was intended. And as to the argument that the codicil must, at any rate, be evidence of an intention that both sums should be paid, the same answer may be given which has been given to a similar argument in other cases, namely, that the testator, if he knew the rule of law, must have known that the codicil would not revive the adeemed legacy, and therefore it was unnecessary for him to mention it. The probability, however, is that his attention being directed to the only object of the codicil, the words of confirmation of the will were introduced as words of course, without any reference to the legacy in question." See, to the same effect, Booker v. Allen, 2 R. & M. 270; Crosbie v. MacDougal, 4 Ves. Jr. 611; Montague v. Montague, 15 Beav. 565; Cowper v. Mantell, 22 Beav. 231; Hopwood v. Hopwood, 7 H. ADEQUACY.—"Adequacy" means sufficiency; sufficiency for a particular purpose.¹

ADEQUATE.—The term "adequate" signifies sufficient for the purpose required.²

1. Webster's Dict., followed in Pennsylvania, etc., R. Co. v. Mason, 109 Pa. St. 299, 58 Am. Rep. 722. In this case it was held that in an action to recover for a death caused by the explosion of a boiler it was not error to charge the jury that the railroad company was bound to maintain the machinery in such condition as to be "reasonably and adequately safe for the deceased to be upon and use."

2. Pennsylvania, etc., R. Co. v. Mason, 109 Pa. St. 299, 58 Am. Rep. 722.

Adequate Cause—Texas Code. (See also the title HOMICIDE.)—The expression "adequate cause," as used in the definition of manslaughter in the Texas Penal Code, means "such cause as would commonly produce a degree of anger, rage, resentment, or terror in a person of ordinary temper, sufficient to render the mind incapable of cool reflection." Boyett v. State, 2 Tex. App. 100.

In Orman v. State, 24 Tex. App. 495, it is said: "Any condition or circumstance which is capable of creating sudden passion, rendering the mind incapable of cool reflection, may be adequate cause; and where the evidence shows a number of conditions or circumstances tending either singly or collectively to show adequate cause, the jury should not be restricted by the charge to a consideration of a single condition or circumstance, but should be directed to consider them all in determining the question of adequate cause. Williams v. State, 15 Tex. App. 617; Neyland v. State, 13 Tex. App. 536; Mills v. State, 18 Tex. App. 487; Howard v. State, 23 Tex. App. 265." This is approved in Bonner v. State, 29 Tex. App. 223. See also Cochran v. State, 28 Tex. App. 422; Hawthorne v. State, 28 Tex. App. 212.

Same—Other Causes than Those Set Out in Code.—In West v. State, 2 Tex. App. 476, it was held that there may be other adequate causes for sudden passion besides those instanced in article 599 of the Penal Code. The court said: "If the deceased attacked the defendant, and, after shooting at him, he, the deceased, unequivocally retreated and quit the combat as far as he could, and the defendant then, under the immediate influence of sudden passion, produced in his mind by the violent assault made upon him by McNelly, fired upon and killed McNelly, then he would not be guilty of murder, but of manslaughter."

"If this conduct on the part of the deceased had the effect to produce sudden passion in the mind of West, rendering it incapable of cool reflection, and if the killing was done under the immediate influence of that passion, then the killing would only be manslaughter. As to whether the killing was done under the immediate influence of sudden passion, rendering the mind incapable of cool reflection, arising from an adequate cause, were questions of fact for the jury, and should have been submitted to them."

"It may be that the judge below took the view of Paschal's Digest, article 2254, that there could be no 'adequate cause for passion' beyond those stated in that article. If so, he was in error. Our Supreme Court says, 'Articles 2251, 2252, 2253, and 2254, Paschal's Digest, are explanatory of article 2250. We do not understand that these explanations and examples are legislative restrictions, and that in no case can a homicide be reduced from murder to manslaughter unless the party can bring himself within the rules and examples given. We regard the law rather as giving instances or examples by which the mind could be rendered incapable of cool reflection, but that, at least, we must bring each case to the test to be found in article 2250, Paschal's Digest.' Johnson v. State, 43 Tex. 615."

Same—Circumstances of Each Case.—What amount of injury must be inflicted to produce the adequate cause specified in the statute, cannot be fixed by any definite general rule, but must depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. The amount of the injury is therefore a question of fact for the determination of the jury, under proper instructions from the court. Williams v. State, 7 Tex. App. 396. See also Eanes v. State, 10 Tex. App. 421.

Same.—Assault and battery is an adequate cause. Reed v. State, 9 Tex. App. 319; Texas Penal Code, art. 597.

Adequate Provocation. (See also the title HOMICIDE.)—The court in State v. Bulling, 105 Mo. 225, a homicide case, said: "This court has held that 'legal,' 'lawful,' adequate, and 'reasonable,' when used as adjectives qualifying 'provocation,' are synonyms, and as a general rule, with very few exceptions, it takes an assault or personal violence to constitute this provocation."

Adequate Crossings.—In Gray v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 37 Iowa 119, it was said: "The law nowhere defines what constitutes the other adequate crossings which the statute authorizes, nor has it been determined, so far as we can discover, by judicial construction. * * * Then, as an adequate crossing is to be constructed, and such crossing is not defined as matter of law, it must be determined as a question of fact."

1. Bouvier Law Dict.

Alluvion, whether it effects an accretion to the shore, or whether it forms islands, alters the position of the original filum aquæ, and it will always be located by taking the middle of a line drawn at right angles from bank to bank, no matter how recently the bank may be formed. Miller v. Hepburn, 8 Bush (Ky.) 326; Clark v. Campau, 19 Mich. 329; Knight v. Wilder, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 202, 48 Am. Dec. 660; Bay City Gaslight Co. v. Industrial Works, 28 Mich. 182; Stolp v. Hoyt, 44 Ill. 220; Deerfield v. Arms, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 41, 28 Am. Dec. 276; Bonewits v. Wygant, 75 Ind. 41.

2. Adhering to the king's enemies must of necessity be against the king; and, therefore, if an Englishman assist the French, being at war with England, and fight against the king of Spain, who is an ally of the king of England, this is treason, as adhering to the king's enemies against the king,—for the king's enemies are hereby strengthened and encouraged,—and so is within the express words of 25 Edw. III., of "adhering to the king's enemies." Vaughan's Case, 2 Salk. 634.

Rebels, being citizens, are not enemies within the meaning of the Constitution; hence a conviction for treason, in promoting a rebellion, cannot be sustained under that branch of the constitutional definition which speaks of "adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort." U. S. v. Greathouse, 2 Abb. (U. S.) 364.

3. Webster's Dictionary, followed in Gray v. Truby, 6 Colo. 278. And in that case it was held that an adit run along a lode where the same may in any manner be discovered is equivalent to a discovery shaft, whether the depth of ten feet from the surface be reached or not.

A Colorado statute provided that "an adit of at least ten feet in, along the lode, from the point where the lode may be in any manner discovered, shall be equivalent to a discovery shaft." It was held that as to the ten feet required it may be either open or under cover, or open in part and under cover in part. Electro-Magnetic, etc., Co. v. Van Auken, 9 Colo. 204.

4. U. S. v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 29 Alb. L. J. 24; State v. Kansas City, 50 Kan. 522; Camp Hill Borough, 142 Pa. St. 517.

Adjacent Distinguished from Adjoining.—The state granted one a tract of land adjacent to the military boundary. In Henderson v. Long, 11 Fed. Cas. 1084, No. 6354, it was held that adjacent did not mean adjoining, but it meant "that it shall be in the neighborhood, or convenient, or near to the place mentioned in the act."

Same—Consolidation of Cities.—In State v. Kansas City, 50 Kan. 522, it was held that where the consolidation of adjacent cities is authorized, it is not necessary that the cities join one another. The court said: "It is not necessary, under the terms of the act, that the cities should have actually joined each other at the time of the consolidation; it is enough if they were adjacent, and that term has been defined as lying near to but not actually touching. Webster's Unabridged Dictionary; Henderson v. Long, 1 Cooke (Tenn.) 128; New York v. Hart, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 380; U. S. v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 29 Alb. L. J. 24."

Adjacent in the Sense of Adjoining or Contiguous—Change of Venue.—In Miller v. Cabell, 81 Ky. 184, it was held that where change of venue was authorized to an adjacent county, the change must be to an adjoining county. The court said: "The word adjacent in penal statutes has sometimes been construed, and very properly, as meaning near by although not adjoining; but the evident meaning of the statutes before us is to confine the parties to the trial of the cause in the county in which the action is brought, or to an adjoining county, unless some available objection is made or consent given."

Same—Adjacent Lots.—A statute provided that adjacent lots might be annexed to a borough. It was held that the word adjacent was used "in its primary sense as adjoining or contiguous." But it was also held that a number of contiguous properties might be annexed in a proceeding, though some of them did not adjoin the borough. Camp Hill Borough, 142 Pa. St. 517.

Under the Act of 3d of April, 1832, for the opening of streets, etc., in New Orleans, which provides that a contribution to pay the expense of opening shall be assessed on the lots and premises adjacent to and fronting that part of the street so opened, straightened, or improved, it was held that the only lots subject to assessment were those to which a new front was given or added to by the new street. "We think," said the court, "the word adjacent, applied to lots, is synonymous with the word 'contiguous.' In another and more general relation it might have a more extended meaning; but in the sense in which it is used—to wit, to discriminate as to locality from other lots—we can only give this meaning to it in a statute like this, which undertakes to divest a right of property, and is consequently subjected to strict rules of interpretation." In re Municipality for Opening Roffignac Street, 7 La. Ann. 76.

Same—Adjacent to Land under Water.—An act prohibited a grant of land under water to any persons other than the proprietors of adjacent lands. By the use of the word adjacent it was held that it was intended to restrict the grant to owners of land bordering upon or adjoining the water. The court said: "The interpretations given to the word adjacent by Walker are, 'lying close,' 'bordering upon something.' The legislature evidently intended to restrict the grant to the owners of the lands bordering upon, or adjoining, the water covering the subject of the proposed patent." People v. Schermerhorn, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 556. But in New York v. Hart, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 380, it was held that the term "adjacent owner," as used in the act to designate the persons entitled to purchase land under water, is not limited to the owner of the land lying next to it, e.g., the owner of the land between high and low water line, but means the owner of the upland which is bounded by the river.

Where a party enters without right upon land under water, and fills it up, he does not thus become the proprietor of adjacent lands. In such a case the court said: "As between him and the state, it still legally remained land under water, to be dealt with as such." People v. Land Office Com'rs, 135 N. Y. 447.

The fact that the owner of land bounded by a navigable river has conveyed to a railroad company for the use of its road a strip of land along the water front, over which its route lies, does not deprive him of the character of riparian owner, within the meaning of the statute in reference to grants of lands under water, nor does it give to the company that character; although the title granted to the company is a fee, it holds and can only use the land for the purposes of its road. New York Cent., etc., R. Co. v. Aldridge, 135 N. Y. 83. See also Saunders v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 135 N. Y. 613.

Street Improvements.—A city charter provided that for street improvements the city might levy a special tax on the property abutting on such street, and according to the amount and cost of the work done "in front of or adjacent to such lands." In Clapton v. Taylor, 49 Mo. App. 118, the court said: "The word adjacent in the foregoing section of the charter has reference to the work done on the street within a certain length, which is to be levied as a tax on the abutting property, according as the number of front feet is to the price of the whole work, both immediately in front and adjacent."

Turnpike Act.—A turnpike act provided a penalty for turning off the pike and passing the gates on adjacent ground with the intent to defraud the company of toll. It was held that turning off a little more than half a mile from the gate was turning off on ground adjacent to the gate. The court said: "The word adjacent means lying close or near, and is used relatively to the gates on the turnpike, which are ten miles apart." Carrier v. Schoharie Turnpike Co., 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 57.

Adjacent to Railroad Line.—A United States statute granted to a railroad the right to take timber from adjacent lands for the construction of the road. It was contended that the word adjacent limited the right to take timber on lands near the road-bed in the construction of which the timber was used. The court said: "The license to take timber is not, by the language of the act, limited to what is necessary for the construction of such portion of the road as is adjacent to the place from which the timber is taken, but extends to the construction of the entire 'railroad.'" U. S. v. Denver, etc., R. Co., 150 U. S. 11.

Same—Not Equivalent to Adjoining.—Hoyt, J., in U. S. v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 29 Alb. L. J. 24, construing the word adjacent in the company's charter, which granted the privilege of cutting timber from adjacent public lands for use in the construction of the work, held that it had a broader meaning than "adjoining," and was synonymous with "neighboring," and said: "Congress, in enacting section 2 of defendant's charter, saw fit to use the word adjacent; and in determining the intent of this section we must investigate the meaning of the word adjacent as there used. Sometimes it has a meaning given it which is synonymous with the word 'adjoining,' but it is as often applied in a more extended sense, as in the 'vicinity' or the 'neighborhood' of, while 'adjoining' and 'contiguous' are never used in such enlarged sense. Congress, then, having selected from several synonymous words the one having, as applied to the subject in the section in which it is used, the broadest meaning and most extended signification of the whole, must be held to have intended the broadest rather than the more restricted signification to be given to it in the interpretation of said section; and therefore to hold that this section restricted the defendant to lands adjoining or contiguous to the line of the road, would be contrary to all rules of interpretation; while if we apply the usual rules we must hold that its rights are extended by this section, beyond lands adjoining or contiguous to its line of road, to lands anywhere in the vicinity or neighborhood of its said line of road. Was the land in question in the neighborhood of defendant's line of road, within the meaning of section 2? The design of this question was to allow the company to take timber from public lands to build its road, and when we once concede that under this section the defendant is authorized to go beyond adjoining lands, as the use of the word adjacent compels us to do, it must follow that the use of the more enlarged word was for the benefit of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and it must be so construed by the court as to effect the object of its enactment. And we are of opinion that timber land nearest to the line of the road must be held to be neighboring timber land, even although there may intervene large tracts of land not timbered. If this be so, then under the facts of these cases, as above stated, the lands from which the timber in question was cut were in the neighborhood of the line of the road where it was used, and therefore adjacent thereto, within the meaning of section 2 of the charter of the defendant Northern Pacific Railroad Company. Besides, under the facts proven in these cases, the lands in question would probably come within a more restricted use of the word adjacent, for the line of defendant's road runs for several hundred miles through a country almost entirely destitute of timber, and the belt upon which this timber in question was cut was the first timber land near said road reached by it in the course of its construction; therefore though this timber be more than one hundred miles from the line of defendant's road, we are of the opinion that it must under the circumstances be held to be 'adjacent thereto,' within the meaning of section 2 of defendant's charter."

In U. S. v. Denver, etc., R. Co., 31 Fed. Rep. 889, it is said: "In a standard dictionary an illustration of the larger meaning of the word is given in this form: 'Things are adjacent when they lie near to each other without actually touching; as adjacent fields, adjacent villages, etc.' It seems unreasonable to say that in this connection the word refers to the government subdivisions lying next the right of way; and, if we should so declare, it would be difficult to point out what subdivisions are meant. Accepting the larger meaning of the word, the right to take timber from public lands under these acts extends naturally some distance from the right of way, and probably within ordinary transportation by wagon." To the same effect is U. S. v. Lynde, 47 Fed. Rep. 300.

Same—Dependent on Facts of Case.—"What is adjacent land, within the meaning of the statute, must depend on the circumstances of each particular case. Where the adjacent ends and the non-adjacent begins, may be difficult to determine. On the theory that the material is taken on account of the benefit resulting to the land from the construction of the road, my impression is that the term adjacent ought not to be construed to include any land save such as by its proximity to the line of the road is directly and materially benefited by its construction." U. S. v. Chaplin, 31 Fed. Rep. 896. But compare the dictum in this case with U. S. v. Denver, etc., R. Co., 150 U. S. 11, set out above.

Same—Half a Mile Distant.—The owner of property half a mile distant from a railroad is not an adjacent occupant or proprietor within a statute permitting such occupant to recover damages from a railroad for injuries arising from the failure of the railroad to fence, as provided by statute. Continental Imp. Co. v. Phelps, 47 Mich. 300.

Adjacent Streets.—A street railroad's charter authorized the company to erect power and car houses in the "streets adjacent to M. street, west of the hill." It was held that as there was no street touching M. west of the hill, the word adjacent was to be construed as meaning the neighboring parallel streets. Brooklyn Heights Co. v. Brooklyn (Brooklyn City Ct.), 18 N. Y. Supp. 876.

Ditches.—An Ohio statute permitted the township trustees to construct ditches or watercourses within the township upon petition of adjacent owners. It was held that one might petition though the ditch was confined to his own land. The court said: "Furthermore, it is said that the petition must be filed by a person owning lands adjacent to the proposed ditch, or the ditch to be cleaned, and that Perkins's lands are not adjacent. But this legislation had for its foundation the public health, welfare, and convenience, which may be promoted as well where the drain is confined to one owner as where it extends to the lands of several owners, and by the terms of the act one owner may petition. And the word adjacent was properly used as including lands through which a ditch passes, as well as those lying near to the ditch." Kent v. Perkins, 36 Ohio St. 639.

1. Ground cannot properly be said to adjoin a house unless it be absolutely contiguous, without anything between them. Rex v. Hodges, M. & M. 41, 22 E. C. L. 330.

Adjoining means "touching." McCullough v. Absecon Beach Land, etc., Co., 48 N. J. Eq. 187.

Distinguishing from Adjacent. (See also ADJACENT.)—The word adjoining, in its etymological sense, means touching or contiguous, as distinguished from lying near or "adjacent." Rex v. Hodges, M. & M. 341, 22 E. C. L. 330; Peverelly v. People, 3 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 59; Holmes v. Carley, 31 N. Y. 289; Matter of Ward's Petition, 52 N. Y. 397; Walton v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 67 Mo. 58. But compare Dann v. Pitt, & Allen (New Bruns.) 385.

"Mr. Crabbe, in his English Synonyms, classifies together 'adjacent,' 'adjoining,' and 'contiguous;' and, after giving the etymology of these words, illustrates the difference between them in the following manner: 'What is adjacent may be separated by the intervention of some third object: "They have been beating up for volunteers at York, and the towns adjacent, but nobody will list" (Granville). What is adjoining must touch in some part: "As he happens to have no estate adjoining, equal to his own, his oppressions are often borne without resistance" (Johnson). What is contiguous must be fitted to touch entirely on one side: "We arrived at the utmost boundaries of a wood, which lay contiguous to a plain" (Steele). Lands are adjacent to a house or town; fields are adjoining to each other; houses contiguous to each other." Peverelly v. People, 3 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 69.

Same—Local Assessments. (See also the title SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS.)—In Matter of Ward's Petition, 52 N. Y. 398, it was held that a statute providing for the assessment of the expense of widening a street upon the adjoining property authorized an assessment of only property contiguous to the street.

The appellant owned premises separated from a street by a wall five feet high, belonging, together with the land on which it stood, to another person. The appellant had no direct access from his premises to the street, but in order to reach it he had to pass for a short distance down a public footpath, or over other intervening land. It was held that the appellant was not the owner of premises "fronting, adjoining, or abutting" on the street within the meaning of section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and therefore was not liable to contribute to the expenses of sewerage and paving the street under that section. Lightbound v. Higher Bebington Local Board, 14 Q. B. Div. 849.

A was the owner of three houses fronting a street called York place, and adjoining or abutting at the rear upon a footpath at the end of a street called St. Julian street, which formed a cul-de-sac. The ground at the back of these houses was five feet above the level of St. Julian street, and the wall, which was the property of A, was about twelve feet high on the outside. There was no access from A's premises to St. Julian street. It was held that his premises adjoined or "abutted on" St. Julian street, and consequently that he was chargeable with his proportion of the expenses of paving, etc., that street. Newport Urban Sanitary Authority v. Graham, 9 Q. B. Div. 183.

The word adjoining as used in acts authorizing the improvement of public streets and the assessment of part of the cost thereof on the property adjoining, is to be taken as meaning such property as is in immediate contact with the street improved; when there is an intervening public space, such property, although it may be adjacent to, is not adjoining, the improvement. Johnson v. District of Columbia, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 27. The court here said: "The word adjoining implies a closer relation than 'adjacent,' which is not inconsistent with the idea of something intervening; while adjoining necessarily implies contact. The verb is defined by Webster: 'To lie or be next to, or in contact; to be contiguous, as a farm adjoining to the highway;' and Blackstone is given as the authority for this example."

Same—Change of Venue.—In Raab v. State 7 Md. 483, this word received a judicial construction in accordance with the foregoing definition. The constitution of the state authorized the removal of an indictment from the court of one county to that of an adjoining county. Raab, being indicted in Baltimore city, claimed this right of removal, and the case was transmitted to the court of Anne Arundel county as an adjoining county. On his conviction there, a motion in arrest was interposed, on the ground that Anne Arundel was not adjoining Baltimore city, which is a county in law. The northern boundary of Anne Arundel county is the south bank of the middle branch of the Patapsco river; and the line of Baltimore county began at that bank and included all the river and extended many miles to the north. When Baltimore city was carved out of Baltimore county, its southern boundary stopped at the north bank of the river, thus leaving either the entire river or the southern half of it still in Baltimore county, which constituted, as the court held, an intervening jurisdiction between the boundaries of Baltimore city and Anne Arundel county, and prevented them from being adjoining jurisdictions within the meaning of the constitution.

Same—Adjoining the Ocean.—"The word adjoining implies a closer relation than 'adjacent.' The latter word, uncontrolled by the context or subject matter, is not inconsistent with the idea of something intervening. But the primary meaning of the word adjoining is to lie next to, to be in contact with, excluding the idea of any intervening space. Johnson v. District of Columbia, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 21; People v. Schermerhorn, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 556; Matter of Ward's Petition, 52 N. Y. 395; State v. United New Jersey R., etc., Co., 43 N. J. L. 110. In State v. Brown, 27 N. J. L. 13, the Supreme Court, in construing the words 'lands adjoining the shore line' of tidal waters, held that these words signified lands reaching to the edge of the water at ordinary high water. The description of the premises in the Corlies survey, with the superadded words 'bounded on the ocean,' and the map accompanying the recorded survey indicating a line on the ocean, conclusively establish the easterly line of the Corlies survey upon the line of ordinary high water in the ocean. Under such a description title is conveyed to ordinary high-water mark, with all the incidents of riparian ownership." Yard v. Ocean Beach Assoc., 49 N. J. Eq. 306.

Same—Law of Burglary. (See also the title BURGLARY.)—In Devoe v. Com., 3 Met. (Mass.) 326, the court held the words "ad-tice of the peace, see 1 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 274; for adjournments by referees and arbitrators, see 1 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 274; for adjournments of quasi- joining to or occupied with" a dwelling to mean something more, as used in a statute against burglary, than contiguous or adjacent. The court said: "The words 'adjoining' to or occupied with' are to be taken in connection, and tend to explain each other. They mean something more than adjacent or contiguous, which they might be if there were a solid wall between, or were in another occupation. They are words well calculated to bring the case within the common-law description of burglary, before cited from 2 East P. C. 492; viz., outhouses adjoining to the dwelling-house and occupied as part thereof." To the same effect see People v. McGra, 1 Mich. (N. P.) 28.

Same—Separated by a Narrow Walk.—In the case of Rex v. Hodges, M. & M. 341, 22 E. C. L. 330, the prisoner was indicted, on the 7th and 8th George IV., c. 29, § 38, for stealing pear-trees described, in one of the counts of the indictment, as growing on ground adjoining, etc., to a dwelling-house. It was held that adjoining imported "actual contact," and therefore that ground separated from a house by a narrow walk and paling with a gate in it was not within the meaning of the act.

Same—Separated by a Street.—In Lucas v. Hunter, 153 Pa. St. 293, it was held that a mechanic's lien filed against houses situated in three blocks, and apportioned among the blocks and among the houses in each block, was invalid, as the statute allowed a lien for two or more adjoining houses, and buildings separated by a public street are not adjoining.

Separated by a Small Stream.—In Board of Health v. Lee, 1 Exch. Div. 336, a house was held to adjoin a street, although separated by a small stream, when connected with the street by two bridges.

Arson.—An indictment charging the defendant with an attempt to set fire to an outbuilding adjoining the dwelling-house, was held not to be supported by evidence that the building was near to, but not in contact with, the dwelling-house. The court said: "The motion for the discharge of the respondent should have been granted. There was a variance between the indictment and the proof. The outbuilding did not adjoin the dwelling-house. Adjoining is a synonym for 'adjacent to,' 'contiguous.' It was not adjacent to or contiguous, that is, in contact with the house. Arkell v. Commerce Ins. Co., 69 N. Y. 192; Rex v. Hodges, M. & M. 341, 23 E. C. L. 330; Peverelly v. People, 3 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 59, 2 Russ. Cr. 557, 561." State v. Downs, 59 N. H. 321. It will be observed that the court, while making in its decision the distinction of the cases set out supra between "adjacent" and adjoining, says in the course of its opinion that they are synonymous.

In the Sense of Near—Description of Lot.—Where the question on trial was as to the boundary of a town lot, and the deed under which one of the parties claimed contained two descriptions, one saying it adjoined a certain other lot, and another giving a different description, it was held that the court did not err in leaving it to the jury to decide which description they thought was intended by the parties to the deed—whether the parties in using the word adjoining might not have meant "near," as the word is sometimes used in common parlance. Massey v. Belisle, 2 Ired. (N. Car.) 170.

Same—Adjoining a City.—But in Truax v. Pool, 46 Iowa 256, it was held that a homestead situated eighty rods from the boundary line of a city was not within the city charter which provided that land laid off into town lots adjoining to the present boundaries of the city should be a part of the city. The court said: "But appellants say that adjoining does not mean to touch, but to be near to. In support of this position they cite Blanchard v. Bissell, 11 Ohio St. 96, in which it was held that an unincorporated town plat was contiguous to a city, although separated by a navigable river more than eighty rods wide. But the distinction between that case and this is, to our mind, entirely plain. The question in that case arose upon the annexation of certain territory which included an unincorporated village. The city by its charter extended to the middle of the river. The court said: 'The annexation consists in an extension of the original boundaries so as to include the whole of the river, and a considerable tract of land on its southeast side. There is no territory intervening between that which is annexed and the original city limits. All the parts of the annexed territory are in immediate contact with each other.' We are of the opinion that the words 'adjoining to the present boundaries,' as used in the charter of Davenport, do not simply mean near to, but next to."

Same—Eminent Domain.—"The next question is as to the meaning of the word adjoining; for the act only authorizes the condemnation of lands adjoining the road, etc. The defendants claim that it means 'near;' the prosecutors, that it means 'touching,' 'in contact with.' The latter is the proper signification, and it is the more readily to be adopted in this case because it thus restricts the grant of eminent domain, which is never to be extended by unnecessary implication." State v. United New Jersey R., etc., Co., 42 N. J. L. 112.

Distinguished from Appertaining.—In Miller v. Mann, 55 Vt. 475, it was held that a deed conveying a house and lands adjoining did not convey a small island in a river back of the land. The court said: "It is also claimed that this expression 'lands adjoining' is equivalent to the expression 'and all lands thereto appertaining.' The words adjoining and 'appertaining' are not synonymous. As descriptive words in a deed, adjoining usually imports contiguity; 'appertaining,' use, occupancy. One thing may appertain to another without adjoining or touching it. Proof that pieces of land adjoin would not be proof that one appertained to the other. Neither in literal meaning, nor as used in deeds, are they equivalent. Under the rules of construction applicable to deeds, in an action of trespass, the term 'lands adjoining' was too indefinite to make the grant extend beyond the medium filum of the main channel of the river. The term cannot be construed literally, as there is no limit to adjoining land."

Synonymous with Contiguous. See Josh v. Josh, 5 C. B. N. S. 454, 94 E. C. L. 454

Escape—House of Correction.—In Com. v. Curley, 101 Mass. 24, it was held that the whole enclosed yard of a house of correction, suitably fenced and protected, though divided by a public street, was adjoining and appurtenant to the house, within the meaning of those terms as used in a statute providing against escapes.

Adjoining Municipality.—An Ontario statute required that before the final passing of a by-law requiring the assent of the ratepayers, a copy thereof should be published in a public newspaper either within the municipality or in the county town, or published in an adjoining local municipality. A by-law of the township of South Norwich was published in the village of Norwich, in the county of Oxford, which does not touch the boundaries of South Norwich, but is completely surrounded by North Norwich which does touch said boundaries. It was held, affirming the decisions of the Court of Appeal, that as the village of Norwich was geographically within the adjoining municipality, the statute was sufficiently complied with by the said publication. Huson v. South Norwich Tp., 21 Can. Supreme Ct. 669.

Touching at the Corners.—In Holmes v. Carley, 31 N. Y. 289, it was held that two towns contiguous at either of the corners thereof were adjoining towns.

English Land Act.—This statute provides in substance that superfluous lands taken by corporations under eminent domain shall be first offered by the promoters to the adjoining owners before being otherwise disposed of. The word adjoining in this connection has received construction; where, by agreement, a wall has been built on land dividing the property of an individual from that of a railway company, and the individual and the company are, by the same agreement, the joint owners of the land on which the wall is built, that circumstance does not affect the individual so as to prevent him from being considered an adjoining owner. London, etc., R. Co. v. Blackmore, L. R. 4 H. L. 610. Lessees of lands separated from railroad land by a private road, of which they had the exclusive right of user during their tenancies, were held to be owners of "immediately adjoining land." Coventry v. London, etc., R. Co., L. R. 5 Eq. 104. See also Hooper v. Bourne, 3 Q. B. Div. 258, L. R. 5 App. Cas. 1; Hobbs v. Midland R. Co., 20 Ch. Div. 418.

"Adjoining" in the Sense of "Fronting."—By a provision of a city charter the expense of constructing sidewalks was to be assessed against parcels of land adjoining said sidewalks. The constitution provided for the assessment of lands "fronting" on sidewalks. It was held that the word adjoining as used in the charter was the equivalent of the word "fronting" as used in the constitution. Scott County v. Hinds, 50 Minn. 204.

Adjoining Synonymously with Along.—In Walton v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 67 Mo. 58, it was held that the words "along" and adjoining, as appeared from the context, were used synonymously in the statute, both words implying contiguity, contact.

1. 1 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 238.

An adjournment is a putting off until another time or place. People v. Martin, 5 N. Y. 26; Wilson v. Lott, 5 Fla. 302.

Adjournment Not Necessarily to a Day Certain—Suspension.—"It is true that the primary signification of the term adjourn is to put off or defer to another day specified. But it has acquired also the meaning of suspending business for a time,—deferring, delaying. Probably, without some limitation, it would, when used with reference to a sale like the present, or any judicial proceeding, properly include the fixing of the time to which the postponement was made." La Farge v. Van Wagenen, 14 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 58. The court in this case refused to set aside a sale where the officer had adjourned the sale generally without fixing a particular day, but had advertised the adjournment with the adjourned day of sale in a newspaper.

Adjournment—A Part of the Session.—An adjournment is no more than a continuance of the session from one day to another, as the word itself signifies. 1 Black Com. 186, quoted in the dissenting opinion of Wright, C.J., in Cheyney v. Smith (Arizona, 1890), 23 Pac. Rep. 685; and in People v. Draper, 28 Hun (N. Y.) 3; Trammell v. Bradley, 37 Ark. 379.

In Lansford Borough, 141 Pa. St. 138, the court quoted the above definition of Blackstone, and said: "The adjournment of the commissioners is analogous to the adjournment of a court. The session is, in law, continuous. The adjournment from day to day is a matter of convenience, of which parties, jurors, and witnesses are bound to take notice."

An adjourned session is considered as the same session as that at which the adjournment was made. Mechanics' Bank v. Withers 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 106.

Same—Power of Court.—In Van Dyke v. State, 22 Ala. 57, it was held that the court had power to vacate at an adjourned term an erroneous judgment rendered during the regular term. The court said: "The adjourned term, as its name manifestly imports, is but a continuation of the previous term, and although it is continued for the trial of the causes on a particular division, it by no means follows that the power of the court over the business which has been done and the entries made is taken away. It is the same term prolonged; and although prolonged for purposes specified in the order, and although the court, as a matter of justice to the counsel and suitors, would not take up any causes not set for trial at such adjourned term, yet as its session or term has not finally closed, it has power over its record to make it conform to the truth and to see that injustice is not done by allowing an erroneous judgment to stand against a party, but should, as in the case before us, mero motu, vacate it, and set down the cause for a rehearing at the regular succeeding term. If the term has not closed and the court is still in session, it is not concluded by its previous order, but has power to rescind it; for so long as the term continues, this power necessarily results. It is not like the case of a special distinct term held after the regular term has been brought to a final close. In such case the court would be concluded by the final adjournment." See also, to the same effect, Wilson v. Lott, 5 Fla. 302.

Adjournment Distinguished from Recess.—A New York statute provided that the jury should be admonished at each adjournment of the court that they must not converse among themselves on any subject connected with the trial. It was held that an adjournment from day to day was meant, or one for some length of time, and not a recess taken during a single day's session. People v. Draper, 28 Hun (N. Y.) 3.

Adjourned Held Equivalent to Postpone.—In a New Jersey statute prescribing the length of time for which a justice may grant adjournments, the term adjourn was held equivalent to "postpone." The court said: "If there could be any doubt upon the import of the term adjourn, it is explained in the subsequent clause of the section. There the word 'postpone' is used to signify precisely the same thing. The definition of this word, according to Johnson, is to put off, to delay. It will read, according to this definition: The justice may put off, may delay, the trial for any time not exceeding fifteen days." Bisham v. Tucker, 2 N. J. L. 238.

When Adjournment is Complete.—A reception of a verdict after the crier had announced the adjournment, but before the judge had left the bench, and while counsel was present, was held no error. The court said: "What is an adjournment? It is an act, not a declaration. In the proper order of procedure the announcement of the crier precedes, and does not follow, adjournment. It is but a proclamation to those in attendance, of the time to which the court intends to adjourn, and gives notice of the formal act of adjournment. But adjournment is the act of separation and departure, and until this has fairly taken place the act is incomplete. The fact of giving the order of adjournment, and the act of rising to the feet preparatory to separation, is not actual adjournment, if the judges are yet on their bench, and those remain who are concerned in the business before them. The court is not yet fully dissolved, and can recall the order of adjournment. The parties before them are yet subject to their orders. Such was this case. Just as the crier had finished pronouncing the adjournment, and as the judges had risen to their feet, the jury entered with their verdict. The counsel were present, the judges still on their bench, and the members of the bar yet within it. The judges immediately resumed their seats and directed the prothonotary to take the verdict, which he did, and recorded it in the presence of the counsel of both parties. Under these circumstances the receiving of the verdict was good, whether the counsel objected or did not." Person v. Neigh, 52 Pa. St. 200.

Additional Term, Special Term, and Adjourned Term.—In Harris v. Gest, 4 Ohio St. 473, Thurman, C. J., distinguishes an adjourned term from the additional term, provided for by section 5 of the Ohio Act of January 31, 1854 (52 Ohio L. 10). In the case of the former the sitting after the adjournment is a prolongation of the regular term, and in contemplation of law there is but one term; but the latter is a distinct term, and not a prolongation of the regular term. So special terms provided for by many of the statutes must be distinguished from an adjourned term, as it is apparent that the same difference exists between them and the adjourned term as between the additional term of the Ohio statute and the adjourned term.

Distinction between Prorogation and Adjournment or Continuance of Parliament.—"The diversity between a prorogation and an adjournment or continuance of the parliament is, that by the prorogation in open court there is a session, and then such bills as passed in either house, or by both houses, and had no royal assent to them, must, at the next assembly, begin again." Bac. Abr., title Court of Parliament F, quoted in Wetmore v. Story, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 494, and in that case the court said that the same doctrine applied to the common council of New York city.

Extension of Term.—The Constitution of Arkansas provided that "every order or resolution in which the concurrence of both houses of the general assembly may be necessary, except question of adjournment, shall be presented to the governor, and before it shall take effect be approved by him." It was held that a resolution of the legislature extending a session did not require the approval of the governor. The court said:

ADJUDGED.—Deemed, decided, determined, held, declared. Usually applied to the declaration or sentence of a court.¹

"Is the matter of the concurrent resolution a question of adjournment, as contemplated by the constitution? 'An adjournment,' says Mr. Blackstone, 'is no more than a continuance of the session from one day to another, as the word itself signifies.' The concurrent resolution had for its sole object the continuance of the session from the ninth of March, 1881, when it would have otherwise expired, till the nineteenth of the same month. This is clearly germane to the matter of adjournment, and the resolution did not require the approval of the governor. This was the construction put upon the constitution by the legislative department, in a matter regulating its proceedings, and also by the executive." Trammell v. Bradlev, 37 Ark. 379.

Concurrent Act of Both Houses.—Adjournment, as used in the South Carolina Constitution with relation to the governor's approval of acts, means an adjournment by the concurrent act of both houses of the general assembly. Corwin v. Comptroller Gen., 6 Rich. (S. Car.) 390.

1. Edwards v. Hellings, 99 Cal. 215.

Judgment.—Where a judgment read, "Whereupon, etc., it is considered by the court here that the said Z. P. be confined and imprisoned at hard labor in the state prison for the term of ten years," on objection that he was not by the court adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, the court said: "Our statute does not require such language to be introduced either into the annunciation or record of the sentence. No judgment of the form contended for can anywhere be found. The word adjudged is here used by the legislature, perhaps not very aptly, as synonymous with 'deemed,' which latter word is frequently found in correspondent places. They have so employed the word adjudged in the act respecting lotteries, Rev. Laws 272, § 1: 'All lotteries shall be and are hereby adjudged to be common and public nuisances.'" State v. Price, 11 N. J. L. 217.

Verdict—Disqualifying Witness.—Where a statute disqualifies as a witness any person who "shall, upon conviction, be adjudged guilty of perjury," a person is not rendered incompetent until by judgment sentence has been pronounced upon him; a verdict of guilty alone is not sufficient. In this case the court said: "The learned counsel for the plaintiff in error contends that there is no difference in meaning between the words 'deemed' and adjudged used in the penal enactments of the Revised Statutes, and urges that the word adjudged in the section under consideration should be read as if written 'deemed.' It is, perhaps, enough to say that it, in fact, reads adjudged, and that whatever difference there is between the two terms is in favor of our interpretation of the statute. Moreover, the phrase 'deemed' is not in its meaning, when used in legislative expression, so much more favorable to the plaintiff in error as to turn us from our view of the question. 'To damn' or 'condemn' is 'to deem, think, or judge any one to be guilty, to be criminal; to give judgment, or sentence, or doom of guilt; to adjudge or declare the penalty or punishment.' (Rich. Dict. in voce Damn.) And 'Judge not, that ye be not judged,' of our New Testament, is 'Nyle ye deme, that ghe be not demed,' of Wicliffe." Blaufus v. People, 69 N. Y. 107.

Act of Court.—In Searight v. Com., 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 301, it was held that the jury could not convict one of two defendants and acquit the other, and direct the latter to pay costs. The court said: "But the Act of the 18th of March, 1818, which directs that a jury fee of four dollars be included in the costs of prosecution, uses the word adjudged, which can be predicated only of an act of the court."

Adjudged Invalid.—In Webb v. Bidwell, 15 Minn. 479, it was held that the words "adjudged invalid," as used in a tax statute, embraced only a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction.

The Sum Adjudged.—The sum adjudged to be paid on a conviction "refers to the sum in which the party is convicted, and does not include the costs." Reg. v. Warwickshire, 6 El. & Bl. 837.

"I think the sum adjudged means the sum in respect of which the order of adjudication is made." Ricardo v. Board of Health, 2 H. & N. 264.

Exclusion of Chinese—Adjudged in the Sense of Found, Decided.—A United States statute provided that any Chinese person convicted and adjudged to be unlawfully in the United States should be imprisoned, etc. It was held that the proceeding was summary, and that the statute was of a political and not a criminal nature, and could not be made the basis of an indictment. The court said: "What is termed 'being convicted and adjudged' means 'found,' 'decided' by the commissioner representing not the criminal law, but the political department of the government." U. S. v. Hing Quong Chow, 53 Fed. Rep. 234.

Pleading.—In Edwards v. Hellings, 99 Cal. 215, it was held that in an action upon a judgment the complaint must show that a final judgment has been recovered, and that an allegation that in the prior action the court adjudged that the defendant should pay a certain sum of money, without the use of the word "judgment," was insufficient. The court said: "But we cannot imagine how the most accomplished pleader could manage to plead a judgment without using the word 'judgment'; and there is no apparent reason why he should try to do it. In the complaint in the case at bar there is no averment of any judgment; the only allegation touching that matter being that in an action, the nature of which is not stated, the court at some stage of the action not specified adjudged that the defendants therein 'should pay' to the plaintiff a certain sum of money. Now a judgment is 'the final determination of the rights of the parties'; and a complaint upon a judgment must show that the thing sued on was such a final determination. Such final

ADJUDICATA.—See the title RES ADJUDICATA.

ADJUDICATE—ADJUDICATION.—To adjudicate is to give judgment; an adjudication is a settlement by judgment, and a judgment is in its nature a conclusion of litigation.¹

ADJUNCTS.—Adjuncts are words used to modify or describe other words in a sentence. If they modify the subject or object, they consist of adjective words, phrases, or sentences. If they modify the predicate, they consist of adverbial words, phrases, or sentences. They are primary and secondary; the former attend upon the principal parts of a sentence, and the latter upon other adjuncts.²

ADJUST—ADJUSTMENT. (See also SETTLE.)—The word “settle,” when applied to a liquidated account or demand, means to pay it. The word “adjust,” when used in reference to a liquidated claim, has the same meaning, though perhaps not quite so clearly. In reference to an unliquidated claim or demand, the word “adjust” means to determine what is due; to settle; to ascertain; as, to adjust a claim, a demand, or a right.³

determination is averred by the use of the word ‘judgment’; but the word adjudged, while sometimes used together with ‘considered,’ ‘ordered,’ ‘determined,’ ‘decreed,’ etc., as one of the operative words of a final judgment, is also applicable to interlocutory orders and adjudications of a court. It is synonymous with ‘decided,’ ‘determined,’ etc. If, in a case tried without a jury, the judge should make his written findings, which would be his decision, it would be proper to say that he thereby adjudged so and so; but his findings would not be a judgment. In this case, therefore, there is no averment of a judgment, and consequently no averment of a cause of action.”

Condition in a Bond.—A bond given to obtain an injunction of a judgment at law was conditioned that the defendant in the judgment should pay ‘all sums of money, damages, and costs that should be adjudged against him, if the injunction should be dissolved. The injunction was dissolved, and the decree was that the bill be dismissed, and that the complainant pay the costs of the injunction suit. It was held that the sureties on the bond were not liable to pay to the defendant in the injunction suit the amount of the judgment enjoined, nor the costs of that suit, unless he had first paid them to the officers entitled to them. The court said: “It is clear that, within the terms of the condition of this bond, the amount of the judgment at law was not adjudged against Lane, upon the dissolution of the injunction, and therefore the securities were not bound for its payment.” Corder v. Martin, 17 Mo. 43.

Duly Adjudged.—See DULY.

1. Irwin v. U. S., 23 Ct. of Cl. 154. In this case it was held, where Congress had directed the Court of Claims that they should make an “adjudication according to law” in respect to a certain claim, and also report the same to Congress, that final judgment must be rendered. The court said: “The question, however, is complicated by the addition at the end of the statute, of the words ‘and report the same to Congress.’ These words, it is urged, destroy the power to enter final judgment, and place the court in a position analogous to that occupied by them in cases referred under the Bowman Act, 1883, wherein we act simply in aid of the Congress, and have not judicial power. If this contention be correct, the force and effect of the word adjudicate is destroyed. That word is evidently carefully selected, and must be assumed to have been chosen by the law-makers with deliberate intent that we should give to it the full legal effect to which it is entitled. That legal effect is to hear these claims upon the evidence, to enter judgment thereupon from which an appeal will lie, and not simply to prepare for the advice of Congress and in aid of that body a report which carries with it no definite legal result.”

“The English use of the term adjudication is to express the act of giving judgment.” Tomlinson. “Adjudicate: To determine in the exercise of judicial power; synonymous with ‘adjudge’ in its strictest sense. Adjudication: A solemn or deliberate determination by judicial power.” Abbott’s L. Dict. Quoted in Street v. Benner, 20 Fla. 713.

Adjust and Settle. (See also SETTLE.)—“Within certain limitations in ordinary use, the words adjust and ‘settle’ have different meanings. They are not infrequently used in the sense of ‘paying.’ They are synonyms, and in some of their uses are equivalents of ‘to fix; to arrange;’ in others, ‘to determine; to establish; to regulate.’” Lynch v. Nugent, 80 Iowa 429.

ADMINISTER.—To give, to dispense, to furnish, to direct and cause to be taken, as to administer medicine.² The word "minister" is said to be derived claim was held to mean the mechanical means of making the adjustment. Page v. Holmes Burglar Alarm Tel. Co., 17 Blatchf. (U. S.) 485.

Open Account.—In Townes v. Birchett, 12 Leigh (Va.) 201, it is said of a letter in which the writer asked to have his accounts settled and adjusted, that by this was meant settled and a balance struck, and that the word denoted that the writer understood the account to be open at that time.

Insurance. (See also the various insurance titles.)—A policy provided that payment of losses should be made in sixty days from the date of adjustment. The court said: "The counsel for the appellants insists that the word adjustment is inaccurately used in this connection; that it is only appropriate in the settlement of marine losses, and then not by means of the action of parties themselves. This is not impossible. In the preceding condition, * * * the words 'loss or damage' are not used with legal precision. * * * But the condition gives the company sixty days from the date of the 'adjustment' of the preliminary proofs of loss by the parties' before the loss is payable. To adjust, in its fair meaning, is to settle or bring to a satisfactory state, so that the parties are agreed in the result. (Webster.) And that this is a fair reading in the present case is evident from the use of the words 'by the parties' at the close of the condition. The preliminary proofs are to be adjusted by the parties. The parties are to act upon them by negotiation, by statements on the one side, demands for correction or addition on the other, by compliance with such requests, until the parties agree. If they do not agree, it can hardly be termed an adjustment by the parties, although the law may itself determine the sufficiency of such proofs." New York v. Hamilton F. Ins. Co., 39 N. Y. 45, quoted in Barber v. Fire, etc., Ins. Co., 16 W. Va. 676.

Adjustable Stern Dock.—A contract to construct an "adjustable stern dock" does not require a dock which is automatically adjustable, but one which is adjustable by cutting away and filling in its gates so that they will conform to the contour of the hull of the vessel; especially where the term is treated as a technical one, and the experts agree upon that definition of it. International Bow, etc., Co. v. U. S., 60 Fed. Rep. 523.

1. A condition of sale providing that "the admeasurements are presumed to be correct," and negating allowance for errors, does not imply that there has been an actual admeasurement prior to sale; the condition means that if the quantity stated is incorrect, neither party is to have any claim. Cordingley v. Cheesebrough, 31 L. J. Ch. 617, 3 Giff. 496.

2. La Beau v. People, 34 N. Y. 233; People v. Quin, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 134; Blackburn v. State, 23 Ohio St. 146.

Administering is defined to be giving, dispensing. People v. Quin, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 134.

Administering Poison—Deception. (See also the title POISONS AND POISONING.)—In Blackburn v. State, 23 Ohio St. 146, it was held that neither fraud nor deception is a necessary ingredient in the act of administering poison. The court said: "To force poison down one's throat, or to compel him by threats of violence to swallow it, is an administering of poison. Neither deception nor breach of confidence is a necessary ingredient in the act. It matters not whether the poison be put into the hand or into the stomach of the party whose life is to be destroyed by it. If the poison reaches the stomach or body of the deceased, and does its work of death there, it is immaterial whether force or fraud was the means by which the guilty agent effected his object. In either case it is an administering of poison, within the meaning of the act. We think counsel are wrong in assuming that the word administer always and necessarily implies service. If it does, it often implies service to a very unwilling master. Such is the case when the law is administered to a criminal. The word 'minister' is said to be derived from the same root as the Latin word manus, the hand. Etymologically, therefore, the word administer would seem applicable to anything that could be done by the hand, to or for another. We think also that the court was right in instructing the jury, as in substance and effect it did, that it is immaterial whether the party taking the poison took it willingly, intending thereby to commit suicide, or was overcome by force or overreached by fraud."

Same—Leaving the Poison with Intent that it shall be Taken.—In La Beau v. People, 34 N. Y. 233, it was held that putting poison in a certain place with the intent that a certain person should take it, if it is so taken is administering it. The court said: "It was certainly never intended to confine this offense to the manual administering of the poison to a person. So construed it would be substantially without effect, and would not reach the large class of offenders at whom it was aimed. The word administer has a far more extended meaning. Webster defines it, among other things, to mean 'to furnish, to give, to administer medicine, to direct and cause it to be taken.' As used in this statute it was obviously intended to cover this whole ground—making it penal to furnish or cause it to be furnished and taken, to give or cause it to be taken. And it embraced and was intended to embrace every mode of giving it or causing it to be taken. A penal statute should be construed according to its plain import, to give it life according to its apparent purpose. In both letter and spirit I think the statute embraces this case."

So, putting poison into coffee is administering it. Johnson v. State, 92 Ga. 36.

from the same root as the Latin word manus, the hand. Etymologically, therefore, the word "administer" would seem applicable to anything that could be done by the hand, to or for another.¹ To administer is to fulfil the functions of an administrator.²

ADMINISTRATION. (See also the titles DEBTS OF DECEDENTS; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; FOREIGN EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; LEGACIES AND DEVISES; PROBATE AND LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION; REVOCATION (PROBATE AND ADMINISTRATION).)—The management of the estate of a deceased person who has left no executor.³

A person who supplies a woman with a drug for her to take, which she takes in his absence, administers it. R. v. Wilson, 26 L. J. M. C. 18, D. & B. 127, followed in R. v. Farrow, D. & B. 164.

Same—As to What County the Crime is Committed In.—It was held in Robbins v. State, 8 Ohio St. 131, that where poison is prescribed in one county and under directions taken in another, and the party dies in the latter county, the crime is committed in the county where the person is poisoned. The court said: "To determine this, it becomes necessary to inquire what constitutes the act of administering poison within the meaning of the statute. If it consisted in simply giving or prescribing the poison, there would be great force in this exception. But the term administer as used in the statute has acquired a legal signification, importing not simply the prescribing or giving of the drug, but directing and causing it to be taken. Webster, in his Dictionary (quarto), says that 'to administer medicine is to direct and cause it to be taken.'"

Same—Must be Taken into the Stomach.—The poison is not administered unless it is taken into the stomach. Taking into the mouth alone is not sufficient. Rex v. Cadman, Carr. Supp. 237; Rex v. Harley, 4 C. & P. 369, 19 E. C. L. 424. To the same effect is Sumpster v. State, 11 Fla. 256. In this last case poison was put into a pot of food intended for the consumption of the victim and his family, but was discovered before any part had been taken into the stomach. It was held that this was not an administering of poison.

Same—Mississippi Statute.—"It is contended that a new trial should be awarded upon the ground that the proof did not show that 'the poison or medicine was administered under pretense that it was a medicine.' The statute affords no pretense for this exception. It declares that 'if any slave, free negro, or mulatto shall prepare or administer to any person or persons any medicine whatever with intent to kill,' etc. According to the evidence, arsenic was administered, which is not only a medicine, but a poison. And such is the case with many articles used as medicines, depending upon the quantity in which they are given. The word administer, as used in the statute, does not mean that the article given in order to effect the felonious intent must be given or administered under pretense that it is a medicine. The manifest intention of the legislature was to punish any preparation, giving or administration of any substance known as a medicine with intent to kill." Sarah v. State, 28 Miss. 276, 61 Am. Dec. 544.

Administering Drugs with Intent to Produce Abortion.—See the title ABORTION.

Intoxicating Liquors.—A law permitting physicians to administer spirituous liquors whenever they deem it necessary contemplates the administering of liquor as medicine. Brinson v. State, 89 Ala. 110. The court said: "Administer here means 'to give, as a dose; to direct or cause to be taken, as medicine' (Imperial Dict.). La Beau v. People, 33 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 69. This is emphasized by the subsequent word 'prescribe,' which means to 'direct as a remedy' (Worcester's Dict.). The statute clearly contemplates the bona fide administering of such liquors as a medicine in cases of necessity, not otherwise."

1. Blackburn v. State, 23 Ohio St. 162.

2. Lanier v. Irvine, 21 Minn. 447. See also ADMINISTRATION.

Administrator's Bond.—In Barbour v. Robertson, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 93, the words "well and truly administer according to law" in an administrator's bond were held to apply to the disposition of the estate in behalf of the creditors only, and not to bind the sureties for the proper distribution of the surplus among the distributees. See also Moore v. Waller, 1 Marsh. (Ky.) 488. Compare Sanford v. Gilman, 44 Conn. 464; and see the title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

3. Crossan v. McCrary, 37 Iowa 684. In this case it is said: "The word administration means, as here used [in statute declaring that administration shall not be originally granted after five years], the management of the estate of a decedent, and expresses the jurisdiction assumed by the proper probate court over it. This jurisdiction is assumed by the appointment of the administrator; when that is done, administration is said to have been granted. It does not refer simply to the act of appointment of the administrator, although that act is included in the thought expressed, for administration, management of the estate, is assumed by the appointment."

Administration consists in the due application of the thing to be administered to the contemplated purpose or purposes. Todd v. Willis, 66 Tex. 714.

A Comprehensive Term.—In Martin v. Ellerbe, 70 Ala. 338, the court said: "In relation to the admissibility in evidence of the record of the decree of the court of chancery against the administrator-in-chief and the appellant as surety of the intestate, we do not conceive that it depends upon the inquiry whether there is such technical privity or connection between an administrator-in-chief and an administrator de bonis non as will render, in all cases, judgments or decrees against, or the acts or admissions of the former, binding upon or evidence against the latter, as they might be if the one were clothed only with the rights, and claimed only in succession to the other. By the common law the two administrations were separate, distinct, independent of each other. The one was not the mere successor to or continuation of the other. Each was, of itself, an immediate, full administration. The administrator-in-chief, by the terms of the grant to him, was clothed with title to, and the duty and authority of administering, all the goods and chattels, rights and credits, which were of the testator or intestate at the time of his death. The administrator de bonis non, by the terms of the grant to him, was confined, limited in authority to the goods and chattels, rights and credits, of the testator or intestate, which were unadministered—it was de bonis non administratis. The import of the terms of the respective grants clearly indicates the distinction between them, and, so far as regards the administrator de bonis non, directs attention as to what act of the administrator-in-chief, or what was done while his authority was of force, within the line of his duty, was an administration. The term administration, in this respect, is of comprehensive meaning. It includes more than the mere collection of the assets, the payment of debts and legacies, and distribution to the next of kin. It involves all which may be done rightfully in the preservation of the assets, and all which may be done legally by the administrator in his dealings with creditors, distributees, or legatees, or which may be done by them in securing their rights; and it includes all which may be done, and rightfully done, in relation to adverse claims to assets, which have come to the possession of the administrator as the property of the testator or intestate."

Expenses of, in Statute.—In Lester v. Mathews, 56 Ga. 656, the court said: "Plaintiff further alleges that the consent verdict, which is appended to the declaration, and which sets out the fees to be paid to proponent's counsel 'after expenses of administration,' meant, by the expression 'expenses of administration,' the fee of plaintiff and his associates, and that the fees of his associates and much of his own were paid by said administrators under the verdict, and so receipted for, with the consent of all parties, and that all are thereby estopped from denying that the balance of his claim is payable under the verdict as expenses of administration; and adds a prayer that if the consent verdict does not include the fee under the term 'expenses, etc.,' it be corrected and made to express it. * * * But it is claimed that this debt is due as expenses of administration, and that this suit is brought upon the consent verdict to ascertain the amount of this fee as part of such expenses, and to compel the administrators to pay it as such. We do not think such a fee embraced in the meaning of those words. It is there said the parties so meant the words to be understood, and it is asked that to support this declaration the consent verdict or decree be amended so as to embrace fees. This cannot be done in this proceeding. It was done on a motion for a new trial in Lucas v. Lucas, 30 Ga. 191; but in the same case it is said that except in case of such a motion the verdict or judgment or decree can only be rectified by bill. Inasmuch as now a party is never forced into equity when he can have equity relief granted at law, we think it might be rectified on a proper case made between proper parties, with distinct pleadings either in equity or at law; but in a suit at law to recover the money, to mix up such equitable relief with the parties now in court in this case, would be an anomaly indeed; in the language of the chief justice, in another case, it would be a legal hermaphrodite."

Special administration is where only specific effects of the deceased are committed to the administrator. In re Senate Bill, 12 Colo. 193.

1. Executive or Administrative.—In Atty.-Gen. v. Boston, 142 Mass. 200, it was held that the board of aldermen of the city were authorized to pass an order directing the removal of a sidewalk, and that such an order was not "executive or administrative" within the meaning of the Massachusetts statute vesting the executive power of the city government in the mayor. The court said: "It is to be considered, if this is so, whether the order to remove the sidewalk here in question has been passed by the proper authority. That the aldermen had formerly the powers of surveyors of highways appears by the Stat. of 1854, c. 448, § 41. Under the Stat. of 1885, c. 266, § 6, the executive power of the city government is vested in the mayor, 'to be exercised through the several officers and boards of the city in their respective departments, under his general supervision and control; and the contention of the informant is, that the power to dispense with or remove the sidewalk is executive or administrative strictly, both these words being used in the statute. But the power to determine whether public convenience requires the construction of a sidewalk, and equally so its removal, involves the exercise of judgment not administrative only, and the exercise of the power is judicial in its character, although expressed in a legislative form. The power so to repair a highway that it shall be fit for travel within the lines marked out for travel as established, is executive; but that of determining what shall be the lines of travel, is legislative. The board of aldermen may not be able to control executive action of the mayor by prescribing the time within which the removal shall take place; but this portion of the order may fairly be interpreted as imposing upon the proper officer, the superintendent of streets, acting under his official superior, the mayor, the duty of doing it within the time named, if it can be so done with proper regard to other executive duties of a similar character."

I. DEFINITION.—The court of admiralty is distinguished from the courts of law and equity as the tribunal having jurisdiction of maritime causes, contracts, torts, injuries, and offenses, and administering the maritime law.¹

II. HISTORY AND DEVELOPMENT.—The admiralty is a court of ancient origin, traceable back in English jurisprudence to the reign of Edward the First,² and exercising a jurisdiction coeval and coextensive with that of other foreign maritime courts;¹ indeed, by some authorities it is said to have existed long before that time.²

Limits and Extent of Jurisdiction.—Owing to the jealousy of the common law, the ancient jurisdiction of the high court of admiralty in England was limited by courts and Parliament.³ At the present time, however, the jurisdiction of admiralty is more extensive.⁴ The courts of vice-admiralty which existed in the American colonies, administered by deputies of the governor or proprietary, under royal patent, exercised without hindrance a jurisdiction as broad as has ever been claimed for the ancient English admiralty.⁵ And it is now settled, after much controversy, that the jurisdiction of the courts of admiralty in the United States is not to be limited to that of the English admiralty at the time of the Revolution, but is as extensive as that jurisdiction ever was.⁶

he contended for the jurisdiction of admiralty as now established in the United States, after a wavering and uncertain line of authorities, has gathered together much of the ancient learning relating to admiralty. In regard to its antiquity he said: "If it be not of immemorial antiquity, as Lord Coke supposes, it is almost certain that its origin may be safely assigned in some anterior age. (Godolphin on Admiralty Jurisdiction 29; Selden De Dom. Maris, lib. 2, cap. 14-24; 1 Valin Comm. 1.) There is strong probability of its existence in the reign of Richard the First, since the Laws of Oleron, which were compiled and promulgated by him on his return from the Holy Land, have always been deemed the laws of the admiralty, and could not have been fully enforced in any other court. (Selden De Dom. Maris, lib. 2, cap. 24; Godolphin on Admiralty Jurisdiction 143.)"

Laws of Oleron.—By the Laws of Oleron, the jurisdiction of admiralty was explicitly asserted over maritime crimes and offenses, and over torts in ports within the ebb and flow of the tide, as well as upon the high seas. These laws were continued in the time of King John, and certain ordinances added to them; they were promulgated anew in the reign of Henry III., and received their ultimate confirmation in the twelfth year of Edward III. 2 Brown Adm. 40.

In fact there can scarcely be the slightest doubt that the admiralty of England, and the maritime courts of all the other powers of Europe, were formed upon one and the same common model; and that their jurisdiction included the same subjects as the consular courts of the Mediterranean."

It was strenuously asserted by Lord Coke that the admiralty was not a court of record, had no power to impose a fine, and that it could not take a recognizance or stipulation in aid of its general jurisdiction. Tomlinson's Case, 12 Co. 104. But this right has been regained. Hook v. Moreton, 1 Ld. Raym. 397.

During the reign of Edward III. a considerable encroachment was made by the courts of common law upon the jurisdiction exercised by the Court of Admiralty as an outcome of the jealousy entertained toward the latter. See Zouch on Admiralty Jurisdiction 36. And by the Act of 15 Rich. II., ch. 3, a further limitation was put upon the jurisdiction. Not until a comparatively late date was the exclusive jurisdiction in prize causes allowed. Lindo v. Rodney, Doug. 613, note.

4. 3 & 4 Vict., c. 65. And by the English Admiralty Court Act of 1861 the admiralty jurisdiction is, in some respects, more extensive than in the United States. By the seventh section of the act, jurisdiction is given over any claims for damages done by any ship.

5. The commissions of the vice-admirals in the colonies in North America, insular and continental, conferred a much larger jurisdiction than existed in England when such commissions were granted. Waring v. Clarke, 5 How. (U. S.) 454. See in Benedict's Adm. 69 the text of a commission granting Vice-Admiral Lord Cornbury jurisdiction in "all civil and maritime causes and * * * business civil and maritime whatsoever," arising in "the maritime parts whatsoever" of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut. This is a larger power than any English judge dared to claim at that time (1701).

Extent of Jurisdiction in United States.—It was contended that the extent of the admiralty jurisdiction under the constitution was to be limited by that of the English

III. COURTS OF ADMIRALTY IN THE UNITED STATES—1. District Courts.—

The Constitution of the United States confers upon the courts of the United States cognizance of all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction.¹ In pursuance of this authority the Judiciary Act of 1789 gave the district courts of the United States exclusive original cognizance of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction—to the exclusion, not only of all other federal courts, but of all state courts,² except as therein expressly provided.

2. Circuit Court of Appeals and Supreme Court.—By the Act of Congress of March 3, 1891, an appeal lies from the final decision of the district courts in admiralty cases, irrespective of the amount in controversy, direct to the Circuit Court of Appeals;³ and in the exercise of this jurisdiction the court may review questions of both law and fact, and is not limited to questions of law, as was the Supreme Court prior to the act.⁴ Appeals and writs of error may be taken from the district courts direct to the Supreme Court in all cases where the jurisdiction of the court is in issue from the final decision in prize causes; in cases of conviction of a capital or otherwise infamous offense; and cases involving the construction of the Constitution of the United States, the constitutionality of any law or treaty of the United States, or where the constitution

High Court of Admiralty, and in accordance with this contention arose the attempt to limit the jurisdiction to the navigable waters wherein the tide ebbs and flows. This limitation, put upon the English admiralty by the statute of 13 and 14 Richard II., has not been maintained. In Waring v. Clarke, 5 How. (U. S.) 441, the jurisdiction of the United States District Court was asserted over a collision on the upper Mississippi, and it was held that cases of maritime and admiralty jurisdiction were not to be limited by the consideration of what were such cases under the English admiralty. As also in New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 6 How. (U. S.) 344. In the former case will be found a discussion of the admiralty jurisdiction in England and its relation to that under the constitutional grant.

1. Constitutional Grant.—U. S. Const., art. 3, § 2.

Therefore any state law which, for a cause of action clearly maritime, attempts to give a remedy at common law in a state court, by proceeding in rem against the vessel specified as debtor, is in conflict with the exclusive jurisdiction of the district court, and is void. Stewart v. Potomac Ferry Co., 12 Fed. Rep. 296; Terrell v. The Schooner B. F. Woolsey, 4 Fed. Rep. 552.

Circuit Courts—Revised Statutes.—Jurisdiction was given the circuit courts in seizures for slave-trading, and in condemnation of property used by persons in insurrection. See U. S. Rev. Stat., §§ 71, 5308.

3. 26 Stat. at L., c. 517, § 4.

Formerly, the circuit courts of the United States had jurisdiction of cases in admiralty on appeal from the district courts, but by the act referred to above this jurisdiction was taken away.

4. By the Act of Congress of Feb. 16, 1875, it was provided "that the circuit courts of the United States, in deciding causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction on the instance side of the court, shall find the facts and the conclusions of law upon which it renders its judgments or decrees, and shall state the facts and conclusions of law separately," and that the Supreme Court upon appeal shall be limited to a determination of the question of law. In The Havilah, 48 Fed. Rep. 684, it was held that, although the Act of 1891 declared that "all provisions of law now in force regulating the methods and system of review through appeals or writs of error" shall regulate appeals and writs of error to the Circuit Court of Appeals, yet the former act did not apply to appeals in admiralty from the existing circuit courts to that court, and that the same might be heard without separate findings of fact and of law.

or a law of any state is claimed to be in contravention of the Constitution of the United States.¹ But in all other cases the appeal is direct to the Circuit Court of Appeals, whose decision is final;² excepting that this court may at any time certify to the Supreme Court any question or proposition of law concerning which it desires the instruction of that court for its proper decision.³

3. State Courts.—The admiralty jurisdiction of the state courts was superseded by the establishment of the district courts as courts of admiralty.⁴

Common-law Remedies.—But under the clause of the Judiciary Act, "leaving to suitors in all cases the rights of a common-law remedy when the common law is competent to give it," the suitor may proceed in rem in the admiralty or in personam in the same jurisdiction, or he may elect not to go into admiralty at all, and may resort to his common-law remedy in the state or federal courts.⁵

So a suit in personam by seamen for wages is maintainable at common law, and therefore may be brought in a state court,⁶ as also may a proceeding in personam growing out of a collision.⁷

But common-law remedies are not available to enforce maritime liens by proceedings in rem, and consequently the original jurisdiction to enforce such a lien is in the district courts.⁸

IV. JURISDICTION—1. General Nature.—The question of what are causes of a maritime nature, jurisdiction of which is conferred upon the United States district courts by the Constitution and the Judiciary Act, is determinable from the general maritime law.⁹ It may be said generally that a cause of a mari-

Territorial Courts.—While, within the states, admiralty jurisdiction can be exercised in those courts only which are established in pursuance of the third article of the constitution, this limitation does not extend to the territories. Congress may vest admiralty jurisdiction in courts created by a territorial legislature. American Ins. Co. v. 356 Bales of Cotton, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 511. Compare American Ins. Co. v. Johnson, Blatchf. & H. Adm. 10. But an Act of Congress investing territorial courts with jurisdiction "in all cases arising under the laws and constitution of the United States" does not embrace cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; they do not arise under the constitution. American Ins. Co. v. 356 Bales of Cotton, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 511.

6. Leon v. Galceran, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 185.

7. Schoonmaker v. Gilmore, 102 U. S. 118.

State laws conferring admiralty jurisdiction upon state courts are unconstitutional and void only to the extent that they infringe the Judiciary Act of Congress of 1789, giving the national courts exclusive jurisdiction of all cases in admiralty arising on waters navigable from the sea by vessels of ten or more tons burden, saving to suitors the right of a common-law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it. The Kentucky statute giving the state court jurisdiction in case of collision between two boats, in a personal action, simply modifies the common-law remedy, and is within the reservation. It confers an additional jurisdiction, but not strictly an admiralty jurisdiction, and is constitutional. Stewart v. Harry, 3 Bush (Ky.) 438.

8. The Belfast, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 644; The Lottawanna, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 558; Terrell v. The Schooner B. F. Woolsey, 4 Fed. Rep. 552.

The Saving Clause in the Judiciary Act of 1789, securing to suitors a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it, does not give them a remedy at common law, but a common-law remedy. A proceeding in rem is a civil-law remedy, and when used in the common-law courts is provided for by statute. Berwin v. Steamship Matanzas, 19 La. Ann. 384.

An Action in a State Court against a steamboat, in her own name, is an attempt to exercise admiralty jurisdiction. Griswold v. The Steamboat Otter, 12 Minn. 465.

9. What are Causes of Maritime Nature.—The Seneca, 3 Wall. Jr. (C. C.) 395; The Barge Leonard, 3 Ben. (U. S.) 263; Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 335.

In Ex p. Easton, 95 U. S. 68, Clifford, J., said that the nature and extent of the admiralty jurisdiction conferred by the constitution must be determined by the laws of Con-time nature must relate to the business of commerce or navigation, and this, whether it arises out of contract or out of a liability from some other source.¹

2. Waters within the Jurisdiction—a. HIGH SEAS.—The term "high seas" in the English admiralty jurisdiction is comprehensive, and includes all the waters affected by the ebb and flow of the tide, and therefore subject to the jurisdiction. The term "high seas," however, is generally used to designate the open sea or ocean subject to admiralty jurisdiction.²

In Criminal Statutes.—In criminal statutes the phrase is used in contradistinction to landlocked ports, bays, and harbors, which, though subject to tidal ebb and flow, are within the jurisdiction of the governments of the surrounding countries.³

b.* NAVIGABLE WATERS—(1) General Rule.—In the early development of the admiralty jurisdiction in the United States, it was maintained that this jurisdiction existed where the ocean tide ebbed and flowed, and there was sufficient depth of water for navigation, beginning at low-water mark,⁴ though the water be infra corpus comitatus.⁵

Waters Navigable by Vessels Used in Commerce.—Since the case of The Genesee Chief, deciding upon the validity of the Act of 1845, the words "navigable waters" have been substituted for "tide-waters," and the jurisdiction of the courts of admiralty by a long line of decisions is held to extend to all waters connecting with other states or countries, and navigable by vessels used in commerce.⁶ But gress and the decisions of this court, and by the usages prevailing in the courts of the states at the time the Federal Constitution was adopted.

The decisions of the courts of common law in England, under the statutes of 13 and 15 Rich. II., upon the jurisdiction of the admiralty, are not binding upon the courts of the United States. Steele v. Thacher, Ware (U. S.) 91. On the other hand, the United States courts do not claim to exercise all the powers of admiralty courts under the civil law. Bags of Linseed, 1 Black (U. S.) 108.

Judge Story said that the words "admiralty" and "maritime jurisdiction" include "all transactions and proceedings relative to commerce and navigation, and to damages or injuries upon the sea." De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. (U. S.) 468.

In Stevens v. The Sandwich, 1 Pet. Adm. 233, Winchester, J., said: "Within the cognizance of this jurisdiction are all affairs relating to vessels of trade and the owners thereof, as such; and all matters which concern owners, proprietors of ships, as such; * * * whatever is of a maritime nature, either by way of navigation upon the seas, or negotiation at or beyond the sea, in the way of marine trade or commerce."

1. Causes of Maritime Nature must Relate to Commerce or Navigation.—People v. The Steamer America, 34 Cal. 676.

In Contracts, Subject Matter Determines; in Torts, the Locality.—In respect to contracts the jurisdiction depends on the subject matter, viz., whether maritime or not; in respect to torts, on locality, viz., whether committed on the high seas, or in ports within the flow and reflux of the tide, or not. Waring v. Clarke, 5 How. (U. S.) 441; De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. (U. S.) 465; Thomas v. Lane, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 1; Thackarey v. The American Boat Farmer, Gilp. (U. S.) 529.

And it was held that the jurisdiction existed, although the downward fresh-water current was not perceptibly set back, if there was a regular rise and fall in the water corresponding with the tidal effect. Jackson v. The Steamboat Magnolia, 20 How. (U. S.) 296. So in U. S. v. Coombs, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 72, the court gave as its opinion "that in cases purely dependent upon the locality of the act done, the jurisdiction is limited to the sea, and to tide-waters, as far as the tide flows; and that it does not reach beyond high-water mark."

this act, purporting to extend the jurisdiction of the courts of admiralty of the United States to the Great Lakes and navigable waters connecting therewith, is held to be inoperative, and the jurisdiction upon such waters declared to exist independent of the act.¹

Co., 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 363.

In The Propeller Genesee Chief, 12 How. (U. S.) 443, the jurisdiction of admiralty over navigable waters generally was first established, and the doctrine limiting the jurisdiction to waters where the tide ebbed and flowed, which had existed for so many years, was overruled. This was a case of collision on Lake Ontario, and consequently involved the construction of the Act of 1845, purporting to extend the jurisdiction of the district courts to certain cases upon the lakes and navigable waters connecting the same. The constitutionality of the act being questioned, it was contended by counsel that Congress had the right to enact the law within its authority to regulate commerce. In disposing of this contention, Taney, C.J., said: "The law, however, contains no regulations of commerce; nor any provision in relation to shipping and navigation on the lakes. It merely confers a new jurisdiction on the district courts; and this is its only object and purpose. It is entitled 'An act extending the jurisdiction of the district courts to certain cases upon the lakes and navigable waters connecting the same;' and the enacting clause conforms to the title. * * * It is evident, therefore, from the title as well as the body of the law, that Congress, in passing it, did not intend to exercise their power to regulate commerce, nor to derive their authority from that article of the Constitution. And if the constitutionality of this law is supported as a regulation of commerce, we shall impute to the legislature the exercise of a power which it has not claimed under that clause of the Constitution, and which we have no reason to suppose it deemed itself authorized to exercise." But the jurisdiction was established as extending to all public and navigable waters used as highways of commerce, independent of the act, and this has been adopted since by a long list of cases. The reason for the limitation of the jurisdiction in England was accounted for by the fact that in that country there were no streams navigable beyond the ebb and flow of the tide, and that, therefore, in England tide-water and navigable water were synonymous terms. In concluding the opinion as to the jurisdiction, Taney, C.J., said: "There is certainly nothing in the ebb and flow of the tide that makes the waters peculiarly suitable for admiralty jurisdiction, nor anything in the absence of a tide that renders it unfit. If it is a public navigable water, on which commerce is carried on between different states or nations, the reason for the jurisdiction is precisely the same. And if a distinction is made on that account, it is merely arbitrary, without any foundation in reason; and, indeed, would seem to be inconsistent with it. * * * It is evident that a definition that would at this day limit public rivers in this country to tide-water rivers is utterly inadmissible. We have thousands of miles of public navigable water, including lakes and rivers, in which there is no tide. And certainly there can be no reason for admiralty power over a public tide-water which does not apply with equal force to any other public water used for commercial purposes and foreign trade. The lakes and the waters connecting them are undoubtedly public waters; and we think are within the grant of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction in the Constitution of the United States. We are the more convinced of the correctness of the rule we have laid down, because it is obviously the one adopted by Congress in 1789, when the government went into operation; for the ninth section of the Judiciary Act of 1789, by which the first courts of admiralty were established, declares that the district courts 'shall have exclusive cognizance of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, including all seizures under the laws of impost, navigation, or trade of the United States, where the seizures are made on waters which are navigable from the sea by vessels of ten or more tons burden, within their respective districts, as well as upon the high seas.' The jurisdiction here is made to depend upon the navigable character of the water, and not upon the ebb and flow of the tide. If the water was navigable it was deemed to be public; and if public, was regarded as within the legitimate scope of the admiralty jurisdiction conferred by the constitution."

In Fretz v. Bull, 12 How. (U. S.) 466, a case heard at the same time as The Genesee Chief, the jurisdiction as declared in that case was affirmed. This was a case of collision on the Mississippi above the effect of tide.

1. The Act of 1845, which was to extend the jurisdiction to certain cases upon the lakes and navigable waters connecting the same, was enacted on the assumption that the jurisdiction of the admiralty was limited to tide-waters, and, therefore, since this assumption has been declared a false one, and the jurisdiction held to extend to all navigable waters, it is inoperative and ineffectual with the exception of the clause giving to either party the right to trial by jury. The

Navigable waters, within the meaning of the Act of Congress, as accepted now, are those which are navigable in fact and which are used or capable of being used as highways for commerce, and when by themselves or by connecting with other waters they form a continual highway by which commerce may be carried on with other states or countries.¹

Canals Connecting Navigable Waters are within this jurisdiction.²

(2) Internal Rivers and Waters.—The jurisdiction extends to all public navigable waters, even to such waters, harbors, sounds, or navigable rivers as are wholly within a state or only navigable therein; and that the collision or tort complained of happened within the body of a county, or above the tide, does not affect the jurisdiction.³

Jurisdiction Not Dependent upon Power of Congress to Regulate Commerce.—It was once intimated that matters arising upon voyages between ports of the same state were not cognizable by the courts of admiralty,⁴ but it is now declared that jurisdiction over these waters is declared to exist under the Act of 1789. In declaring this act inoperative as stated, Nelson, J., said in The Eagle, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 15, overruling Allen v. Newberry, 21 How. (U. S.) 244: "The original purpose of the act, therefore, has ceased, and is of no effect; and, in order to give it any, instead of construing it as extending the jurisdiction in admiralty, it must be construed as limiting it—the very reverse of its object and intent as expressed on its face." Franconet v. The Propeller F. W. Backus, Newb. Adm. 1. So the admiralty jurisdiction on the western lakes and rivers is not limited to cases within U. S. Act of Feb. 20, 1845 (5 Stat. at L. 726), but resort may be had to the Act of 1789 to sustain the jurisdiction. The Flora, 1 Biss. (U. S.) 29. See also Revenue Cutter No. 1, Brown Adm. 76; The Isabella, Brown Adm. 96; The General Cass, Brown Adm. 334; The Illinois, Brown Adm. 497; Gillet v. Pierce, Brown Adm. 553.

1. The Daniel Ball, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 557; The Steamboat Ad. Hine v. Trevor, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 555.

The Mississippi River.—The admiralty jurisdiction has been clearly established upon the whole length and breadth of the Mississippi, and all other public rivers, as far as they are navigable from the ocean for vessels of ten tons burden. Salvage services are as much the subject of such jurisdiction as damages from a collision. Williams v. The Barge Jenny Lind, Newb. Adm. 443.

The Fox and Wolf Rivers in Wisconsin, above Oshkosh, and between that place and Winneconne, are held not to be public navigable waters of the United States, within the admiralty jurisdiction. Morse v. Home Ins. Co., 30 Wis. 496.

The Saginaw River is within the admiralty jurisdiction. The facts that it lies wholly within one state (Michigan), and is a stream tributary merely to the lakes, do not prevent this. The General Cass, Brown Adm. 334.

2. Scott v. The Propeller Young America, Newb. Adm. 101; The B. and C., 18 Fed. Rep. 543; The Steam Ferry Boat Roslyn, 8 Ben. (U. S.) 455; The Avon, Brown Adm. 170; Malony v. Milwaukee, 1 Fed. Rep. 611. As to the Welland Canal, see The Oler, 2 Hughes (U. S.) 12; or the Illinois and Michigan Canal, Ex p. Boyer, 109 U. S. 629.

In The Steam Barge Monitor, 9 Ben. (U. S.) 78, the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court over cases of collision upon inland canals was upheld upon authority.

The fact that under a contract of affreightment part of the service was to be performed on the Erie Canal, and by a boat built without any means of locomotion in herself, did not exclude the admiralty from having jurisdiction of a libel by a consignee for a failure to deliver part of the cargo. The Canal Boat E. M. McChesney, 8 Ben. (U. S.) 150.

3. Waters Wholly Within a State or Only Navigable Therein.—Jackson v. The Steamboat Magnolia, 20 How. (U. S.) 296; Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Philadelphia, etc., Steam Towboat Co., 23 How. (U. S.) 215; Waring v. Clarke, 5 How. (U. S.) 441; St. John v. Paine, 10 How. (U. S.) 557; Newton v. Stebbins, 10 How. (U. S.) 586; The Steamboat New York v. Rea, 18 How. (U. S.) 223.

As has been seen, in Waring v. Clarke, 5 How. (U. S.) 464, it was held that the question of jurisdiction was unaffected by the fact that the locality of the collision was infra corpus comitatus, provided it occurred in waters where the tide ebbed and flowed. And now, since the term "navigable waters" has been substituted for "waters in which the tide ebbs and flows," the proposition as stated must hold. It was so held in The Propeller Commerce, 1 Black (U. S.) 574.

A suit for damages for an assault committed by a master upon a seaman while on board ship is within the jurisdiction of an admiralty court of the United States, although the vessel was, at the time, lying within the body of a county. Roberts v. Skolfield, 3 Ware (U. S.) 184.

Salvage.—Courts of admiralty in the United States have jurisdiction over claims for salvage upon waters within the ebb and flow of the tide, though within the body of a state. The Wave, Blatchf. & H. Adm. 235; The Brig John Gilpin, Olc. Adm. 77.

4. Allen v. Newberry, 21 How. (U. S.) 244; The Troy, 4 Blatchf. (U. S.) 355. So in New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 6 How. (U. S.) 344, although this question did not actually arise, it was intimated that admiralty did not have jurisdiction over matters of internal commerce; and so in Allen v. Newberry, 21 How. (U. S.) 244. These cases, however, were decided in view admiralty has jurisdiction in cases of contracts and torts irrespective of whether the matter to which they relate arises from commerce between the states or wholly within a state, since the extent of admiralty jurisdiction does not depend upon the power of Congress to regulate commerce, as was contended at one time.¹

So a Contract of Affreightment, although for transportation between ports and places within the same state, provided it be for transportation upon navigable waters, is within the admiralty jurisdiction.²

3. Persons Subject to the Jurisdiction—General Rule.—The jurisdiction of admiralty depends upon the subject matter, and whenever a suit is of such a nature as to fall into the jurisdiction by this test, the fact that the vessel or the parties belong to a foreign nation, or that the matters complained of occurred in foreign waters, is immaterial, provided the property is within the jurisdiction, and the jurisdiction of the persons is acquired.³

Not Bound to Interfere in Controversies between Foreigners.—Courts of admiralty are not bound to take jurisdiction of controversies arising out of matters between foreigners, yet they may exercise it lawfully, and will do so in conformity with the law of nations or the lex loci contractus,⁴ unless debarred by

of the Act of 1845 as regulating commerce— which Congress could not do within the state. See Nelson v. Leland, 22 How. (U. S.) 50, where the test of admiralty jurisdiction, where a voyage was partly upon waters within the jurisdiction and partly on others, was held to be the main character of the voyage, and employment of the vessel. The mere fact that one or both ports were within or without maritime waters was not conclusive. See The Steamboat Orleans v. Phœbus, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 175; New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 6 How. (U. S.) 344; The Robert Morris, 1 Wall Jr. (C. C.) 33.

Rep. 331. So in The Gate City, 5 Biss. (U. S.) 200, it was held that a vessel plying between several points on the Mississippi river, on opposite sides, and within a distance of six miles, is amenable to the admiralty, even though her main business be that of a ferryboat between points on opposite sides of the river.

4. Discretion in Exercising Jurisdiction in Matters between Foreigners.—Flanders Maritime Law, § 281; The Golubchick, 1 Wm. Rob. 143; The Evangelistria, 2 Prob. Div. 241; The Sailor's Bride, Brown Adm. 68; The Steamship Russia, 3 Ben. (U. S.) 471; The Champion, Brown Adm. 520; The Belgenland, 114 U. S. 355; The Bark Jupiter, 1 Ben. (U. This is the Practice in the Courts of Admiralty in England and other European countries as well as in those of the United States. See The Griefswald, Swab. 430. So in the case of The Johann Frederich, 1 Wm. Rob. 36, jurisdiction was retained where a Danish ship was sunk by a Bremen ship. Dr. Lushington said: "An alien friend is entitled to sue in our courts on the same footing as a British-born subject, and if the foreigner in this case has been resident here, and the cause of action had arisen infra corpus comitatus, no objection could have been taken. * * * All questions of collision are questions communis juris, but in case of mariners' wages whoever engages voluntarily to serve on board a foreign ship necessarily undertakes to be bound by the laws of the country to which such ship belongs, and the legality of his claim must be tried by such law. One of the most important distinctions, therefore, respecting cases where both parties are foreigners is, whether the case be communis juris or not. * * * If, then, parties must wait until the vessel that has done the injury has returned to its own country, their remedy might be altogether lost, for she might never return, and if she did, there is no part of the world to which they might not be sent for their redress."

The Jurisdiction was Early Maintained in a case of claim for salvage. The Two Friends, treaty;¹ but, as a general rule, special ground should appear to induce the court to deny its aid to a foreign suitor when the controversy arises under the common law of nations, and the court has jurisdiction over the ship or the party charged.²

Supplies to Domestic Ships in Foreign Ports, and Vice Versa.—So admiralty courts have jurisdiction in rem for supplies furnished ships of their own nation in foreign ports, and foreign ships in home ports.³

Controversies between Foreign Seamen.—But courts of admiralty as a rule will not take cognizance of libels of foreign seamen against ships of their own nation.

1 C. Rob. 228. In this case an American ship was taken by the French, and afterward rescued and carried to England by her crew. Several of the ship's crew, however, were British-born subjects, and this gave some weight in determining the case. Sir William Scott said: "I can see no inconvenience that would arise if a British court of justice were to hold pleas in such cases; or, conversely, if American courts were to hold pleas of this nature respecting the merits of British seamen on such occasions. Salvage is a question of jus gentium, and materially different from the question of a mariner's contract, which is to be applied and construed and explained by its own particular rules. There might be good reason, therefore, for this court to decline to interfere in such cases, and to remit them to their own domestic forum; but this is a general claim, upon the general ground of quantum meruit, to be governed by sound discretion, acting on general principles, and I can see no reason why one country should be afraid to trust to the equity of the courts of another on such a question, of such a nature, so to be determined."

In the Case of a Bottomry Bond jurisdiction was exercised, though both parties were subjects of a foreign power. The Jerusalem, 2 Gall. (U. S.) 191; The Gratitudine, 3 C. Rob. 240; The Jacob, 4 Rob. 250.

Collisions.—A court of admiralty may take jurisdiction of a libel for a collision on the high seas, between vessels of different nationalities, and although the exercise of jurisdiction is a matter of discretion, special grounds should appear to induce its denial. The Belgenland, 114 U. S. 355.

Subject of United States in Service of Foreign Vessel.—United States statutes conferring admiralty jurisdiction do not apply to claims of bad treatment suffered by an American serving as a seaman on a Norwegian vessel. The Welhaven, 55 Fed. Rep. 80.

Extent of Remedy.—That courts of admiralty, in cases in which the parties are citizens of the same foreign country, give no further remedy than the party would have possessed in the foreign jurisdiction, see The Infanta, Abb. Adm. 263.

When under a treaty the parties thereto have the right to appoint consular agents who shall have the right to sit as judges and arbitrate in such differences as may arise between the captains and crews belonging to their respective nations, without the interference of the local authorities, if no such agents are appointed the district court is not bound thereby from assuming jurisdiction. The Amalia, 3 Fed. Rep. 652.

2. Special Grounds should Appear to Induce Court to Decline to Act.—The Belgenland, 114 U. S. 355.

A British vessel was libeled for seamen's wages at a port where there was no British consul. The nearest British consul had declined to interfere. Two of the libelants were Americans. It was held that the court had jurisdiction of the case. The Karoo, 49 Fed. Rep. 651.

Where the libellant, an American citizen, sued as assignee of a British ship for damages caused by a collision in the English Channel between the British vessel and a German steamer, and the latter refused to appear in an action instituted against him in a British court, it was held that the case presented no grounds on which the court should decline jurisdiction. Chubb v. Hamburg American Packet Co., 39 Fed. Rep. 431.

And in The Topsy, 44 Fed. Rep. 631, it was held that where a foreign subject libels a vessel belonging to a foreign nation, for wages, in a United States court, and the vessel, pending the suit, leaves the port without any certain destination, and the libellant has left the vessel, the court should not, at the request of the foreign nation, refuse to take jurisdiction.

The fact that the injury complained of, false imprisonment in a foreign jail, was proven by the official intervention of the consul on false allegation, does not distinguish it from any other wrong. Patch v. Marshall, 1 Curt. (U. S.) 452.

3. The Brig Nestor, 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 73; The Brig Napoleon, Olc. Adm. 208; Graham v. Hoskins, Olc. Adm. 224; Davis v. Leslie, Abb. Adm. 123; Bucker v. Klorkgeter, Abb. Adm. 402; Willendson v. So where a subject of Hayti shipped there for a voyage to New York, the master giving security to return him to the port at which he shipped, it was held that he could not sue in New York for his wages, no special cause for his suing or for his leaving the vessel being shown. The Pacific, Blatchf. & H. Adm. 187.

ality for wages, or of other controversies between foreign shipmasters and seamen.¹ Yet, where the voyage has been completed or abandoned, or the seamen have been wrongfully discharged, or there are circumstances showing cruelty or great hardship, the courts will seldom decline to take jurisdiction.²

Foreigners of Different Governments—No Common Forum.—And where the suit is between foreigners of different governments, who therefore have no common forum, the jurisdiction should not be declined.³

When Differences Adjusted by Consuls.—The court will refuse to take jurisdiction of a libel for injuries inflicted by the master of a foreign vessel upon a foreign seaman, where the matter has been settled through the interposition of the respective consuls.⁴

Protest of Consul.—Due consideration should be given to the wishes of a consul of the country of the parties, and his protest may be good ground for declining jurisdiction.⁵

Distribution of Proceeds of Sale of Foreign Vessel.—Where the court has seized and sold a foreign vessel under its process, it cannot refuse to distribute the proceeds according to the rights of the parties.⁶

Consideration that should Influence Court in Exercising Jurisdiction or Not.—The principle upon which the court is to determine whether to exercise jurisdiction is the consideration whether the rights of the parties would best be promoted by retaining the cause or by remitting it to a foreign tribunal.⁷

4. What Vessels are within the Jurisdiction—General Rule.—All ships or vessels are prima facie subject to the jurisdiction of the admiralty, as a rule of general international law; but ships of war belonging to a foreign friendly nation are not subject to seizure by the courts of admiralty of other countries;⁸ nor are vessels belonging to, or engaged in, the service of a city government.⁹

1. Foreign Seamen.—In The Belgenland, 114 U. S. 363, Bradley, J., in this connection said: "The cases of foreign seamen suing for wages, or because of ill treatment, are often in this category; and the consent of their consul or minister is frequently required before the court will proceed to entertain jurisdiction; not on the ground that it has not jurisdiction, but that, from motives of convenience or international comity, it will use its discretion whether to exercise jurisdiction or not; and where the voyage is ended, or the seamen have been dismissed, or treated with great cruelty, it will entertain jurisdiction even against the protest of the consul. * * * On general principles of comity, admiralty courts of other countries will not interfere between the parties in such cases unless there is special reason for doing so, and will require the foreign consul to be notified, and, though not absolutely bound by, will always pay due respect to his wishes as to taking jurisdiction."

2. Voyage Completed or Abandoned—Or Circumstances of Cruelty or Hardship.—The Pawshick, 2 Low. (U. S.) 142; The Jerusalem, 2 Gall. (U. S.) 193; The Hermine, 3 Sawy. (U. S.) 80; *Thompson v. A foreign seaman, seeking to prosecute an action for his wages in a foreign port, in the courts of the United States, should procure the official sanction of the commercial or political representative of the country to which he belongs; or, in the absence of such approval, good reasons should be shown for allowing his suit. The Infanta, Abb. 9. Vessels Engaged in Service of a Municipality.

What is a Vessel.—There are numerous decisions as to what constitutes a vessel as subject to maritime law. As a general rule, the fact that the thing in question is not propelled by oars, sails, or steam power, and is engaged only in harbors and docks, and is moved from place to place by tugs, does not prevent its being a vessel within the admiralty jurisdiction.¹

Instances.—A steam-dredge is held to be a vessel;² as is also a light-boat;³ a raft;⁴ a barge without sails or rudder;⁵ a floating elevator;⁶ a bath-house built on boats;⁷ canal-boats;⁸ and wharf-boats.⁹ A floating dry-dock permanently moored is held not to be a ship in the admiralty law;¹⁰ nor is a marine pump, although capable of floating;¹¹ nor is a floating hotel a vessel.¹²

A boat in an unfinished condition, or one wholly unfit for navigation, is not a vessel.¹³

The True Criterion by which to determine whether any water craft or vessel is subject to admiralty jurisdiction is the business or employment for which it is intended, or is susceptible of being used, or in which it is actually engaged, rather than its size, form, capacity, or means of propulsion. The General Cass, Brown Adm. 334.

"Vessel" is Defined by United States Rev. Stat., § 3, as including "every description of water craft or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation by water."

A Wreck Abandoned but Subsequently Appropriated and repaired is a vessel within the admiralty jurisdiction. The Progresso, 46 Fed. Rep. 292.

An Old Steamboat from which the boiler, wheel, engine, and machinery have been removed, and which has been changed into a pleasure barge, having no independent means of propulsion, but intended to be towed by a towboat and to be used in the transportation of excursion parties, being useless for the transportation of passengers, is a vessel within the maritime law. The City of Pittsburgh, 45 Fed. Rep. 699.

2. Dredge.—The Starbuck, 61 Fed. Rep. 502; The Floating Elevator Hezekiah Baldwin, 8 Ben. (U. S.) 556; The Alabama, 22 Fed. Rep. 449; The Pioneer, 30 Fed. Rep. 206.

In U. S. v. One Raft of Timber, 13 Fed. Rep. 796, it was held that a raft was a vessel under U. S. Rev. Stat., § 4233, and must carry lights.

A raft manned by a pilot, crew, and cook, and used as a convenient mode of bringing logs to market, was held to be a vessel so as to give admiralty jurisdiction in rem. Seabrook v. Raft of Railroad Cross-Ties, 40 Fed. Rep. 596. There are dicta to the contrary, however, as in Tome v. Four Cribs of Lumber, Taney (U. S.) 533. In this case the action was a possessory one, instituted in a court of admiralty by the owners of the lumber, to recover it from a party who was seeking to hold it for salvage services. It was held that the remedy of the owners to regain the possession was an ordinary action of replevin.

In Gastrel v. A Cypress Raft, 2 Woods (U. S.) 213, the raft was made up of timber cut from lands the title to which was in dispute. It was held that admiralty did not have jurisdiction to try the title to the logs.

5. Subject Matter of Jurisdiction.—a. MARITIME TORTS—(1) In General.—

A maritime tort is one that occurs upon the high seas or public navigable water, whether a wrongful act or omission, and the court of admiralty has jurisdiction of the suit to recover damages therefor.¹

The Test of Jurisdiction in Tort is the locality, not the nature of the act. The tort complained of must have occurred on the water to be within the admiralty jurisdiction; so where it arises upon the water, but is consummated upon the land, it is not within the jurisdiction.² Also suits for damage for injuries to Ladd 3 Sawy. (U. S.) 519; Northrup v. The Pilot, 6 Oregon 298.

1. Maritime Tort Defined.—Holmes v. Oregon, etc., R. Co., 5 Fed. Rep. 75; Mauro v. Almeida, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 486; The Sloop Martha Anne, Olc. Adm. 18; The Kirkland, 3 Hughes (U. S.) 641.

The Jurisdiction of Admiralty embraces the whole subject matter of damages on the high seas. The Volant, 1 Wm. Rob. 387.

In The Calista, Hawes, 14 Fed. Rep. 493, where a custom-house officer, engaged in keeping tally of a cargo discharged from a vessel into a lighter at the port of New York, was struck and injured by a barrel improperly hoisted by order of the mate, it was held that damages were recoverable in admiralty by libeling the vessel.

Damage by Leakage.—In Wood v. Canal Boat Wilmington, 5 Hughes (U. S.) 205, the libellant hired a barge for the storage and transportation of grain in a harbor. The master of the barge was bound by the contract to keep the barge in repair. He failed to do so, and allowed it to leak, and the grain was thereby damaged. It was held that the libellant could proceed in rem against the barge to recover such damages, he having been compelled to pay the same to the owners of the grain.

Abduction of Child.—In Plummer v. Webb, 4 Mason (U. S.) 380, it was held that a father might maintain a suit in admiralty for a tortious abduction of his minor son on a voyage on the high seas. See, to the same effect, Tillmore v. Moore, 4 Fed. Rep. 231; Steele v. Thacher, Ware (U. S.) 91.

Negligence of Employee of Charterer.—When, through the negligence of the stevedore employed by the charterer of a ship to unload her, an insufficient rope was provided, and a bale of cotton fell, striking and injuring one of the stevedore's workmen, it was held that the case was not cognizable in admiralty, nor could a state statute make it so; and that, moreover, the ship could not be liable in any event, as the negligence was that of the employee of the charterer. The Mary Stewart, 5 Hughes (U. S.) 312.

Assaults upon or Injuries by Seamen.—A proceeding in rem against the vessel does not lie, under Admiralty Rule XVI., at the instance of seamen who have been assaulted and cruelly treated by the officers. The remedy is by action in personam. Smith v. The Ship Challenger, 2 Wash. Ter. 447. But in Todd v. The Tulchen, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 550, it was held that a person who is employed to repair a vessel and is injured by it when it starts may proceed in rem to recover damages, he being then a passenger.

2. Locality of Tort the Criterion.—Johnson v. Chicago, etc., Elevator Co., 119 U. S. 388; The Commercial Transp. Co. v. Fitzhugh, 1 Black (U. S.) 579; U. S. v. Davis, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 482; Thomas v. Lane, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 9; The C. Accame, 20 Fed. Rep. 642; Steele v. Thacher, Ware (U. S.) 93; U. S. v. Magill, 1 Wash. (U. S.) 463; In re The Steam Propeller Epsilon's Petition, 6 Ben. (U. S.) 381; The Schooner Maud Webster, 8 Ben. (U. S.) 547.

In The Neil Cochran, Brown Adm. 164, which was a libel for injury to a bridge, Sherman, J., said: "From that case, supported by the clearest and most convincing reasoning, the following propositions are deducible: First. The jurisdiction of the admiralty over marine torts depends upon locality—the high seas or other navigable waters within admiralty cognizance. Second. The origin of the wrong must not only be on navigable water, but the substance and consummation of the injury must also be on navigable water. Third. The fact that an injury is done by a vessel is of no weight in determining the question of jurisdiction, locality being the test. Fourth. If the negligence which occasions the injury is upon navigable waters, but the whole damage resulting therefrom is upon the land, admiralty has no jurisdiction. Fifth. The negligence of itself furnishes no cause of action; it is damnum absque injuria; the whole or substantial cause of action, both negligence and resulting damage, must be upon navigable water to constitute a maritime tort. In the light of these propositions what shall be said of the case at bar? Clearly this: That the origin of the wrong was upon navigable water, but that the whole damage resulting therefrom was done upon the land, the bridge being attached to and a part of the land."

In The Professor Morse, 23 Fed. Rep. 803, the maritime railway claimed to have been injured was not at the time of the injury a floating structure, and therefore not within the admiralty jurisdiction.

In The Arkansas, 17 Fed. Rep. 383, the libellants owned an oil depot on the levee near the Mississippi river, and, during a flood, a steamboat in the water over what ordinarily was land negligently ran into the depot and injured it. It was held that this was not a tort of which admiralty had jurisdiction.

Injury to Boom.—A boom constructed to detain logs passing down a navigable river is a structure pertaining to the adjacent land, as much as a wharf or building erected therein, and assuming that it extends no bridges,¹ or wharves,² caused by vessels, are not cognizable by courts of admiralty. On the other hand, if the tort is consummated on the water, the fact that the negligent or otherwise tortious act originated on land does not prevent cognizance of the wrong by the court of admiralty.³

Injury to Vessel by Bridge or Draw.—Although admiralty has not jurisdiction farther out than the landowner, with due regard to navigation, might properly extend it, a wrongful injury to it is not a marine injury, and cannot be redressed in a court of admiralty. The Brig City of Erie v. Canfield, 27 Mich. 479.

The Wrongful Arrest on Shore of Deserting Seamen by the procurement of the master does not constitute a maritime tort. Bain v. Sandusky Transp. Co., 60 Fed. Rep. 912.

Injury to Person.—An injury done to one while standing on a wharf, by a bale of cotton which fell upon him from a ship's tackle alongside, cannot be redressed in admiralty. The Mary Stewart, 10 Fed. Rep. 137.

Where the libellant was engaged in repairing a vessel which lay at a wharf, and while on a ladder connecting the bulwark of the vessel with the wharf, the ladder slipped, owing to the negligence of the master, and the libellant was thrown on the wharf and injured, it was held that a court of admiralty had no jurisdiction. The H. S. Pickands, 42 Fed. Rep. 239.

In Leathers v. Blessing, 105 U. S. 626, it was held that the admiralty had jurisdiction in case of an injury received on board a vessel through the negligence of the master, although the vessel had completed her voyage and was moored at a wharf where she was about to discharge her cargo. See also Anderson v. The E. B. Ward, Jr., 38 Fed. Rep. 44.

Fire on Shore from Steamboat.—Where a vessel took fire at a wharf, from the negligence of the officers, and the fire spread and consumed certain storehouses on the wharf, it was held not to be a case of admiralty proceeding, because the injury complained of occurred on the land, and not on the water. The Plymouth, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 33.

In Ex p. Phenix Ins. Co., 118 U. S. 610, where a steamboat, in going up a navigable river, set fire to a town, and property was burned far exceeding the value of the boat and her freight, and suits were brought in the state court for damages, it was held that the admiralty court had no jurisdiction of a proceeding under the Limited Liability Act, and that if the provisions of that act could be invoked under the circumstances, they must be invoked elsewhere.

Capture on Land — Transportation.—Where a citizen of San Francisco was seized in that city by a member of a "vigilance committee," transported to the bark Yankee at sea, and carried in the bark to the Sandwich Islands, it was held that different torts were committed, by different persons, in different places, and that the tort committed by the master of the bark was within the jurisdiction of admiralty as a marine tort. Barque Yankee v. Gallagher, 1 McAll. (U. S.) 467.

1. Bridges.—Milwaukee v. The Curtis, 37 Fed. Rep. 705; The Neil Cochran, Brown Adm. 164; The John C. Sweeney, 55 Fed. Rep. 540; Boston v. Crowley, 38 Fed. Rep. 202; The Mary Stewart, 5 Hughes (U. S.) 314.

2. Wharves.—An action will not lie in admiralty against a vessel to recover damage done by her to a wharf projecting into a navigable river. The Ottawa, Brown Adm. 356; Russel v. The Brig Empire State, Newb. Adm. 541. In the former case the following language is used: "Upon a careful consideration of the question, and of the authorities bearing upon it, I must hold that a wharf is but an improvement or extension of the shore; that it is real estate, and that an injury done to it, whether through negligence or design, no matter by what agency, is an injury done wholly on land and not on the water, and, therefore, does not constitute a marine tort." This case was distinguished from that of the Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Philadelphia, etc., Steam Towboat Co., 23 How. (U. S.) 209, which was a libel in personam by the towboat company for an obstruction to navigation on navigable waters, an injury having resulted therefrom to one of the boats of the company. The obstruction was no part of a bridge or wharf, but a pile used in the construction of a bridge, which pile had been abandoned after the completion of the work.

Allegation in Libel as to Pier.—A libel to recover damages for injury to a pier by overloading it, which states that the pier is within navigable waters from the ocean and within the ebb and flow of the tide, and does not show that the pier is part of the land and is not a floating structure, is not liable to exception as failing to state a case within the jurisdiction of the admiralty. New York v. Highland, 6 Ben. (U. S.) 289.

3. When the substance of the tort is committed on the high seas, where it then has its consummation, if it be all one continued act the jurisdiction of the admiralty will attach to the whole matter, though part of it may have taken place on land, and within the body of a county. Steele v. Thacher, Ware (U. S.) 91; Plummer v. Webb, 4 Mass. 380.

In The City of Lincoln, 25 Fed. Rep. 835, a wharf loaded with steel blooms which had been discharged from the steamship gave way beneath the weight, throwing the blooms into the water. As in this case the injury was caused wholly by the water into which the blooms were thrown, it was held that if the breaking down of the wharf occurred through the wharfinger's negligence, such negligence was a marine tort of which a court of admiralty had jurisdiction. See also Vose v. Allen, 3 Blatchf. (U. S.) 289.

over an injury to a bridge by a vessel, the jurisdiction does exist over an injury done to a vessel on navigable water by a bridge or draw.¹

Not Confined to Wrongs Resulting from Direct Force.—The jurisdiction is not confined to wrongs or injuries committed by direct force, but includes wrongs suffered in consequence of the negligence or malfeasance of others, when the remedy at common law is by an action on the case.²

Claim for Personal Injuries Connected with Other Matters.—When a claim for damages for personal wrongs is connected, as an incident, with other matters properly appertaining to the cognizance of admiralty, the court will take jurisdiction of both causes of action.³

Substantial Rights—Nominal Damages.—A court of admiralty regards only substantial rights, and consequently will not entertain a suit for merely nominal damages not involving any subject matter beyond such claim.⁴

Taking Property at Sea.—The jurisdiction extends to the wrongful taking of property at sea, and the court has jurisdiction whenever and wherever such property may be found within its territorial jurisdiction.⁵

(2) Death by Wrongful Act.—The Supreme Court of the United States, after a review of the numerous conflicting decisions in the lower courts, has held that in the absence of federal or state legislation giving a right of action therefor, a suit in admiralty cannot be maintained to recover damages for death caused by wrongful act or negligence on the high seas or navigable waters, in accordance with the principle now well established, that by the common law no civil action lies for an injury which results in death.⁶

Rep. 202; Assaute v. Charleston Bridge Co., 40 Fed. Rep. 765; Hill v. Board of Chosen Freeholders, 45 Fed. Rep. 261.

The Test is the Locality of the Thing Injured, and not the thing inflicting the injury. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Philadelphia, etc., Steam Towboat Co., 23 How. (U. S.) 209; The Steamboat Ad. Hine v. Trevor, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 555; The Rock Island Bridge, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 213; Atlee v. Northwestern Union Packet Co., 21 Wall. (U. S.) 389.

No Maritime Lien.—The proceeding in such a case is in personam and not in rem, as a maritime lien can exist only upon things which are the subjects of commerce on the high seas or navigable waters, not upon anything which is fixed and immovable, as a bridge, wharf, etc. The Rock Island Bridge, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 213.

2. Leathers v. Blessing, 105 U. S. 626; Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Philadelphia, etc., Steam Towboat Co., 23 How. (U. S.) 209.

Injuries to Passengers.—Admiralty has jurisdiction of personal wrongs and torts committed on the high seas, by the master of a ship, upon passengers. It is immaterial whether such torts are committed by direct force, as trespasses, or are consequential injuries. Chamberlain v. Chandler, 3 Mason (U. S.) 242; Rucker's Case, 4 C. Rob. 60.

Negligence in Care of Seamen.—Misconduct or neglect by the officers in the treatment of a seaman after he is wounded in the service of the ship becomes a different and additional cause of action against the ship.

6. The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199; The Alaska, 130 U. S. 201.

Several Earlier Decisions were to the Contrary.—In The Sea Gull, Chase Dec. (U. S.) 145, Chase, C.J., although recognizing that at common law no redress can be had by the surviving representatives for injuries occasioned by the death of one through the wrong of another, held that such recovery could be had in admiralty. He said: "It better becomes the humane and liberal character of proceedings in admiralty to give than to withhold the remedy, when not required to withhold it by established and inflexible rules." See also The Highland Light, Chase Dec. (U. S.) 150, where reference was made to a Maryland statute conferring this right of action.

In Hollyday v. The Steamer David Reeves, 5 Hughes (U. S.) 89, Norris, J., followed these cases in the same circuit, although he recognized that the doctrine was contrary to common law and the admiralty decisions in England. See also The Manhasset, 18 Fed. Rep. 918; The Steamboat Chas. Morgan, 2 Flipp. (U. S.) 274.

The Harrisburg.—These cases were carefully considered and overruled in The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 213, Chief Justice Waite after an elaborate review of the early de-

And in England this jurisdiction is denied the courts of admiralty.¹

Where there are State Statutes.—Where, by a state statute, however, a right of action is conferred upon the personal representatives of a deceased person to recover damages for his death when caused by the wrongful act, neglect, or default of another, if the tort has occurred on any navigable waters, the courts of admiralty have jurisdiction. This is no departure from the general rule that state laws can neither extend nor restrict the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts, for such a statute merely creates a right, which is separate from the remedy to be enforced in the proper tribunal.²

Libel—Statute Creating Lien.—But although a right of action be given, no libel can be sustained unless the statute expressly creates a lien therefor;³ and indeed it has been held that state statutes creating liens in such cases are cisions, and the laws of other countries, delivering the opinion of the court as stated in the text. He said: "The argument everywhere in support of such suits in admiralty has been, not that the maritime law, as actually administered in common-law countries, is different from the common law in this particular, but that the common law is not founded on good reason, and is contrary to 'natural equity and the general principles of law.' Since, however, it is now established that in the courts of the United States no action at law can be maintained for such a wrong in the absence of a statute giving the right, and it has not been shown that the maritime law, as accepted and received by maritime nations generally, has established a different rule for the government of the courts of admiralty from those which govern courts of law in matters of this kind, we are forced to the conclusion that no such action will lie in the courts of the United States under the general maritime law. The rights of persons in this particular under the maritime law of this country are not different from those under the common law, and as it is the duty of courts to declare the law, not to make it, we cannot change this rule."

In The Alaska, 130 U. S. 201, a distinction was sought to be drawn between that case and that of The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, on the ground that in the one case the vessel was owned in Pennsylvania, while in the other the vessel was a British one. Blatchford, J., said: "In the case of The Harrisburg, the alleged negligence which resulted in the death occurred in a sound of the sea embraced between the coast of Massachusetts and the islands of Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket, parts of the state of Massachusetts. The question involved and decided in that case was, whether the admiralty courts of the United States could take cognizance of a suit to recover damages for the death of a human being on the high seas or on waters navigable from the sea, caused by negligence, in the absence of an act of Congress or a statute of a state, giving a right of action therefor. That question was answered by this court in the negative, and the decision entirely covers the present case."

In Holmes v. Oregon, etc., R. Co., 5 Fed. Rep. 75, after reviewing several of the above cases, Dedy, J., said: "The question of whether the state or national tribunals have jurisdiction does not depend upon the state or national origin of the right or title in question. If the plaintiff's citizenship is different from that of the defendant he has a right to sue in the Circuit Court of the United States, whether the right he asserts is of state or national origin. For the same reason, if a right is of admiralty jurisdiction, it is cognizable in the district courts without reference to the residence of the parties or the origin of the right. The maxim that the state cannot enlarge the jurisdiction or control the process of the national courts is admitted. But, certainly, it may increase the cases in such courts by enlarging the class of persons or things included in their jurisdiction."

In the Long Island, etc., Transp. Co.'s Petition, 5 Fed. Rep. 599, an action for injury resulting in death which happened within the limits of New York state, Choate, D. J., after referring to cases holding that a suit for damages in such cases survives, said: "But, however it may be in respect to the original jurisdiction of admiralty courts, I see no valid reason why the right of a person to whom, under the municipal law governing the place of the transaction and the parties to it, the title to the chose in action survives, or a new right to sue is given for damages resulting from a tort, the admiralty courts, in the exercise of their jurisdiction in personam over marine torts, should not recognize and enforce the right so given."

inoperative on the ground that states have no power to interfere with the admiralty system of laws;¹ yet there are cases in which such statutes have been upheld and enforced.²

b. MARITIME CONTRACTS—(1) General Principles—Subject Matter Controls.—The jurisdiction of the courts of admiralty in the case of torts is dependent upon locality. Not so, however, in the case of contracts: here it depends chiefly upon the subject matter,—the nature of the service or engagement,—and is limited to such subjects as are purely maritime, and which relate to commerce or navigation upon the high seas or navigable waters.³

To Give a Maritime Character to Services, they must be connected with the reparation or betterment of the vessel, or be rendered in aid of her navigation, directly by labor on the vessel, or in the sustenance and relief of those who conduct her operations at sea.⁴ So stipulations of a merely personal nature

In The Jerusalem, 2 Gall. (U. S.) 348, Story, J., said: "The true doctrine was always asserted by the learned judges of the admiralty, and has been recently recognized by Mr. Justice Buller; that the jurisdiction as to contracts depends not upon the locality, but upon the subject matter, of the contract."

In Thackarey v. The American Boat Farmer, Gilp. (U. S.) 534, Hopkinson, J., said: "The general result to which my inquiry into this subject has brought me is, that as to torts, injuries, and offenses, locality gives jurisdiction; but as to contracts, there must be something more. It is not enough that the service performed or to be performed is on the high sea, or on tide-water: it must in its subject matter be maritime; it must have some relation to trade and commerce; some connection with a vessel employed in trade; with her equipment, her preservation, or the preservation of her crew. Thus a carpenter, a surgeon, a steward, all contribute, in their several ways, to the preservation of a ship or her crew. But if the master should take with him a servant, whose sole business should be to shave him or comb his hair, or another to amuse him with a violin, the service would be performed on the high sea, but would it be a maritime contract or service?"

In the early cases, contracts relating to interior navigation and trade not on tide-waters were held not to be within the jurisdiction of admiralty. The Steamboat Orleans v. Phœbus, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 183. But, as we have seen, this doctrine was overruled, and "navigable waters" substituted for "tide-waters." See supra, this title, Navigable Waters.

The Weighing and Inspecting of a Cargo constitute a maritime service. The E. A. Baisley, 13 Fed. Rep. 703.

The Removal of Ballast from a foreign vessel while in port, for the purpose of putting her in condition, is a maritime service. Roberts v. The Bark Windermere, 2 Fed. Rep. 722.

But the Storage of Balls is not a service pertaining to the ship's navigation. Hubbard v. Roach, 2 Fed. Rep. 393.

Lockage.—A claim for lockage in a public navigable river is cognizable in a court of admiralty. Monongahela Nav. Co. v. The Steam Tug "Bob Connell", 1 Fed. Rep. 218.

Contract Not Maritime where Made.—A contract maritime in its nature and effect will be enforced by the United States admiralty courts, though not considered a maritime contract in the country where it was made. A maritime lien is not essential to give admiralty jurisdiction. This was held as to a steamship's failure to fulfil a contract of charter to make "all convenient speed," etc. Maury v. Culliford, 4 Woods (U. S.) 118.

Not Necessary that Breach Occur during the Voyage.—In The Pacific, 1 Blatchf. (U. S.) 569, it was held that if a contract is maritime in its nature and subject, it is not essential, in order to give jurisdiction to the admiralty in rem, that the vessel should have entered on the performance, or that the breach should have occurred in the course of the voyage.

Set-off does Not Oust the Court of its Jurisdiction.—In Dexter v. Munroe, 2 Sprague (U. S.) 39, it was held that the fact that a respondent to a suit upon a maritime contract has claims against the libellant which might properly be allowed in other courts by way of set-off, does not oust the district court of its jurisdiction, or preclude it from proceeding to investigate and decide the cause before it.

not relating to maritime service are not cognizable in admiralty.¹

Contract must, in its Essence, be Maritime.—A contract of a special nature is not cognizable in the admiralty merely because the consideration of the contract is maritime service, but the whole contract must in its essence be maritime, or for compensation for maritime service.²

Preliminary Contracts.—There is no jurisdiction in admiralty over preliminary agreements leading to maritime contracts.³ So admiralty has not jurisdiction of a contract to procure insurance,⁴ or of a suit to reform a policy of marine insurance by an antecedent contract.⁵

An Additional Agreement Not a Maritime Contract will not oust the jurisdiction of the admiralty.⁶

Contracts of Partnership in the purchase of a vessel are not maritime.⁷

Nor are Matters of Account between part owners of a vessel within the jurisdiction.⁸

But Cases of Licitation or Sale, for the purposes of partition, are within the admiralty jurisdiction.⁹

Marine Insurance.—A suit brought upon a policy of marine insurance, where the loss occurred outside of the express limit of the policy, and the complaint is based upon alleged false and fraudulent negotiations leading up to the making of the policy, is not within the admiralty jurisdiction. *Williams v. No action can be maintained in a court of admiralty, by one ship-owner against another, to collect a balance to be determined in favor of the libelant on the settlement of the joint accounts of the parties. Martin v. Walker, Abb. Adm. 579.

Where certain parties join together to carry on an adventure in trade for their mutual benefit, one contributing a vessel, and the other his skill, labor, experience, etc., and there is to be a communion of profit on a fixed ratio, it is a contract over which a court of admiralty has no jurisdiction. Ward v. Thompson, 22 How. (U. S.) 330. See also Vandewater v. Mills, 19 How. (U. S.) 82.

Master as Co-owner.—In Dexter v. Munroe, 2 Sprague (U. S.) 39, where the libelant was master and also a co-owner of a whaling vessel, it was held that after the voyage had been made up, and the amount due for his pay ascertained, and the proceeds of the voyage placed in the hands of the other owners, the libelant was entitled to recover, in admiralty, the amount due to him as master, notwithstanding his co-ownership.

So in the Aberfoyle, 1 Blatchf. (U. S.) 360, it was held that ships engaged in carrying for hire passengers on the high seas stand on the same footing of responsibility, according to the maritime law, as those engaged in carrying merchandise, the passage money being equivalent to the freight.

Incidental Stipulations.—The courts of admiralty have jurisdiction of an action for a breach of a contract, although the breach relates wholly to incidental stipulations. The Pacific, 1 Blatchf. (U. S.) 569; The Aberfoyle, 1 Blatchf. (U. S.) 360.

As to Passengers' Baggage.—In Walsh v. The Steamboat H. M. Wright, Newb. Adm. 494, it was held that courts of admiralty have jurisdiction of actions brought by passengers on vessels on navigable waters, to recover the value of lost or stolen baggage.

In the case first cited the court said: "The broad proposition is asserted that the claim in question, as set forth in the libel, does not arise out of a maritime contract, and this is the sole question to be at present determined. The case principally relied upon is that of Gurney v. Crockett, Abb. Adm. 490, in which it was held that a person employed to visit a vessel at anchor from time to time, to see to her safety, etc., was not entitled to sue in admiralty to recover compensation for his services, as they were not rendered in execution of a maritime contract, although it was conceded in that case that, if it had been the duty of the watchman to get the vessel under way, and navigate her from one anchorage to another, in the same port, he might have sued in admiralty for such services, as they are of a maritime nature. The cases of Phillips v. The Ship Thomas Scattergood, Gilp. (U. S.) 3; The Amstel, Blatchf. & H. Adm. 215; Cox v. Murray, Abb. Adm. 341; and M'Dermott v. The S. G. Owens, 1 Wall. Jr. (U. S.) 370, have also been cited, and they are of the same general character as Gurney v. Crockett, Abb. Adm. 490. With reference to all of those cases it may be said that the tests therein applied to determine whether the contracts involved were maritime, were tests that have very generally been pronounced to be inadmissible and indecisive by later decisions, in some instances, of the same courts in which those decisions were pronounced. Thus the case of Gurney v. Crockett, decided in 1849, in the southern district of New York, was overruled, in effect, in the same district, by the case of Roberts v. The Bark Windermere, decided May, 1880. Vide 2 Fed. Rep. 722. The other later cases to which reference is made as establishing a more liberal interpretation of the term 'maritime contract' are the following: New England M. Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 26; The Geo. T. Kemp, 2 Low. (U. S.) 482; The Bark Onore, 6 Ben. (U. S.) 564; The Erinagh, 7 Fed. Rep. 231; The Senator, 21 Fed. Rep. 191;

Storage of Grain in Ship.—An agreement to hold a cargo in storage during the winter, and if not discharged by the shippers upon the opening of navigation to transport it, is not a maritime contract.¹

The Claim of a Stevedore for services rendered in loading and unloading a vessel is clearly for a maritime service, essential to the purpose of the voyage and within the jurisdiction of courts of admiralty, although there are decisions to the contrary.²

(2) Building Contracts.—By the decisions of the courts in the United States, contracts for the building of vessels are not maritime, and consequently are not within the admiralty jurisdiction.³

In re The Ship Trimountain, 5 Ben. (U. S.) 250; The Hattie M. Bain, 20 Fed. Rep. 389; The Wivanhoe, 26 Fed. Rep. 927."

1. The Pulaski, 33 Fed. Rep. 383.

2. The Nature of Stevedore's Services Considered.—The Gilbert Knapp, 37 Fed. Rep. 209; The Mattie May, 45 Fed. Rep. 899; The Sloop Canton, 1 Sprague (U. S.) 437.

There are a number of cases in which it has been denied that the services of a stevedore in loading and unloading a vessel are maritime. See the following cases arranged in the order of their decree: The Amstel, Blatchf. & H. Adm. 215; The Bark Joseph Cunard, Olc. Adm. 120; Cox v. Murray, Abb. Adm. 341; The A. R. Dunlap, 1 Low. (U. S.) 361; Paul v. The Bark Ilex, 2 Woods (U. S.) 229; Hubbard v. Roach, 2 Fed. Rep. 393; The Brig E. A. Barnard, 2 Fed. Rep. 712; The Ole Oleson, 20 Fed. Rep. 384.

In The Gilbert Knapp, 37 Fed. Rep. 209, the above cases are carefully considered. Jenkins, J., said: "It may therefore fairly be said that the decisions denying the maritime nature of a stevedore's contract all rely upon the views expressed by Judge Betts in The Amstel, Blatchf. & H. (U. S.) 215. * * * 'It is but one decision of which the others are the echoes.'" And in The George T. Kemp, 2 Low. (U. S.) 477; The A. R. Dunlap, 1 Low. (U. S.) 361, is expressly overruled.

The weight of authority and the later decisions sustain the maritime nature of such service. The Williams, Brown Adm. 225; The George T. Kemp, 2 Low. (U. S.) 477; The Senator, 21 Fed. Rep. 191; Roberts v. The Bark Windermere, 2 Fed. Rep. 722; The Canada, 7 Fed. Rep. 119; The Hattie M. Bain, 20 Fed. Rep. 389; Florez v. The Scotia, 35 Fed. Rep. 916; The Wyoming, 36 Fed. Rep. 495; The Gilbert Knapp, 37 Fed. Rep. 209; The Main, 51 Fed. Rep. 954, overruling Paul v. The Bark Ilex, 2 Woods (U. S.) 229; The Mattie May, 45 Fed. Rep. 899.

In The Canada, 7 Fed. Rep. 119, in regard to such services, Deady, J., said: "A voyage cannot be begun or ended without the stowing or discharge of cargo. To receive and deliver the cargo are as much a part of the undertaking of the ship as its transportation from one port to another. Indeed, it is an essential part of such transportation. Freight is not due or earned until the cargo is, at least, placed on the wharf at the end of the ship's tackle. To say that the final delivery or discharge of the cargo is not a maritime service, because it is, or may be, performed partly on shore, is simply begging the question, as it is the nature of the service, and not the place where rendered, that determines its character in this respect."

The Supreme Court has never directly passed upon the question, but in New England M. Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 1, which held that a policy of marine insurance is a maritime contract, it was laid down as the established doctrine that the question whether a contract was maritime or not maritime depended, not on the place where the contract was made, but on the subject matter of the contract; if that was maritime, the contract was maritime. And this case has been followed in a number of the cases cited as sustaining the maritime nature of contracts for stevedores' services.

In The Wivanhoe, 26 Fed. Rep. 927, a contract of a compress company to compress the cargo of cotton and to put it on board was held to be a maritime contract.

And in The Bark Onore, 6 Ben. (U. S.) 564, it was held that the admiralty has jurisdiction of a contract made between the master of a ship and a cooper to put the cargo of the ship in landing order, the services being rendered partly on the ship and partly on the wharf, but before the delivery of the cargo.

As early as 1781 this was held. In Clinton v. The Brig Hannah, Bee Adm. 419, Hopkinson, J., said: "The practice of former times doth not justify the admiralty's taking cognizance of their suits."

In Cunningham v. Hall, 1 Cliff. (U. S.) 43, it was held that admiralty had not jurisdiction of an action against a shipbuilder, for damages sustained through defects in the construction of the vessel, discovered after she had been delivered and sent to sea.

Building Materials and Supplies.—Nor are contracts to furnish supplies therefor within the jurisdiction.¹

So it has been held that a contract for the machinery of a vessel is not enforceable in admiralty, where the machinery was supplied for the completion of the construction of the vessel, and the vessel was not completed for the purpose for which she was intended,² but if the contract is made for supplies after the vessel has been launched and received, it is held to be a maritime contract.³

Such has been the course of the decisions of the courts in the United States, notwithstanding the opinion of civilians that maritime contracts include contracts for maritime services in the building or repairing the ship.⁴

The admiralty has a general jurisdiction of suits by materialmen, in personam and in rem; but where the proceeding is in rem to enforce a specific lien, the party must establish the existence of the lien. And in case of repairs made, or necessities furnished, to a foreign ship, or to a ship in a port of the state to which she does not belong, the general maritime law, following the civil law, gives the party a lien on the ship itself for his security, and he may maintain a suit in rem in admiralty to enforce his right; but in respect to repairs and necessities in the port or state to which the ship belongs, the local law governs, and no lien is implied unless it is recognized by that law.⁵

A Contract to Repair on Land, as on ways in a shipyard, has been held to be beyond the jurisdiction of courts of admiralty.⁶

Liens Created by Local Law.—The existence of liens created by state or local laws does not create maritime liens or confer jurisdiction on the courts of admiralty.⁷

(3) Mortgages.—The mortgage of a ship, other than a bottomry agreement, is not a maritime contract, and courts of admiralty cannot take cognizance of questions between the mortgagee and the owner, as a suit to enforce such mortgage.⁸

A mortgagee cannot sustain a libel to reach the proceeds of the sale,¹ but when the court already has jurisdiction he may interfere by petition, and the court may apply the proceeds to his claim.² Admiralty does not exercise jurisdiction in matters of account merely.³

c. PETITORY AND POSSESSORY ACTIONS.—The courts of admiralty in England have made a distinction between cases where the possession only was concerned, and those in which a question of title was involved, although at present this discrimination does not exist.⁴ In the United States the distinction between these classes of cases has never been recognized, admiralty entertaining jurisdiction in cases involving not only the question of possession, but that of title also.⁵

The Ernest and Alice*, 2 Hughes (U. S.) 70; Kellum v. Emerson, 2 Curt. (U. S.) 79; The Ella J. Slaymaker, 28 Fed. Rep. 767. But see The Hilarity, Blatchf. & H. Adm. 90.

Upon Questions of Mortgage the Court of Admiralty has no jurisdiction; whether a mortgage is foreclosed, whether a mortgagee has a right to take possession of a chattel personal, whether he is the legal or only the equitable owner, and whether a right of redemption means that a mortgagee is restrained from selling in repayment of his debt till after the time specified for the redemption is passed, the decision of the question belongs to other courts; they are not within the jurisdiction or province of courts of admiralty, which never decide on questions of property between the mortgagee and owner. Sir John Nicholl in The Neptune, 3 Hagg. Adm. 129. In England at present the jurisdiction is exercised by virtue of 3 and 4 Vict., c. 65.

In Bogart v. The Steamboat John Jay, 17 How. (U. S.) 402, commenting upon the want of jurisdiction in the Admiralty Court in such cases, Wayne, J., said: "This is not so because such jurisdiction had been denied by the jealousy of the courts of the common law. Its foundation is, that the mere mortgage of a ship, other than that of an hypothecated bottomry, is a contract without any of the characteristics or attendants of a maritime loan, and is entered into by the parties to it, without reference to navigation or perils of the sea. * * * Such a mortgage has nothing in it analogous to those contracts which are the subjects of admiralty jurisdiction. In such a case the ship is the object for the accomplishment of the contract, without any reference to the use of her for such a purpose." In this case the court would neither order sale nor make a judicial transfer of the property.

In Morgan v. Tapscott, 5 Ben. (U. S.) 252, where the owners of a majority interest in a ship gave a mortgage on it to secure advances, and the mortgage becoming due, the mortgagee took possession of the interest mortgaged, and claimed to hold the ship as majority owner, and the master, who was a part owner in the vessel, with another part owner ejected the mortgagee, who thereupon filed a possessory libel against them and the vessel, to recover possession of the ship: it was held that the court had no jurisdiction of the action.

Where the lender takes an hypothecation of the vessel, with a clause stipulating that he shall not bear maritime risk, it is held that the admiralty has no jurisdiction, although the loan is such that without this stipulation it would have had jurisdiction. Maitland v. The Brig Atlantic, Newb. Adm. 514.

A Contract for a Loan made in port, to enable the borrower to buy a vessel, is not maritime. The Perseverance, Blatchf. & H. Adm. 385.

Mortgagee's Rights in Case of Collisions.—In The Grand Republic, 10 Fed. Rep. 398, it was held that the mortgagee of a vessel sunk by a collision is entitled, for the protection of his interest, to come in on petition as colliellant in a libel filed by the owners against the offending vessel.

In Furniss v. The Brig Magoun, Olc. Adm. 55, it was held that the mortgagee of a vessel can intervene in a suit by a bottomry holder against the vessel, and contest the validity of the bottomry bond, or its priority of lien, as against the mortgage.

3. Grant v. Poillon, 20 How. (U. S.) 162; Minturn v. Maynard, 17 How. (U. S.) 477; The Schooner Ocean Belle, 6 Ben. (U. S.) 253.

Account between Owners and Agents.—In Minturn v. Maynard, 17 How. (U. S.) 477, where a libel was filed in personam against the owner by their general agent or broker, for the balance of an account for money paid and expended, in paying for supplies, repairs, etc., with commissions, the libel was dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

4. In England this jurisdiction was at one time abandoned owing to jealous interference of courts of law, but by 3 and 4 Vict., c. 65, § 4, it was restored. See The Aurora, 3 Rob. Adm. 133; The Warrior, 2 Dod. 288; Radley v. Eggesfield, 2 Saund. 259a; Edmondson v. Walker, 1 Show. 172.

Equitable Title.—Admiralty, however, has no jurisdiction of such suit to enforce a merely equitable title as against the legal owners.¹

Foreigners.—As a general rule, however, courts of admiralty will not take jurisdiction of possessory suits between foreigners.²

d. PRIZE CAUSES.—In the United States there is no distinction between the instance and the prize courts of admiralty in their organization, as in England, where a special commission must issue for the prize court; ³ but at a very early period it was held that the district courts, as courts of admiralty, had jurisdiction under the constitutional grant and the judiciary act of all admiralty and maritime causes, sitting either as prize or instance courts.⁴ The courts of admiralty, as prize courts, may hold in the country of an ally, but they cannot exercise jurisdiction in neutral territory.⁵

Captures on Land and Inland Waters.—The jurisdiction of the district courts as admiralty courts in the United States does not extend to captures made on land, although made with the assistance of the naval forces.⁶ And by the act

Specific Performance.—The courts of admiralty have not jurisdiction to enforce the specific performance of an agreement relating to maritime affairs. Davis v. Child, Davies (U. S.) 71; Andrews v. Essex F., etc., Ins. Co., 3 Mason (U. S.) 6; Kynoch v. The Propeller S. C. Ives, Newb. Adm. 205.

2. Possessory Suits between Foreigners.—The Martin of Norfolk, 4 Rob. Adm. 293; The See Reuter, 1 Dod. 22. Sir William Scott, in The Johann & Seegmund, Edw. Adm. 242, said: "The court, with the consent of the parties and of the accredited agent of the country to which they belong, certainly does hold plea of causes between foreigners, arising on the jus gentium; but this, I think, is a case which cannot be so considered, because, whatever may have been the general rule under the old civil law in cases of possession, it has been variously modified by the municipal laws of different countries; and therefore by entertaining this suit I might deprive the parties of those rights to which they are entitled by the law of their own country, as administered in those courts to which they are directly and properly amenable."

In Lindo v. Rodney, 2 Doug. 613, note, Lord Mansfield said: "The end of a prize court is to suspend the property till condemnation; to punish every sort of misbehavior in the captors; to restore instantly, velis levatis (as the books express it, and as I have often heard Dr. Paul quote), if upon the most summary examination there don't appear a sufficient ground; to condemn finally, if the goods really are prize, against everybody, giving everybody a fair opportunity of being heard. A captor may, and must, force every person interested to defend, and every person interested may force him to proceed to condemn, without delay."

Prize—Derelict.—Cotton picked up at sea by a cruiser of the United States, under circumstances which showed that it had recently been abandoned either by an enemy or by a neutral engaged in breaking the blockade of an enemy's port, was held to be prize rather than derelict. Seventy-eight Bales of Cotton, 1 Low. (U. S.) 11.

Prize Courts in Foreign Countries.—The president of the United States has no authority to establish a prize court in a conquered country; and any sentence of condemnation passed by a court so established is a nullity. Jecker v. Montgomery, 13 How. (U. S.) 498.

The difference is important, as cases in admiralty are tried without a jury, while in cases at law the parties are entitled to a jury. U. S. v. The Schooner Betsey, 4 Cranch (U. S.) 443; The Sarah, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 391.

Recapture on Land.—In Davison v. Seal-skins, 2 Paine (U. S.) 324, it was held that in the case of a piratical taking the court might have jurisdiction, although the retaking was upon land; and when goods were taken by pirates and sold upon land, they might be recovered from the receiver by suit in ad-of Congress the jurisdiction is prohibited over captures on inland waters.¹

But it seems that if the capture is started where the prize goods were afloat, the fact that when captured they were stored in a warehouse on a wharf does not oust the court of its jurisdiction.²

Captures on the High Seas and in Port.—The courts of admiralty have jurisdiction of vessels captured on the high seas as well as in port, and it is not essential to this jurisdiction that the property captured should be within its actual control.³

The Prize Courts of a Belligerent may take jurisdiction of property captured by its cruisers while such property is in a foreign neutral port,⁴ and the jurisdiction exists though possession of the property be subsequently lost.⁵

Questions of Forfeiture and Penalties for violation of revenue acts and navigation laws are within the admiralty jurisdiction.⁶

miralty, on the ground that if a court of admiralty has jurisdiction of the principal thing, it has also of the incident, though that incident would not of itself be within the admiralty jurisdiction.

1. By Act of Congress July 2, 1864, c. 225 (see § 7 U. S. Stat. at L. 377), it is provided that no seizures upon the inland waters of the United States shall be decreed to be maritime prizes, but all property so seized must be turned over to the proper officer. Prior to this act jurisdiction was claimed over captures on the Mississippi river. U. S. v. 269½ Bales of Cotton, 1 Woolw. (U. S.) 236. See The Cotton Plant, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 577, which was a case of capture on the Roanoke river in North Carolina.

5. So where a Prize is Carried into a Foreign Port and there given over on security, the courts of the captor's country still have jurisdiction. The Peacock, 1 W. Rob. 185.

Duty of Captor.—Taney, C. J., said, in Jecker v. Montgomery, 13 How. (U. S.) 516: "As a general rule, it is the duty of the captor to bring the property within the jurisdiction of a prize court of the nation to which he belongs, and to institute proceedings to have it condemned. This is required by the act of Congress in cases of capture by ships of war of the United States; and this act merely enforces the performance of a duty imposed upon the captor by the law of nations, which in all civilized countries secures to the captured a trial in a court of competent jurisdiction before he can finally be deprived of his property. But there are cases where, from existing circumstances, the captor may be excused from the performance of this duty, and may sell or otherwise dispose of the property before condemnation. And where the commander of a national ship cannot, without weakening inconveniently the force under his command, spare a sufficient prize crew to man the captured vessel, or where the orders of his government prohibit him from doing so, he may lawfully sell or otherwise dispose of the captured property in a foreign country, and may afterwards proceed to adjudication in a court of the United States."

The Right of Adjudicating on All Captures and questions of prize belongs exclusively to the courts of the captor's country; but it is an exception to the general rule, that where the captured vessel is brought, or voluntarily comes, infra prasidia of a neutral power, that power has a right to inquire whether its own neutrality has been violated by the cruiser which made the capture. The Estrella, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 298.

6. Loss after Jurisdiction Acquired.—After a vessel has been seized and libeled and a forfeiture claimed, the Court of Admiralty does not lose its jurisdiction to condemn the vessel, by losing possession of it. U. S. v. The Schooner Little Charles, 1 Brock. (U. S.) 347.

Lost at Sea.—And so it has been held that the Court of Admiralty may proceed to adjudication even though the prize be lost at sea. The Susanna, 6 Rob. Adm. 48.

7. U. S. v. Schooner Sally, 2 Cranch (U. S.) 406; U. S. v. The Steamship The Queen, 11 Blatchf. (U. S.) 416.

In The Brig Alerta v. Moran, 9 Cranch (U. S.) 359, it was held that the United States District Court had jurisdiction to restore to the original Spanish owner, in amity with the United States, the property captured by a French vessel whose force had been increased in the United States.

Violation of Passenger Act.—An act forbidding the master of a vessel to carry more than a certain number of passengers, and prescribing a penalty for the violation thereof, cannot be enforced against the master of a vessel by a civil proceeding in admiralty. The Scotia, 39 Fed. Rep. 429. And under the U. S. Rev. Stat., § 4499, providing that vessels violating the law relating to the carrying of passengers "may be seized and proceeded against by way of libel," the district court can have no jurisdiction until seizure. U. S. v. The Frank Silvia, 45 Fed. Rep. 641.

7. Keane v. The Brig Gloucester, 2 Dall.

e. CRIMES.—The courts of admiralty in England have jurisdiction of all crimes and offenses committed on British vessels on the high seas and without the body of a county, the criminal jurisdiction of the common-law courts not extending beyond low-water mark.¹

And in the United States an extensive jurisdiction over crimes committed upon the high seas is conferred on the district courts, but where the punishment is capital the jurisdiction is given to the circuit courts.²

Offenses within a State.—Offenses committed on navigable waters within the jurisdiction of a state are not cognizable by the United States courts,³ but to be within the jurisdiction the crime must have been actually committed on the high seas.⁴

Jurisdiction Dependent on Statute.—This jurisdiction does not exist independently of statutory provisions, for it is a fundamental doctrine that the federal courts of inferior jurisdiction cannot take cognizance of criminal offenses without express provision of positive law, and it cannot therefore extend to cases not expressly provided for.⁵

The criminal jurisdiction of the admiralty courts was by 4 and 5 William IV., c. 36, transferred to the Central Criminal Court.

"High Seas."—In U. S. v. Wiltberger, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 94, Story, J., held that the words "high seas" in a penal act meant "any waters on the sea coast, which are without the boundaries of low-water mark; although such waters may be in a roadstead or bay within the jurisdictional limits of a foreign government." See also U. S. v. Pirates, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 184; U. S. v. Gordon, 5 Blatchf. (U. S.) 18.

Foreigners on Ships of Other Countries are subject to the criminal laws of the country in respect to offenses committed on board those ships. Reg. v. Sattler, Dears. & B. C. C. 525; Reg. v. Anderson, 1 L. R. C. C. 161; Reg. v. Lesley, Bell C. C. 220; U. S. v. Holmes, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 417.

And if the Vessel Has No National Character, but is sailing in the possession of pirates, without any foreign flag, the courts of the United States may take jurisdiction. U. S. v. Furlong, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 183.

In Foreign Ports.—In an early case it was held that the United States courts had no jurisdiction over crimes committed in a foreign port, although on an American vessel. See U. S. v. Wiltberger, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 76. But this defect in the law was remedied by the Act of Congress March 3, 1825, c. 67, § 5, which provides that if any offense shall be committed on board of any vessel belonging to a citizen of the United States, while in a foreign port, by any of the crew or passengers or other person belonging to the ship, upon any such person, the circuit court shall have jurisdiction as if the offense had occurred on the high seas, provided that if the offender shall be tried and acquitted or convicted in the foreign state he shall not be tried again.

Guano Island.—By Act of August 18, 1856, § 6, it is provided that all crimes on this island shall be deemed to have been committed on the high seas, on board a merchant ship belonging to the United States. See Jones v. U. S., 137 U. S. 202; Key v. U. S., 137 U. S. 224.

In a libel by the United States against a vessel for breach of the revenue laws, an allegation that her master attempted to land Chinese laborers at a port of the United States does not charge a crime. The Haytian Republic, 57 Fed. Rep. 508.

4. U. S. v. M'Gill, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 426. In this case the mortal blow was given on the high seas, but the death in consequence occurred on land.

5. U. S. v. Wilson, 3 Blatchf. (U. S.) 436; U. S. v. Hudson, 7 Cranch (U. S.), 32; Ex p. Bollman, 4 Cranch (U. S.) 75; U. S. v. Coolidge, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 415.

In U. S. v. Wilson, 3 Blatchf. (U. S.) 437, Betts, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The Constitution of the United States declares (art. 3, § 2) that the judicial power of the United States shall extend 'to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction'; and it is now indisputable that, by force of the constitutional provision, the civil jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, in maritime causes of contract or tort, embraces tidewaters within the bays, inlets of the sea and harbors along the sea-coast of the country, and in navigable rivers. Steamboat Thomas Jefferson, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 428; Steamboat Orleans v. Phœbus, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 175; The U. S. v. Coombs, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 72; Waring v. Clarke, 5 How. (U. S.) 441; New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 6 How. (U. S.) 344. But it is a fundamental doctrine, in respect to the federal courts of inferior jurisdiction, that they cannot take cognizance of criminal offenses of any grade, without the express appointment or direction of positive law. To enable them to exercise the functions bestowed by the Constitution over crimes and misdemeanors, there must be a designation, by positive law, both of the offense and of the tribunal which shall take cognizance of it. The U. S. v. Hudson, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 32; Ex p. Bollman, 4 Cranch (U. S.) 75; The U. S. v. Coolidge, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 415; Whart. Cr. Law, 76-80. Congress has, by the statute referred to, defined the crime of destroying a vessel. The act must be done wilfully and feloniously, by a person not an owner, and on the high seas. The place where the offense is committed becomes thus an essential element in the description of the crime. The mere fact that the accused wilfully destroyed the vessel, being upon waters within the jurisdiction of the United States, does not subject him to prosecution and punishment under this act, unless the vessel was at the time on the high seas."

ADMISSION.—See note 1.

But in U. S. v. Coolidge, 1 Gall. (U. S.) 488, Judge Story rendered a decision in the Circuit Court in favor of this jurisdiction independently of statute. He says: "The result of my opinion is: 1. That the Circuit Court has cognizance of all offenses against the United States. 2. That what those offenses are depends upon the common law applied to the sovereignty and authorities confided to the United States. 3. That the Circuit Court, having cognizance of all offenses against the United States, may punish them by fine and imprisonment, where no punishment is specially provided by statute. I have considered the point as one open to be discussed, notwithstanding the decision in United States v. Hudson & Goodwin, February term, 1812, [7 Cranch 32], which certainly is entitled to the most respectful consideration; but having been made without argument, and by a majority only of the court, I hope that it is not an improper course to bring the subject again in review for a more solemn decision, as it is not a question of mere ordinary import, but vitally affects the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States—a jurisdiction which they cannot lawfully enlarge or diminish. I shall submit, with the utmost cheerfulness, to the judgment of my brethren, and if I have hazarded a rash opinion, I have the consolation to know that their superior learning and ability will save the public from any injury by my error. That decision, however broad in its language, has not, as I conceive, settled the question now before the court, so far as it respects offenses of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. The Constitution has given to the judicial power of the United States the jurisdiction as 'to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction,' and this jurisdiction of course comprehends criminal as well as civil suits. The admiralty is a court of extensive criminal as well as civil jurisdiction, and has immemorially exercised both. At least no legal doubt of its criminal authority has ever been successfully urged.

By the law of the admiralty, offenses for which no punishment is specially prescribed are punishable by fine and imprisonment; and as offenses of admiralty jurisdiction are exclusively cognizable by the United States, it follows that all such offenses are offenses against the United States. We have adopted the law of the admiralty in all civil causes cognizable by the admiralty: must it not also be adopted in offenses cognizable by the admiralty? It will perhaps be said that express jurisdiction is given in civil cases of admiralty jurisdiction, but not in criminal cases. This is true in terms; but I contend that criminal cases are necessarily included in the grant of cognizance of all 'crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States;' for crimes and offenses within the admiralty jurisdiction are not only cognizable, but cognizable exclusively under the authority of the United States. And Congress, in punishing certain offenses upon the high seas, which are neither piracies nor felonies, have undoubtedly acted upon the conviction that such offenses were of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. Whatever room, therefore, there may be for doubt as to what common-law offenses are offenses against the United States, there can be none as to admiralty offenses."

In the Supreme Court the opinion in this case (U. S. v. Coolidge, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 415) was delivered by Johnson, J., who said: "Upon the question now before the court a difference of opinion has existed, and still exists, among the members of the court. We should, therefore, have been willing to have heard the question discussed upon solemn argument. But the attorney-general has declined to argue the cause; and no counsel appears for the defendant. Under these circumstances the court would not choose to review their former decision in the case of the United States v. Hudson & Goodwin, or draw it into doubt. They will, therefore, certify an opinion to the Circuit Court in conformity with that decision."

1. Does Not Include Revocation.—Where courts are given power "relating to the admission of guardians," this does not include power of revocation. The court said: "The powers and duties there spoken of are 'relative to the admission of guardians.' Now the term admission is of plain and certain import, and can justly by no means be made to comprehend a revocation. Moreover, these powers and duties may be exercised in the county where the minor resides, or has real or personal estate; and if, therefore, one of these powers is that of revocation, the very unsafe and inadmissible conclusion follows that the letters of guardianship may be granted in one county and the revocation take place in another." Tenbrook v. M'Colm, 10 N. J. L. 335.

I. DEFINITION AND CHARACTER.—An admission is a concession or voluntary acknowledgment made by a party, of the existence or truth of certain facts.¹

1. Bouv. L. Dict.

Admissions and Confessions Distinguished.—

"In our law the term admission is usually applied to civil transactions, and to those matters of fact in criminal cases which do not involve criminal intent; the term confession being generally restricted to acknowledgments of guilt." 1 Greenl. Ev. (14th ed.), § 170. See Howell's State Trials, 764. Also the title CONFESSIONS.

Instances of Admissions in Criminal Causes.—

At the trial of an information against an officer in the army for false muster, it is sufficient to prove that he acted in the char-

Admissions may be classified as direct,¹ incidental,² and those arising by way of implication from assumed character,³ from conduct,⁴ or from acter mentioned in the information, without proving his commission from the king. Rex v. Gardner, 2 Campb. 513.

In State v. Burton, 94 N. Car. 947, it was held that the rule that an admission may be implied from the silence of a party applies to a prosecutor.

1. Bouv. L. Dict.

Direct Admissions, called also express admissions, are those which are made in direct terms.

2. Incidental Admissions are those made in some other connection or involved in the admission of some other fact. Bouv. L. Dict.; 1 Greenl. Ev., § 194. For instances see Maltby v. Christie, 1 Esp. 342; Rankin v. Horner, 16 East 193; Marshall v. Cliff, 4 Campb. 133; Holt v. Squire, R. & M. 282, 21 E. C. L. 439; Nealley v. Greenough, 25 N. H. 325; New York Ice Co. v. Parker, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 688; Gay v. Lloyd, 1 Greene (Iowa) 78, 46 Am. Dec. 499; Cromelien v. Mauger, 17 Pa. St. 169.

Where the Assignees of a Bankrupt brought an action against an auctioneer to recover the proceeds of sales of the bankrupt's goods, it was held that the defendant's advertisement of the sale in which he described the goods as "the property of —, a bankrupt," was a conclusive admission of the fact of bankruptcy. Maltby v. Christie, 1 Esp. 342.

If an Administrator Concedes a Judgment against himself he thereby admits that he holds assets of the estate. Whart. Ev. (3d ed.), § 1113.

Payment of Money into Court.—It has been held that the payment of money into court admits every fact that the plaintiff must prove in order to recover. 1 Greenl. Ev. (14th ed.), § 205; Bacon v. Charlton, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 581; Huntington v. American Bank, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 340. See also Whart. Ev. (3d ed.), § 1114.

For further decisions on the question of payment of money into court, see infra, this title. Judicial Admissions.

An Offer by an Owner of Land to sell it at a certain price is competent evidence against him as to the value of the land. Springer v. Chicago, 135 Ill. 552.

Statements of the Liabilities of a Corporation by the treasurer, in which no mention is made of his claim for salary, are competent as admissions that the corporation was not indebted to him at the time they were made. Sears v. Kings County El. R. Co., 152 Mass. 151.

3. Admissions Implied from Assumed Character.—1 Greenl. Ev. (14th ed.), § 195; Bevan v. Williams, cited in Radford v. M'Intosh, 3 T. R. 635; Rex v. Borrett, 6 C. & P. 124, 25 E. C. Smith, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 440; Pritchard v. Walker, 3 C. & P. 212, 14 E. C. L. 274; Rex

v. Gardner, 2 Campb. 513; Whart. Ev. (3d ed.), §§ 1151, 1153.

In Berryman v. Wise, 4 T. R. 366, an action was brought by an attorney for words spoken of him in his profession. It was held that where the defendant had charged him with swindling and had threatened to have him struck off the roll of attorneys, such threat imported an admission that the plaintiff was an attorney. Compare Smith v. Taylor, 1 B. & P. N. R. 196.

In 1 Greenl. Ev. (14th ed.), § 195, it is said: "This general rule is more frequently applied against a person who has thus recognized the character or office of another, but it is conceived to embrace in its principle any representations or language in regard to himself."

4. Admissions Implied from Conduct.—Whart. Ev. (3d ed.), § 1081; 1 Greenl. Ev. (14th ed.), § 196; Lobb v. Lobb, 26 Pa. St. 327; Peele v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 3 Mason (U. S.) 82; Moore v. Dunn, 42 N. H. 471; Snell v. Bray, 56 Wis. 156; Lynn v. Thomson, 17 S. Car. 129; May v. Hewitt, 33 Ala. 161.

The Entry of a Charge against a particular person, or making a bill in his name, is evidence that credit was furnished on his account. Thomson v. Davenport, 9 B. & C. 78, 17 E. C. L. 335; Storr v. Scott, 6 C. & P. 241, 25 E. C. L. 378.

Omitting a Debt in a Schedule of Debts due an insolvent is evidence against him that it was not due. Nicholls v. Downes, 1 M. & Rob. 13; Tilghman v. Fisher, 9 Watts (Pa.) 441.

Commercial Paper.—In Wilkinson v. Lutwidge, 1 Stra. 648, it was held in an action against the acceptor of a bill that it was not necessary to prove the hand of the drawer, the acceptance being a sufficient acknowledgment of the drawer. Robinson v. Yarrow, 7 Taunt. 455. See Helmsley v. Loader, 2 Campb. 450.

In Critchlow v. Parry, 2 Campb. 182, it was held that where a person indorses a note he admits all antecedent indorsements. See generally the titles ACCOMMODATION PAPER; BILLS AND NOTES.

Acting under a Commission of Bankruptcy is evidence that it was duly issued. Like v. Howe, 6 Esp. 20.

An Attempt to Suborn Perjury is evidence that the party's cause is unjust. Moriarty v. London, etc., R. Co., L. R. 5 Q. B. 314.

Payment of Money is evidence that the receiver is the proper person to receive it, but not that the payer is the proper person to pay it. Chapman v. Beard, 3 Anstr. 942; James v. Biou, 2 Sim. & S. 600.

The Suppression of Documents is an admission that they are unfavorable to the party suppressing them. James v. Biou, 2 Sim. & S. 600; Eldridge v. Hawley, 115 Mass. 410.

Letters Written by or at the instigation of a party to an action, to third persons, warning them not to aid the other party, or to testify, or urging them to testify to a particular silence and acquiescence.¹ But in order that an admission may be inferred state of facts, are in the nature of admissions by conduct, and are admissible in evidence. Snell v. Bray, 56 Wis. 156.

B owed A on an individual account and also on a partnership account. The latter account B had refused to pay. Finally he made a payment of more than enough to pay his individual debt, and A, no objection being made, applied the balance on the partnership account. It was held to be an implied admission on B's part of a liability to pay that account. Corliss v. Grow, 58 Vt. 702.

On an issue as to whether a landlord or his tenant was to keep a platform in repair, it is evidence against the former that after an injury caused by a defect he repaired the platform. Readman v. Conway, 126 Mass. 374.

Where injuries complained of were alleged to have been caused by the insufficiency of a passageway for water, evidence that subsequently to the accident defendant enlarged said passageway is relevant as an admission that it was originally too small. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Weaver, 35 Kan. 412.

Declarations of Party Not in Interest.—The declarations of a party who is not identified in interest with another party or who is opposed in interest to him are not competent evidence against that other party, unless they are made in his presence and not contradicted by him.

Where the Party Makes a Reply Wholly or Partially.—Where the party consents to make a reply to declarations made to him, he thereby puts the matter on a much stronger ground against him than would mere silence, and both declaration and reply must be submitted in evidence. Mattocks v. Lyman, 16 Vt. 120.

If a statement is made in the hearing of another in regard to facts affecting his rights, and he makes a reply wholly or partially admitting their truth, then the declaration and reply are both admissible: the reply, because it is the act of the party, who will not be presumed to admit anything affecting his own interests or his own rights, unless compelled to it by the force of truth; and the declaration, because it may give meaning and effect to the reply. Com. v. Kenney, 12 Met. (Mass.) 237, 46 Am. Dec. 672. See also Queener v. Morrow, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 123. Compare Braley v. Braley, 16 N. H. 426. See infra, this title, Mode and Requisites of Proof.

The Possession of Documents sometimes affects parties with an implied admission of the statements contained in them. Com. v. Jeffries, 7 Allen (Mass.) 561, 83 Am. Dec. 712; Rex v. Watson, 2 Stark. 140, 3 E. C. L. 351.

If the Rules of a Club be contained in a book kept by the master of the club and accessible to the members, every member of the club must be taken to be acquainted with them. Raggett v. Musgrave, 2 C. & P. 556, 12 E. C. L. 260. See Alderson v. Clay, 1 Stark. 405, 2 E. C. L. 157.

Unanswered Letters.—But the possession of unanswered letters is not an admission of the truth of their contents. Fairlie v. Denton, 3 C. & P. 103, 14 E. C. L. 225; Richards v. Frankum, 9 C. & P. 221, 38 E. C. L. 89; Meguire v. Corwine, 3 MacArthur (D. C.) 81; Sullivan v. McMillan, 26 Fla. 543; Com. v. Eastman, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 189, 48 Am. Dec. 596; *Fearing v. 1 C. of L.—43.

Dec. 46; Gaskill v. Skene, 14 Q. B. 664, 68 E. C. L. 664.

In Fenno v. Weston, 31 Vt. 345, it was held that the failure to reply to a letter furnishes evidence of a lighter character than silence when the same facts are directly stated to the party. Aldis, J., in giving the opinion of the court in this case said: "Men use the tongue much more readily than the pen. Almost all men will reply to and deny or correct a false statement verbally made to them. It is done on the spot and from the first impulse. But when a letter is received making the same statement, the feeling, which readily prompts the verbal denial, not unfrequently cools before the time and opportunity arrive for writing a letter. Other matters intervene. A want of facility in writing, or an aversion to correspondence, or habits of dilatoriness may be the real causes of the silence. As the omission to reply to letters may be explained by so many causes not applicable to silence when the parties are in personal conversation, we do not think the same weight should be attached to it as evidence." See also Dutton v. Woodman, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 255, 57 Am. Dec. 46.

Where the Original Letter is Answered, it is made competent evidence so far as is necessary to understand the reply. Trischet v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co., 14 Gray (Mass.) 456. See Com. v. Eastman, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 189, 48 Am. Dec. 596.

And in Higgins v. Dellinger, 22 Mo. 397, it was held that if a party consents to give an explanation, it becomes evidence, although drawn from him by a false suggestion.

Where there is a Partial Reply Only.—The omission of a party to reply to statements in a letter about which he has knowledge, and which, if not true, he would naturally deny when he replies to other parts of the letter, is evidence tending to show that the statements so made and not denied are true. Fenno v. Weston, 31 Vt. 345.

Where there has been Correspondence.—So where there has been a correspondence between parties in regard to some subject matter, and one of the parties writes a letter to the other making statements in regard to such subject matter, of which the latter has knowledge and which he would naturally deny if not true, and he wholly omits to answer such letter, such silence is admissible as evidence tending to show the statements to be true. Fenno v. Weston, 31 Vt. 345.

1. Essentials of Admissions Inferable from Silence and Acquiescence.—Martin v. Capital Ins. Co., 85 Iowa 643; Com. v. Kenney, 12 Met. (Mass.) 237, 46 Am. Dec. 672; Queener v. Morrow, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 123. See also Abbot v. Third School Dist., 7 Me. 118.

Especially is this true when the person against whom the admission is used is a foreigner. In that case it should be shown that the conversation was explained to him was within his knowledge,¹ and that the circumstances were such as naturally to call for some action or reply.²

by an interpreter, so that he should be able to understand fully the statements to which he ought to have replied. Wright v. Maseras, 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 521.

Declarations made by one claiming a right of way, concerning such right, in the presence of the owner of the estate, but not heard by him by reason of deafness, are inadmissible in evidence against him. Tufts v. Charlestown, 4 Gray (Mass.) 537.

Where declarations were offered in evidence as having been made in the presence of a party who was partially intoxicated, and not contradicted by him, it was properly left to the jury to ascertain whether the party was too much intoxicated to understand the statements when made. State v. Perkins, 3 Hawks (N. Car.) 377.

Statements made by a third person standing thirty feet away from the plaintiffs are not admissible in evidence against him, where it is not shown that he could or did hear what was said. Martin v. Capital Ins. Co., 85 Iowa 643.

But in Neile v. Jakle, 2 C. & K. 709, 61 E. C. L. 709, it was held that a statement made in the plaintiff's hearing, although not in his presence, is evidence against him.

It was stated in Whitney v. Houghton, 127

Mass. 527, that the circumstances must be such that the natural and reasonable inference for silence is that the party admitted the truth of the statement.

In giving the opinion in Com. v. Kenney, 12 Met. (Mass.) 237, 46 Am. Dec. 672, Shaw, C.J., said: If a party is "restrained by fear, by doubts of his rights, by a belief that his security will be best promoted by his silence, then no inference of assent can be drawn from that silence."

Statement Made in the Course of Judicial Hearing.—If a statement is made in the course of any judicial hearing, the person against whom it is made cannot interfere and deny it when and how he pleases, though a party; it would be to charge the witness with perjury, and inconsistent alike with decorum and with the rules of law. And hence no presumption of acquiescence arises under such circumstances. Melen v. Andrews, M. & M. 336, 22 E. C. L. 329; Com. v. Kenney, 12 Met. (Mass.) 235, 46 Am. Dec. 672. Accepting Benefits—Implied Obligation to Pay.—If one accepts or knowingly avails himself of the benefit of services done for him without his authority or request, he will be considered as admitting an obligation to pay a reasonable compensation therefor. Morris v. Burdett, 1 Campb. 218; Abbot v. Third School District, 7 Me. 118.

Landlord and Tenant.—Where a landlord permits the tenant to expend money in improvements, it has been held to be evidence of his consent to such improvements. Doe v. Allen, 3 Taunt. 78; Doe v. Pye, 1 Esp. 366; Neale v. Parkin, 1 Esp. 229. See also Stanley v. White, 14 East 332.

Among Merchants, if an Account Current be Sent from one to the other, who receives it and makes no objection within a reasonable time, its correctness is admitted. *Sherman v. Attorney's Bill.—But it is said that a bill rendered by an attorney for services is not an admission of their value against the attorney. Gartner v. Beller, 54 Mich. 333.

The Entries in a Book containing a record of the proceedings of a society, produced at the meetings and open to the inspection of all the members, are admissible in evidence against a defendant after he has been proven to be a member of the society. Alderson v. Clay, 1 Stark. 405, 2 E. C. L. 157. See also Allen v. Coit, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 318.

II. TO WHOM ADMISSIONS MAY BE MADE.—Admissions may be made to the adverse party, or his agent, or to a third person.¹ But they will not be so readily implied from silence and acquiescence in the language or conduct of a stranger as in the case of a person interested.²

III. BY WHOM ADMISSIONS MAY BE MADE—1. Generally.—As a general rule, the admissions of a party to the record, or of one identified in interest with him, are, as against such parties, admissible in evidence.³ There must be evidence; it should always be received with caution, and never ought to be, unless the evidence is of direct declarations of that kind which naturally calls for contradiction; some assertion made to the man, with respect to his right, which, by his silence, he acquiesces in." See also Child v. Grace, 2 C. & P. 193, 12 E. C. L. 84.

Declarations by a Stranger.—The cases make a distinction between declarations made by a party and by a stranger, it being held that uncontradicted statements made by an interested party will be deemed admissions in many cases, where they would be refused if made by a stranger. Child v. Grace, 2 C. & P. 193, 12 E. C. L. 84; Larry v. Sherburne, 2 Allen (Mass.) 35; Hildreth v. Martin, 3 Allen (Mass.) 373; Com. v. Densmore, 12 Allen (Mass.) 538; Com. v. Kenney, 12 Met. In Larry v. Sherburne, 2 Allen (Mass.) 35, Bigelow, J., said: "There are many cases where the intervention of a third person may properly be deemed unnecessary, and his statements be regarded as immaterial and impertinent."

Thus Declarations in Disparagement of a Person's Title to property are receivable in evidence against him. Meier v. Meier, 105 Mo. 411; Ellen v. Ellen, 18 S. Car. 489; Elgin v. Beckwith, 119 Ill. 367; Knorr v. Raymond, 73 Ga. 749.

Advancements—Gifts.—On the trial of an issue as to whether some of the heirs of the decedent had received property from him as an advancement, statements of the deceased, made several years after the transaction took place, are not receivable on the ground that they are against the interest of the person making them, since, so far as the interests of the deceased were concerned, it was immaterial whether the transfer of the money and property was by way of gift or advancement. Thistlewaite v. Thistlewaite, 132 Ind. 355. See, generally, the titles ADVANCEMENTS; GIFTS.

Declarations by a Tenant for Life, in possession of the proceeds of a trust fund, by which declarations she virtually admits that her estate, in these proceeds, is limited to her own life, are against her interest; for the reason that, presumptively, a person in possession of property, apparently as owner, is such owner not for life only, but in fee. Lamar v. Pearre, 90 Ga. 377.

Ante-nuptial Agreement.—A man who owned a large estate, who had been once married, and who had six children living, entered into an ante-nuptial contract, prior to a second marriage. He was over seventy years of age, and the proposed wife was thirty-nine years of age. The contract provided that the wife should, upon his death, have absolutely one seventh of all his estate in lieu of the one third interest to which by law she would be entitled, and also that, in case the husband should survive the wife, the same interest in his estate should, upon his death, go to her heirs and personal representatives. It was held that, as it was to be presumed, from the disparity of ages, that the husband would die first, and as it would be for his interest to retain the larger control of his property allowed by the contract, a declaration by him that this had been annulled would be receivable after his death as evidence that such was the fact, being a declaration against interest. Hosford v. Rowe, 41 Minn. 245.

Declarations made by one likely to become heir of an estate, in the lifetime of the intestate, as to the condition of his property, will not, after death, be received in evidence. Morton v. Massie, 3 Mo. 482.

Marriage.—When an admission of marriage is made under circumstances that show it to be against interest, it is evidence against the party making it with the same force and effect as any other admission against interest. Greenawalt v. McEnelley, 85 Pa. St. 352; Forney v. Hallacher, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 159, 11 Am. Dec. 590.

In an action for criminal conversation the declaration of the defendant that he knew A B was married to the plaintiff, and that with full knowledge of that fact he had seduced her affections and debauched her, may be given in evidence in proof of the marriage. Forney v. Hallacher, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 159, 11 Am. Dec. 590.

Admissions of marriage by the plaintiff are competent evidence in support of a plea in abatement for the nonjoinder of her husband. Laughlin v. Eaton, 54 Me. 156.

2. Parties to the Record.—As a general rule, admissions of a party to the record are competent evidence against him.¹ At common law the admissions of a party to the record were receivable in evidence in all cases,² but this rule has been modified both in England and in this country to this extent—that where a suit is brought in the name of a merely nominal party, his admissions are not receivable to defeat an innocent beneficial party.³

E. C. L. 745; J. Obermann Brewing Co. v. Adams, 35 Ill. App. 540; Arthur v. Arthur, 38 Kan. 691.

Thus, in an action against S. it was proved that a witness went to a tavern and asked a waiter if S. was there, and on a person coming out to the witness the latter asked him who he was, and he said his name was S.; it was held that this was some proof that this person was S., and that the consultation between the witness and this person was receivable in evidence. Reynolds v. Staines, 2 C. & K. 745, 61 E. C. L. 745.

Evidence of a Conversation by Telephone between plaintiff and some one at defendant's place of business is not admissible as against the defendant, in the absence of proof as to who was the person with whom plaintiff talked. J. Obermann Brewing Co. v. Adams, 35 Ill. App. 540.

Where admissions recited by the witness and attributed by him to several persons would not be receivable as a whole unless all of them were made by one of the persons named, and the witness neither states that they were all made by him, nor specifies any which he, as distinguished from the other declarants, did make, the whole should be rejected. Smith v. Williams, 89 Ga. 9.

Thus, if, after the partnership between A and B has been dissolved, and notice has been given that all debts due the partnership shall be paid to B, A collusively gives a receipt for a debt due A and B from C, dated anterior to the dissolution of the partnership, the receipt is void, and an action may still be maintained against C for the debt in the name of A and B. Henderson v. Wild, 2 Campb. 561.

Where suit is brought in the name of the assignor, his admissions after the assignment cannot prejudice the assignee. Butler v. Millett, 47 Me. 492; Dazey v. Mills, 10 Ill. 67; Moyers v. Inman, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 80; Head v. Shaver, 9 Ala. 791.

In Welch v. Mandeville, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 233, Story, J., said: "They [courts of law] will not give effect to a release procured by the defendant under a covenous combination with the assignor in fraud of his assignee, nor permit the assignor injuriously to interfere with the conduct of any suit commenced by his assignee to enforce the rights which passed under the assignment."

Trustees.—The admissions of a trustee having no beneficial interest in the property conveyed to him cannot be given in evidence to defeat a deed of trust executed solely for the benefit of others, unless they are made by the authority of the cestui que trust. Eitelgeorge v. Mutual House Bldg. Assoc., 69 Mo. 52; Beatty v. Davis, 9 Gill (Md.) 211; Graham v. Lockhart, 8 Ala. 26; Thompson v. Drake, 32 Ala. 99; Magill v. Kauffman, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 317, 8 Am. Dec. 713; Waterman v. Wallace, 13 Blatchf. (U. S.) 128; Sargeant v. Sargeant, 18 Vt. 371. See Fargason v. Edrington, 49 Ark. 207. Compare Helm v. Steele, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 472.

In giving the opinion of the court in Graham v. Lockhart, 8 Ala. 26, Goldthwaite, J., said: "It is true that most of the American cases are upon assigned choses in action, but the principle on which they proceed is, that one having no interest in the suit ought not to be permitted to defeat or affect it by his admissions; this seems equally applicable to a trustee, who is invested with the legal title to a specific chattel solely for the benefit of others."

In Chisolm v. Newton, 1 Ala. 371, it was held that the admissions of the nominal plaintiff, made after the commencement of the suit, could not be given in evidence to defeat the action. See Sykes v. Lewis, 17 Ala. 261; Beatty v. Davis, 9 Gill (Md.) 211.

Guardian, Prochein Amy, etc.—The admissions of a guardian made before the commencement of his trust, or of a prochein amy made before the commencement of the suit, will not be admissible against the wards or infant respectively, though the name of such guardian or prochein amy appears on the record. 1 Greenl. on Ev., § 179; Webb v. Smith, R. & M. 106, 21 E. C. L. 392; Cowling v. Ely, 2 Stark. 366, 3 E. C. L. 447; Hammer v. Pierce, 5 Harr. (Del.) 304; Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v. McDonnell, 43 Md. 535; Moore v. Butler, 48 N. H. 161; Mertz v. Detweiler, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 376; Phillips v. Herndon, 78 Tex. 378, 22 Am. St. Rep. 59. See Fraser v. Marsh, 2 Stark. 41, 3 E. C. L. 308; Matthews v. Dowling, 54 Ala. 202.

3. Real Parties.—Evidence of the admissions of the real party in interest in a suit is admissible against the nominal party.¹ For example, it has been held that the admissions of the cestui que trust of a bond where action is instituted by the obligee therein, are receivable in evidence. And the same has been held in the case of the declarations² of a deputy sheriff in an action

In Westenfelder v. Green, 24 Oregon 448, it was held that where a guardian, under and by virtue of his appointment, takes possession of certain land claimed by his wards, his declarations that he holds the land for third persons are inadmissible to defeat his wards' claims of title by adverse possession.

Nor can the guardianship be proved by the declarations of an alleged guardian. Ellis v. Stone, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 157.

But it is said that where the admission is made bona fide in order to facilitate the trial, it will be received in the same way as the admission of the attorney in the cause. 2 Whart. Ev., § 1208.

Executors, Administrators, etc.—The admissions of an executor or administrator will be received against the estate only when they are made while he is clothed with his trust and is acting within the scope of his duties. Gooding v. U. S. Life Ins. Co., 46 Ill. App. 307; Prudential Ins. Co. v. Fredericks, 41 Ill. App. 419; McArthur v. Carrie, 32 Ala. 75, 70 Am. Dec. 529; Whiton v. Snyder, 88 N. Y. 299; Plant v. McEwen, 4 Conn. 544; Moore v. Butler, 48 N. H. 161; McKeown v. Harvey, 40 Mich. 226; Planters', etc., Bank v. Neel, 74 Ga. 576; Dent v. Dent, 3 Gill (Md.) 482; Mangun v. Webster, 7 Gill (Md.) 81; Mattoon v. Clapp, 8 Ohio 248; Hueston v. Hueston, 2 Ohio St. 488; Lobb v. Lobb, 26 Pa. St. 327. See Lawrence v. Wilson, 160 Mass. 304; Emerson v. Thompson, 16 Mass. 429; Atkins v. Sanger, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 192; Hill v. Buckminster, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 391; Faunce v. Gray, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 243; Wilson v. Terry, 9 Allen (Mass.) 214; Heywood v. Heywood, 10 Allen (Mass.) 105; Allen v. Allen, 26 Mo. 327; Halyburton v. Kershaw, 3 Desaus. (S. Car.) 105.

In England an exception is made in the case of admissions by a nominal party, such as releases, which are specially pleaded, instead of being given in evidence under the general issue; it being held that where such release is pleaded in bar the courts sitting in banco will grant only equitable relief on motion, and that otherwise the admission must be allowed to have its effect. Alner v. George, 1 Campb. 392; Legh v. Legh, 1 B. & P. 447; Skaife v. Jackson, 3 B. & C. 421, 10 E. C. L. 137; Payne v. Rogers, 1 Doug. 407. See also Gibson v. Winter, 5 B. & Ad. 96, 27 E. C. L. 47; Craib v. D'Aeth, cited in Bauerman v. Radenius, 7 T. R. 666 (b), note; Innell v. Newman, 4 B. & Ald. 419.

This distinction, however, is not recognized in this country, the courts holding that where a release by a nominal plaintiff is pleaded in bar, the plaintiff may plead a prior assignment of the cause of action by way of replication. Mandeville v. Welch, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 277; Andrews v. Beecker, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 411; Littlefield v. Storey,

3 Johns. (N. Y.) 425; Dawson v. Coles, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 51; Raymond v. Squire, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 47; Owing v. Low, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 134.

Admissions of Nominal Party Used against Him in Subsequent Suit.—Though the admissions of the nominal party cannot bind the parties in interest, they may be evidence against such nominal party when sued suo jure. 1 Greenl. Ev. (14th ed.), § 179; Moyers v. Inman, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 80. See Plant v. McEwen, 4 Conn. 544; Moore v. Butler, 48 N. H. 161; Eaton v. New England Tel. Co., 68 Me. 63.

1. Clark v. Carrington, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 308; Bowen v. Snell, 11 Ala. 379; McLemore v. Nuckolls, 1 Ala. Sel. Cas. 591; Power v. Savannah, etc., R. Co., 56 Ga. 471; Bayley v. Bryant, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 198; Tyler v. Ulmer, 12 Mass. 163; Richardson v. Field, 6 Me. 305; Savage v. Balch, 8 Me. 27; Bigelow v. Foss, 59 Me. 162. See also Snowball v. Goodricke, 4 B. & Ad. 541, 24 E. C. L. 112; Bowsher v. Calley, 1 Campb. 391; Underhill v. Wilson, 6 Bing. 697, 19 E. C. L. 208; North v. Miles, 1 Campb. 390. Compare Dickinson v. Clarke, 5 W. Va. 280.

In an action by a subsequently attaching creditor against the officer for applying the property attached in satisfaction of the execution of a prior attaching creditor, it was held that the admissions of the latter, who had given the officer a bond of indemnity against the consequences of such application, were receivable in evidence for the purpose of proving that the prior attachment was void, he being the real party in interest. Bayley v. Bryant, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 198. See also Dowden v. Fowle, 4 Campb. 38; Young v. Smith, 6 Esp. 121; Proctor v. Lainson, 7 C. & P. 629, 32 E. C. L. 663; Dyke v. Aldridge, cited in Bauerman v. Radenius, 7 T. R. 661.

In Rex v. Hardwick, 11 East 578, it was held that, in a suit against a parish, the admissions of the rated parishioners might be received in evidence, the parishioners being the parties really interested in the suit. See Reg. v. Adderbury East, 5 Q. B. 187, 48 E. C. L. 187.

But this doctrine seems to be repudiated in this country. Thus, in Landaff's Petition, 34 N. H. 164, it was held that the declarations of an inhabitant are not competent evidence against the town in which he resides. See Davis v. Rochester, 66 Hun (N. Y.) 629; Watertown v. Cowen, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 510.

In an action by the master of a ship for freight, the declarations of the owner, for whose benefit the action is brought, are evidence for the defendant. Smith v. Lyon, 3 Campb. 465.

2. Admissions of Cestui que Trust.—Hanson against the sheriff,¹ and of the actual beneficiary in an insurance policy taken in the name of another.²

4. Privies.—The admissions of a person in disparagement of his title, but not in contradiction of a record title,³ are competent evidence against those claiming under or through him so far as there is identity of interest.⁴

v. Parker, 1 Wils. 257. See Harrison v. Vallance, 1 Bing. 45, 8 E. C. L. 394.

But the admissions of the cestui que trust are not admissible in evidence to defeat the estate of the trustee where the latter is not the mere trustee of the former. Osgood v. Manhattan Co., 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 612, 15 Am. Dec. 304; Dillard v. Dillard, 2 Strobh. (S. Car.) 89. See also Doe v. Wainwright, 3 Nev. & P. 598.

In Com. v. Kreager, 78 Pa. St. 477, it was held that the declarations of a cestui que trust could not be received as evidence of the trust.

In Ryan v. Merriam, 4 Allen (Mass.) 77, it was held that the declarations of one who is neither a party to the record nor a witness are incompetent for the purpose of showing that he is the real party in interest in the action.

1. Admissions of Deputy Sheriff.—Snowball v. Goodricke, 4 B. & Ad. 541, 24 E. C. L. 112; Drake v. Sykes, 7 T. R. 113; Yabsley v. Doble, 1 Ld. Raym. 190; Tyler v. Ulmer, 12 Mass. 163; Savage v. Balch, 8 Me. 27.

The Admissions of a Grantor, who is still living, made while holding the land, and having title of record thereto, unless in relation to the extent and character of his possession, cannot be admitted against the grantee to defeat the title. Carpenter v. Hollister, 13 Vt. 552, 37 Am. Dec. 612. See Wood v. Willard, 36 Vt. 82, 84 Am. Dec. 659; Paine v. M'Intier, 1 Mass. 69.

Declarations by the Locator of a Mining Claim, made during the time she claimed the title, that she expected to hold the premises because the prior locator was a nonresident, are admissible against her grantees, as it is an admission by her of a prior location, which may be valid notwithstanding the prior action, such identity of interest exists between assignor and assignee where, at locator's nonresidence. Rush v. French, 1 Arizona 99.

In Tompkins v. Crane, 50 Cal. 478, it was held that the declarations must be made concerning the real estate conveyed.

Also, the Admissions of the Ancestor will be received against the heir. Doe v. Pettett, 5 B. & Ald. 223, 7 E. C. L. 75; Lewis v. Adanis, 61 Ga. 559; *McSweeney v. A deed of land, executed and acknowledged by the grantor, was delivered by him to two of the three grantees therein named, by whom it was retained for some time, without being recorded, and was then given back by them, without the knowledge or consent of the third grantee, to the grantor, by whom the same was destroyed, and the grantor subsequently died. It was held that the grantor's declaration that he had made such a deed was admissible in evidence, after his death, against his heirs or devisees. Hodges v. Hodges, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 455.

In the Same Way the Admissions of the Testator will be received against a devisee. Betts v. Jackson, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 173; Ackley v. Ackley (Supreme Ct.), 21 N. Y. Supp. 877.

On a bill filed to contest the validity of a will the declarations and admissions of a deceased devisee are admissible in evidence against another devisee who has succeeded by will or devise to the interest of the deceased devisee. Mueller v. Rebhan, 94 Ill. 142. See Wallis v. Luhring, 134 Ind. 447.

Declarations of an Intestate are also receivable against the administrator. Smith v. Smith, 3 Bing. N. Cas. 29, 32 E. C. L. 25; Keifer v. Carusi, 7 D. C. 156; *Rowland v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Admissions made by an intestate are receivable against one who claims under his administrator. Bush v. Barron, 78 Tex. 5.

The Declarations of the Husband to the effect that certain slaves in his possession were held by him as trustee for his wife, and not as his individual property, are admissible evidence against his administrator in an action against the widow to recover the slaves. Lide v. Lide, 32 Ala. 449.

The Admissions of a Former Administrator may be received against his successor. Eckert v. Triplett, 48 Ind. 174, 17 Am. Rep. 735.

In Tyres v. Kennedy, 126 Ind. 523, it was held that the declarations of a mortgagor against his title, made before execution of the mortgage, are admissible as against the mortgagee. See Harshaw v. Moore, 12 Ired. (N. Car.) 247.

Declarations of the Mortgagee under whom the defendant claims, that the mortgage was paid off, are admissible evidence on the part of the plaintiff. Walhol v. Johnson, 2 Call (Va.) 275; McClendon v. Wells, 20 S. Car. 514.

The admissions of a mortgagee as to the consideration of the mortgage are admissible in evidence against his privies by representation. Parkhurst v. Higgins, 38 Hun (N. Y.) 113. See also Merrick v. Hulbert, 15 Ill. App. 606.

For the Purpose of Showing the True Boundary Line of land, declarations of the mortgagor in possession are admissible against one claiming under a foreclosure of the mortgage. Flagg v. Mason, 141 Mass. 64.

Also, the Declarations of the Landlord may be received against the lessee. Crease v. Barrett, 1 C. M. & R. 932.

Judgment Debtor.—The rule has also been applied to the declarations of a judgment debtor against the execution purchaser. Walker v. Elledge, 65 Ala. 51; Jackson v. DuBose, 87 Ga. 761; King v. Wilkins, 11 Ind. 347; Ross v. Hayne, 3 Greene (Iowa) 211; Pickering v. Reynolds, 119 Mass. 111; Putnam v. Osgood, 52 N. H. 148; Outcalt v. Ludlow, 32 N. J. L. 239; Hayward Rubber Co. v. Somers, 26 Tex. 552; Mulholland v. Elliston, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 307, 78 Am. Dec. 495. Compare Vandyke v. Bastedo, 15 N. J. L. 224; Taylor v. Marshal, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 204.

Thus, in a replevin suit against a sheriff the admissions of an execution defendant made while in possession of the property levied on, that it belonged to the plaintiff in replevin, and was held under him by hiring, is admissible in evidence. King v. Wilkins, 11 Ind. 347. See Sweet v. Wright, 57 Iowa 510.

Vendor.—In an action to recover possession of property where both parties claim under the same person, one under an execution sale and the other by deed made prior to such sale, it is competent in order to establish the bona fides of the deed to prove declarations of the vendor made before suit was commenced and before the contract of sale, admitting an indebtedness to the grantee. McCanless v. Reynolds, 67 N. Car. 268.

The Statement of a Deceased Person made to a third party, to the effect that he had made a gift and had delivered the property to the party who claimed to be the donee, is competent evidence to prove that fact. Pritchard v. Pritchard, 69 Wis. 373.

An Acknowledgment of a Trust at any time amounts to an admission which may be given in evidence against the trustees' heirs. Williard v. Williard, 56 Pa. St. 119.

In Dubose v. Young, 14 Ala. 139, it was held that admissions of indebtedness made by a debtor in a deed of trust, to secure the the time of acquiring his title, the assignee has actual notice, or the circumcreditor, are evidence of the fact of indebtedness against one who was not at the time a creditor of the grantor.

Under the Georgia Code, § 3776, which provides that "the declarations or entries of a person since deceased, against his interest, and not made with a view to pending litigation, are admissible in evidence in any case," declarations of a deceased person, in disparagement of his title to land, made while in possession thereof, are receivable in evidence, not only against himself and those claiming under him, but also for or against strangers. McLeod v. Swain, 87 Ga. 156.

But in Carroll v. Frank, 28 Mo. App. 69, it was held that unsworn declarations by one in possession of chattels, as to the character of his holding, are not admissible against third persons who do not claim under him.

The Declarations of One of Several Owners of a water-power, in the hearing of the others, as to their relative rights, are competent evidence as against a person claiming under either. Crippen v. Morss, 49 N. Y. 63.

It was held in Grant v. Levan, 4 Pa. St. 393, that an admission by one during his tenancy, under whom one of the plaintiffs claims, affects such plaintiff only.

Recitals in Deeds.—A deed containing a recital of another deed is evidence of the recited deed against the grantor, and all persons claiming by title derived from him subsequently. Penrose v. Griffith, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 231; Cumberland Valley R. Co. v. McLanahan, 59 Pa. St. 24; Grubb v. Grubb, 74 Pa. St. 25; Allen v. Allen, 45 Pa. St. 468.

Boundaries.—It is always proper, in controversies involving lines, corners, and boundaries of land, to receive in evidence what the owner may have admitted in regard to them. Austin v. Andrews, 71 Cal. 98; Stumpf v. Osterhage, 111 Ill. 82; Daggett v. Shaw, 5 Met. (Mass.) 223; Flagg v. Mason, 141 Mass. 64; Davis v. Sherman, 7 Gray (Mass.) 201; Niles v. Patch, 13 Gray (Mass.) 254; Lemmon v. Hartsook, 80 Mo. 13; Smith v. Powers, 15 N. H. 546; Pike v. Hayes, 14 N. H. 19, 40 Am. Dec. 171; State v. Vale Mills, 63 N. H. 4; Cansler v. Fite, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 424; Roberts v. Preston, 100 N. Car. 243; Halstead v. Mullen, 93 N. Car. 252; Weidman v. Kohr, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 174; Dawson v. Mills, 32 Pa. St. 302; Gratz v. Beates, 45 Pa. St. 495; Davis v. Jones, 3 Head (Tenn.) 603. See Payne v. Crawford, 102 Ala. 387.

In Ozment v. Anglin, 60 Ga. 242, it was held in ejectment by one deriving title from one of several tenants in common, after a voluntary partition by them, that previous admissions of one of said cotenants as to the boundary were admissible.

Declarations must be against Interest.—An admission, to be receivable in evidence, must be in disparagement of declarant's title, and not in proof of it.

Statements by a party in possession of certain property, that the business was his, and was run in his father's name for protection only, were held to be inadmissible, as being something more than merely explanatory of the possession. Sweet v. Wright, 57 Iowa 510.

Declarations against Interest Not to be Contradicted by Declarations in Favor of Interest.—Evidence of a grantor's declaration in disparagement of his title, made while he was the owner of the land and upon it, introduced by a party claiming adversely to the grantee, cannot be explained or contradicted by evidence of such grantor's declarations made on other occasions in behalf of the same title, whether the last declarations were made before or after the conveyance to the grantee. Royal v. Chandler, 79 Me. 265, 1 Am. St. Rep. 305. See Pickering v. Reynolds, 119 Mass. 111; Hayden v. Stone, 121 Mass. 413; Wilson v. Woodruff, 5 Mo. 42, 31 Am. Dec. 194.

That declarations by the ancestor against his title are in evidence against his heirs, will not render admissible in their favor other declarations made by him at a different time in support of his title. Lewis v. Adams, 61 Ga. 559. See Fellows v. Smith, 130 Mass. 378.

Where property claimed by the wife was taken under execution against the husband, evidence of his statements, made before the taking, that it was the separate property of the wife, was admitted, but evidence of his contradictory statements made since the taking, offered in rebuttal, was rejected. Hackett v. Amsden, 59 Vt. 553.

Admissions of a Party in Possession Not Receivable against One Holding by a Superior Title.—The admissions of a life tenant are not evidence against the remainderman. Papenick v. Bridgewater, 5 El. & Bl. 166, 85 E. C. L. 166; Pool v. Morris, 29 Ga. 374, 74 Am. Dec. 68; Tyler v. Old Colony R. Co., 157 Mass. 336; Hill v. Roderick, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 221.

One holding as tenant or otherwise cannot by his declarations or admissions affect his landlord's title. Gordon v. Ritenour, 87 Mo. 54; Mooring v. McBride, 62 Tex. 309. See Hanley v. Erskine, 19 Ill. 265.

However, in Doe v. Litherland, 4 Ad. & El. 784, 31 E. C. L. 179, it was held that in the common-law action of ejectment the admission of the tenant in possession can be produced as against the landlord.

An admission by one during his tenancy, under whom one of the plaintiffs claims, affects such plaintiff only. Grant v. Levan, 4 Pa. St. 394.

Admissions of Children in their father's lifetime cannot be received to affect his estate. Campau v. Dubois, 39 Mich. 274. See Morton v. Massie, 3 Mo. 482.

Admissions as to Value of Property.—In an action to enjoin the operation of an elevated railroad in front of plaintiff's premises, and for damages, evidence that a former owner of the premises had placed the same with a broker for sale and fixed the price for it, was held not to be admissible on the question of value. *Mercadante v. Bennett, J., in delivering the opinion of the court in Hayward Rubber Co. v. Duncklee, 30 Vt. 29, said: "Admissions made by the assignor of a chattel or personal contract prior to the assignment, and when the assignee must recover through the title of the assignor, and succeeds only to that title as it stood at the time of the transfer, bind the assignee."

In Alger v. Andrews, 47 Vt. 238, and Downs v. Belden, 46 Vt. 674, cited above, while the parties against whom the admissions were received appear to have had no notice of prior claims, yet they were not bona fide purchasers.

Merchants', etc., Bank, 71 Miss. 361; Sally v. Gooden, 5 Ala. 78.

In Butler v. Damon, 15 Mass. 223, it was held, in an action by the indorsee of a negotiable note against the maker, that the declarations of the indorser are not admissible in evidence to defeat the action, although it appears by the admission of the plaintiff that the indorser retains an interest in the note.

Notice of Defect.—But a party who acquires title to a bill or note by indorsement, delivery, or otherwise, before due, but with express notice of any defect or incumbrance, is so far identified with the previous owner that his declarations or admissions while owner may be received against such party. Glanton v. Griggs, 5 Ga. 425.

So also where a party takes an illegal note with notice. Sharp v. Smith, 7 Rich. (S. Car.) 3.

Demand Stale or Suspicious.—Where the demand is already stale or infected with suspicion at the time it is negotiated, the admissions of the assignor are competent evidence against the assignee.

Where the payee of a note payable to himself or bearer said on the day after it bore date, he then having the note in his possession, that it was given for a gaming consideration, it was held in an action by the bearer that such declarations were competent to go to the jury to show that the note was given for such consideration. Sharp v.
 Smith, 7 Rich. (S. Car.) 3. See Snelgrove v.
 Martin, 2 McCord (S. Car.) 241.

In Parker v. Marston, 34 Me. 386, the declarations of the payee of an undorsed note were held to be receivable against a subsequent holder.

But it has been held that the Admissions of the Assignor of a Promissory Note not negotiable by the law merchant, if made before the assignment, are admissible in a suit by the assignee against the maker. Abbott v. Muir,
 5 Ind. 444. See Millsaps v. Merchants', etc.,
 Bank, 71 Miss. 361.

Also it has been held, that the Admissions of the Obligor of a Bond, while he was owner of it, that it was given for an illegal consideration, are competent evidence against his assignee.
 Murray v. Oliver, 18 Mo. 405; Brown v. Mc-Graw, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 260. See
 Brindle v. McIlvaine, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 282.
Compare Booth v. Sweeney, 8 N. Y. 276.

In an action of trespass brought against an officer for attaching goods claimed by the plaintiff under a sale from the debtor, the officer claiming to hold the goods on the ground that the sale to the plaintiff was in fraud of the rights of the creditors, the declarations and acts of the plaintiff's vendor made or done prior to the sale, and introduced to show that the sale was made with a fraudulent design, are admissible in evidence, provided there is at the same time evidence that the vendee participated in the fraud. Gallagher v. Williamson, 23 Cal. 331,

 v. Carr, 8 Mich. 44; Mahone v. Williams, 39
 Ala. 202.

Where the defense, in an action by the indorsee of a bill against the acceptor, was that the acceptance was procured by fraud and was without consideration; and in support of this defense the defendant offered in evidence the declarations of the former holder of the bill, since dead, made while it was in his hands; it was held that such declarations were admissible for that purpose, but not to affect the plaintiff, unless such holder, from whom the plaintiff received it, had knowledge of the fraud at the time he received it. Roe v. Jerome, 18 Conn. 138.

Declarations of a Bankrupt against Assignee.—
 The declarations of a bankrupt, made before the bankruptcy, are admissible as evidence against his assignee in bankruptcy. Small-

The admissions of a grantor, after he has conveyed the land, as to its boundaries, are not admissible against the grantee, though such admissions concern other land owned by the grantor at the time they are made, and bounded by the lines in dispute. Hills v. Ludwig, 46 Ohio St. 373.

In Thornton v. Gaar, 87 Va. 315, it was held that the declarations of a grantor as to the voluntary character of his bond and trust deed, made after their execution, are not competent to affect the title of the grantee; but, where there is other independent evidence to the same effect, the admission of such declarations is harmless error.

In Warren v. Carey, 145 Mass. 78, it was held that the declarations of one who has parted with his title to land are incompetent evidence, even though under the deed he is one of the cestuis que trustent.

In Padgett v. Lawrence, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 170, 40 Am. Dec. 232, it was held that the admissions of an owner of land, made subsequent to the docketing of a judgment against him, are not admissible as evidence against a purchaser under such judgment, although they were made previous to the sale by the sheriff.

In Taylor v. Central Pac. R. Co., 67 Cal. 615, it was held that a vendor's declarations were properly rejected where the time when and the circumstances under which they were made did not appear.

Statements Explanatory of Possession.—It was held in Mobile Sav. Bank v. McDonnell, 89 Ala. 435, 18 Am. St. Rep. 137, that the declarations of a person who continues in possession of land after he has sold and conveyed to another by deed duly recorded, to the effect that he is holding as agent of his grantee, are competent evidence for the latter in a contest with creditors who attack the conveyance on the ground of fraud.

Admissions of Payee of Note after Parting with His Interest.—Admissions by the payee of a note after parting with his interest are not competent evidence against the assignee.

Compare Miller v. Bingham, 29 Vt. 82.

In Whittier v. Vose, 16 Me. 403, it was held that the declarations of a payee of a negotiable note, made while he retains it in his possession, are admissible in evidence, although he may previously have written thereon his indorsement to a third person, in whose name the action is brought.

Assignment for Benefit of Creditors—Admissions of Assignor.—The admissions of the assignor made after an assignment for the benefit of creditors are not competent evidence to impeach the assignment. Myers v. Kinzie, 26 Ill. 36; Wynne v. Glidewell, 17 Ind. 446; Bartlett v. Marshall, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 470; Burt v. McKinstry, 4 Minn. 204; Glenn v. Grover, 3 Md. 212; *Heywood v. Attachment Proceedings—Admissions of Debtor.—Admissions made by a debtor after an attachment of his property are not admissible to defeat the attachment lien in favor of the plaintiff in a replevin suit claiming that the debtor purchased the goods from her by false representations of his financial condition. Tarr v. Smith, 68 Me. 97. See Renshaw v. Steamboat Pawnee, 19 Mo. 532; James v. Taylor, 93 Ga. 275.

Admission of Indebtedness as against Prior Creditor.—It has been held that an admission of indebtedness is not competent evidence as against a previous creditor. Taylor v. Huntsville Branch Bank, 14 Ala. 633; Hooper v. Edwards, 18 Ala. 280. Compare Strong v. Wheeler, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 410; Lambert v. Craig, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 199.

A Letter Written by a Distributee after Assigning his share of the estate is not admissible for any purpose in a suit to settle the estate. Strother v. Mitchell, 80 Va. 149.

Insurance Policy—Admissions of Assured after Issuance.—Declarations by the assured as to his health, made after the issuing of a policy upon his life in favor of his wife, cannot affect her rights, and are not competent evidence in an action brought by her on the policy. McGinley v. U. S. Life Ins. Co., 8 Daly (N. Y.) 390. See Mobile L. Ins. Co. v. Morris, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 101, 31 Am. Rep. 631.

Declarations of Vendor of Chattel after Sale.—In Hunter v. Jones, 6 Rand. (Va.) 541, it was held that the declarations of a vendor of a chattel, made after the sale, are good evidence against the vendee if they accord with the acknowledgments of the vendee himself previously made.

1. Effect of Concurrence of Successor in Title.—Myers v. Kinzie, 26 Ill. 36; Randegger v. Ehrhardt, 51 Ill. 101; Carpenter v. Carpenter, 8 Bush (Ky.) 283; Lark v. Linstead, 2 Md. Ch. 162; Taylor v. Webb, 54 Miss. 36; Sutter v. Lackmann, 39 Mo. 91. See Orr v. Needles, 67 Fed. Rep. 990; D'Arrigo v. Texas Produce Co. (Tex. Civ. App., 1895), 31 S. W. Rep. 713.

When the Admissions Relate to the Intentions of the assignors—the secret operations of their minds—and not to anything they said to the assignees, the fact that one of the assignees was present and heard the admissions without denying the truth will not make them binding upon the assignees or evidence against them. Peck v. Crouse, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 151.

2. Design to Defraud Creditors.—When there is other evidence of a common design to defraud creditors, the admissions of a predecessor in title are competent evidence against his grantee, assignee, etc.

In Wyckoff v. Carr, 8 Mich. 44, it was held that where an assignment for the benefit of creditors is attacked as fraudulent, it is competent for the creditors attacking it to prove the declarations of the assignor, made after the assignment was delivered, but before the schedules were made out and attached, and while the assignor was engaged in preparing them.

In Jones v. Hurlburt, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 403, it was held that evidence to show a conspiracy (independent of the assignee's declarations), in order to render those declarations admissible, must be so strong that the court would set aside a verdict against it.

The Fact that the Grantee Subsequently Assents to and joins in the fraudulent undertaking, will not render such declarations of the grantor, made prior to their confederation, competent to overthrow the deed. Boyd v. Jones, 60 Mo. 454.

Where the Vendor Remained in the Possession of property after the execution of a conveyance thereof, his statements are admitted in evidence against the vendee in an action by the creditor for fraud in the conveyance, the fact that the grantor remained in possession being a circumstance tending to establish such fraud. Oatis v. Brown, 59 Ga. 711; Williams v. Hart, 65 Ga. 201; Jones v. King, 86 Ill. 226; Tedrowe v. Esher, 56 Ind. 443; Blake v. Graves, 18 Iowa 312; Stewart v. Thomas, 35 Mo. 202; *Weinrich v. See Roeber v. Bowe, 30 Hun (N. Y.) 381.

In McCormicks v. Fuller, 56 Iowa 43, it was held that the declarations of a vendor in possession of property to which he has parted with his right are not admissible in evidence to affect the rights of his vendee, against whom no charge of fraud is made.

It was held in Tibbals v. Jacobs, 31 Conn. 428, that the principle which makes the retention of possession of personal chattels by a vendor a badge of fraud, does not apply to the retention of real estate by a grantor. See Vrooman v. King, 36 N. Y. 477.

South Carolina.—Renneker v. Warren, 17 S. Car. 139.

Texas.—Latham v. Pledger, 11 Tex. 439; Noel v. Denman, 76 Tex. 306.

In Munroe v. Stutts, 9 Ired. (N. Car.) 49, it was held that where the declarations of one alleged to be an agent are offered in evidence it is incumbent on the judge to determine at least so far as to say whether there is such prima facie evidence of agency as to render the acts and declarations of the proposed witness those of the plaintiff. See also Peck v. Ritchey, 66 Mo. 114; Pinnix v. McAdoo, 68 N. Car. 56; Grandy v. Ferebee, 68 N. Car. 356.

In Stewartson v. Watts, 8 Watts (Pa.) 392, it was held that where some evidence of the existence of the relations of principal and agent has been given, the acts and declarations of the agent respecting the subject matter of his authority are admissible in evidence. See Cole v. Bean, 1 Arizona 377. Compare Brigham v. Peters, 1 Gray (Mass.) 139.

In Small v. Williams, 87 Ga. 681, it was held that the sayings of an alleged agent dum fervet opus, whilst not evidence to prove his agency, may be looked to on the question whether he was acting as agent, there being other sufficient evidence to establish his agency.

Whether there is Sufficient Proof of Agency to warrant the admission of the acts and declarations of the agent in evidence, is a preliminary question for the court. Cliquot's Champagne, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 114.

In Chattanooga, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, 89 Ga. 708, it was held that where a railroad company has taken the benefit of a deed made to it, the sayings of the person who procured the deed in its behalf, made at the time the deed was executed, to the effect that he was acting as the agent of the company, are admissible in evidence.

Statements of Another Agent as to Agency.—Agency cannot be proved by the declaration of another agent of the same principal made to a witness, unless it appears that the latter agent was authorized by the principal to make the declaration, or that it was made as a part of the res gesta in the performance of some duty appertaining to his agency. Hirsch v. Oliver, 91 Ga. 554.

Error Cured by Subsequent Proof of Authority.—In Rowell v. Klein, 44 Ind. 291, 15 Am. Rep. 235, it was held that the general rule is that the agency must be established before the declarations of the agent are admissible; but if, after the declarations have been admitted, the agency is sufficiently proved, this cures the error. See Rhodes v. Lowry, 54 Ala. 4; Woodbury v. Larned, 5 Minn. 339; McCormick v. Roberts, 36 Kan. 552.

Admissions of Alleged Agent Incompetent to Disprove Agency of Another.—In Short Mountain Coal Co. v. Hardy, 114 Mass. 197, it was held that the declarations of an agent cannot be received on behalf of his principal to prove that a third party was not also the principal's agent.

and it is the same whether the res gesta is one that is specially authorized by the principal's instructions, or one which the agent performs in the exercise of the general discretion intrusted by his principal.¹

Special Instructions.—And even where an agent who has been limited by special instructions makes declarations within the apparent scope of his authority, such declarations will be admissible in evidence against the principal in favor of parties dealing with the agent without knowledge of such limitations.²

Admissions Not Made at Time of Transaction.—But the admissions of an agent, not made at the time of the transaction to which they relate, and not specially authorized by the principal, are not competent evidence against the latter, although the relation of principal and agent still exists.³ Nor will the near-

Under this rule, statements by railroad conductors, brakemen, etc., as to the cause of an accident, made before or after the accident, are generally excluded. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Ashcraft, 48 Ala. 15; East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Maloy, 77 Ga. 237; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Carrow, 73 Ill. 348; Robinson v. Fitchburg, etc., R. Co., 7 Gray (Mass.) 92; Furst v. Second Ave. R. Co., 72 N. Y. 542; Southerland v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 106 N. Car. 100.

In Southerland v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 106 N. Car. 100, it was held that the error in the admission of such evidence is not cured by the fact that the engineer, having been introduced as witness by the defendant, admitted on cross-examination that he made such admissions.

Thus, in an action against defendant for the death of an engineer on account of a defective track, it was held that evidence of what the section foreman of the track at the place where the accident occurred said, at a time other than that of the accident, as to the dangerous condition of the track at that point, was not admissible as part of the res gestæ. Worden v. Humeston, etc., R. Co., 72 Iowa 201.

In an action for the specific performance of a parol agreement entered into by an agent on behalf of his principal, declarations by such agent a year or two after the consummation of the agreement with respect to its terms are inadmissible against the principal. Clunie v. Sacramento Lumber Co., 67 Cal. 313.

In an action by a telephone company against a railroad company for removing the plaintiff's telephone poles, the declarations of a servant of the defendant made before the removing of the poles that he "would obey orders, if it broke owners," was admitted as showing the animus of the defendant. International, etc., R. Co. v. Telephone, etc., Co., 69 Tex. 277, 5 Am. St. Rep. 45.

It was held in Adams v. Humphreys, 54 Ga. 496, that the declarations of an agent are not competent evidence against his principal, where it does not appear when they were made.

In Dillingham v. Anthony, 73 Tex. 47, it was held that where error has been committed by admitting evidence of statements not belonging to the res gestæ, it may be cured by withdrawing it and instructing the jury not to consider it, where there is other evidence sufficient to prove the fact.

In Donnel v. Clark, 12 Kan. 154, it was held that where it clearly appears that statements not belonging to the res gestæ could not have wrought any prejudice to the rights of the plaintiff in error, the error will not compel a reversal of the judgment.

Where Special Authority to Admit is Given.—One may be specially delegated to make an admission about a past transaction. Burt v.

In Cole v. Bean, 1 Arizona 377, it was held that the declarations of an agent, made after the transaction in question, are admissible if his agency continues. See St. Louis Wire-mill Co. v. Consolidated Barb-wire Co., 46 Kan. 773.

Admissions by General Agents as to Past Transactions.—There is some diversity of opinion among the authorities as to whether a party acting in the course of a general agency can make admissions in reference to past transactions to the prejudice of his principal. The following authorities seem to support the affirmative side of this question: 2 Whart. Ev., § 1177; Kirkstall Brewery Co. v. Furness R. Co., L. R. 9 Q. B. 471; Dowdall v. The Pennsylvania R. Co., 13 Blatchf. (U. S.) 403; Buchanan v. Collins, 42 Ala. 419; Morse v. Connecticut River R. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 450; McGenness v. Adriatic Mills, 116 Mass. 177; Northrup v. Mississippi Valley Ins. Co., 47 Mo. 435, 4 Am. Rep. 337; Malecek v. Tower Grove, etc., R. Co., 57 Mo. 21; State Bank v. Wilson, 1 Dev. (N. Car.) 484; Sussex County Mut. Ins. Co. v. Woodruff, 26 N. J. L. 541; Charleston, etc., R. Co. v. Blake, 12 Rich. (S. Car.) 634; Austin v. Chittenden, 33 Vt. 553; Curtis v. Ingham, 2 Vt. 287. See Garth v. Howard, 8 Bing. 451, 21 E. C. L. 341; Barry v. Foyles, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 311; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Weaver, 35 Kan. 413; Hutchings v. St. Louis, etc., Canal, etc., Co. (Supreme Ct.), 22 N. Y. Supp. 719.

In 2 Whart. Ev., § 1177, the author says that "a party who commits the management of his whole business or of a particular line of his business to an agent, is bound by the admissions of the agent as to his entire business committed to him; nor, when the agent is a general agent, representing his principal continuously, is it necessary for the admission of such declarations that they should either have been part of the res gestæ or should have been specially authorized."

When it appeared that the superintendent and secretary of a corporation were its general agents in the transaction of its business, their declarations concerning a debt contracted previously and within the scope of their authority were held properly admissible, under an exception to the rule excluding the declarations of an agent made subsequently to the transaction to which they relate. Webb v. Smith, 6 Colo. 366.

It is proper to state, however, that in several of the cases above cited, though the statements had reference to past transactions, the ground mentioned for the decision was that the admissions were made in connection with the doing of some act within the scope of the agent's authority, and thus constituted a part of the res gestæ. See Kirkstall Brewery Co. v. Furness R. Co., L. R. 9 Q. B. 471; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Weaver, 35 Kan.

of its history, in which case they may be competent.¹

b. ATTORNEYS—Rule as to Agents Generally Applies.—An attorney is, for the purposes of the trial, the agent of his client.² Like other agents, his admissions must be made within the scope of his authority³ and during the continuance of his agency,⁴ and his agency must be established by proof aliunde.⁵

Admissions in Common Conversation.—His admissions in common conversation are not to be received in evidence against his client.⁶

Distinct and Formal Admissions.—But his distinct and formal admissions or declarations, made for the purpose of dispensing with the proof of some fact,⁷ 413; Morse v. Connecticut River R. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 450; Northrup v. Mississippi Valley Ins. Co., 47 Mo. 435, 4 Am. Rep. 337; Sussex County Mut. Ins. Co. v. Woodruff, 26 N. J. L. 541; Austin v. Chittenden, 33 Vt. 553. See also Ashmore v. Pennsylvania Steam Towing, etc., Co., 38 N. J. L. 13.

Thus, in the case of Morse v. Connecticut River R. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 450, it was held, in an action against the corporation for the loss of a trunk, that the admissions of the conductor, baggage master, or station master, as to the manner of the loss, made in answer to inquiries of the passenger, the next morning after the loss, were admissible in evidence against the corporation, for the reason, in the words of the court, that "it was part of the duty of those agents to deliver the baggage of passengers, and to account for the same if missing, provided inquiries for it were made within a reasonable time."

For Authorities Supporting the Opposite View, see Westcot v. Bradford, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 492; Haven v. Brown, 7 Me. 421; Franklin Bank v. Steward, 37 Me. 519; City Bank v. Bateman, 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 104; Smith v. North Carolina R. Co., 68 N. Car. 107; McComb v. North Carolina R. Co., 70 N. Car. 180; Williams v. Southern Bell Telephone, etc., Co., 116 N. Car. 558; Randall v. Northwestern Tel. Co., 54 Wis. 140, 41 Am. Rep. 17. See also Stewartson v. Watts, 8 Watts (Pa.) 392.

In Stenhouse v. Charlotte, etc., R. Co., 70 N. Car. 542, it was held that evidence of what an agent said in regard to a transaction already past, but while his agency for similar objects still continued, was inadmissible to prove the contract itself.

To Entitle a Remark of Counsel to the character of an admission, it must have some degree of deliberation, purpose, and recognition for that end. Adee v. Howe, 15 Hun (N. Y.) 20.

7. Admissions Made for Purpose of Dispensing with Proof.—Young v. Wright, 1 Campb. 139; Langley v. Oxford, 1 M. & W. 508; McRea v. Insurance Bank, 16 Ala. 755; Mather v. Phelps, 2 Root (Conn.) 150, 1 Am. Dec. 65; Perry v. Simpson Waterproof Mfg. Co., 40 or to modify the severity of some rule of practice,¹ are receivable.

When Receivable on Subsequent Trial.—And such admissions may be proved even on a subsequent trial of the cause, if, from the language used at the time and the surrounding circumstances, they appear not to have been limited to the former trial.² But, as a general rule, the admissions of fact by an attorney in one action are not receivable against the client in a subsequent action between him and a stranger.³

Mr. Justice Field, in giving the opinion in Oscanyan v. Arms Co., 103 U. S. 261, said: "In the trial of a cause the admissions of counsel, as to matters to be proved, are constantly received and acted upon. They may dispense with proof of facts for which witnesses would otherwise be called. They may limit the demand made or the set-off claimed. Indeed, any fact, bearing upon the issues involved, admitted by counsel, may be the ground of the court's procedure equally as if established by the clearest proof."

Criminal Cause.—In Clayton v. State, 4 Tex. App. 515, it was held that in criminal cases counsel cannot make admissions of material facts in the government's case, to dispense with proof thereof. Compare People v. Garcia, 25 Cal. 531.

Dixon, C. J., in delivering the opinion of the court in Weisbrod v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 20 Wis. 421, said: "Such admissions are frequently made for the purpose of saving time where counsel are confident of success upon some other point; and when so made they are always understood to have reference to the trial then pending, and not as stipulations which shall bind at any future trial." See also Whart. on Ev., § 1184. Compare Perry v. Simpson Waterproof Mfg. Co., 40 Conn. 313.

In Merchants' Bank v. Marine Bank, 3 Gill (Md.) 97, 43 Am. Dec. 300, it was held that an agreement of facts made and filed in a cause prior to its first trial, which after judgment was reversed upon appeal, is competent evidence upon a second trial under a procedendo.

Informal Admissions at a Former Trial are not evidence on a subsequent trial. Adee v. Howe, 15 Hun (N. Y.) 20.

Whether the Admissions are General or Intended for Former Trial Only, a Question for the Court.—In Holley v. Young, 68 Me. 215, 28 Am. Rep. 40, it was stated as a rule that an admission made at the first trial, if reduced to writing, or incorporated into a record of the case, will be binding at another trial of the case, unless the presiding judge, in the exercise of his discretion, thinks proper to relieve the party from it.

But in Central Branch Union Pac. R. Co. v. Shoup, 28 Kan. 397, 42 Am. Rep. 163, the following language was used: "But whether the consent or admission or waiver is to be considered as made for the purposes of that trial only, or as a general admission, is ordinarily a question of fact to be determined by the jury, and so in this case the court placed it. It is true that sometimes the waiver or admission may be so obviously intended for that trial alone that the court may properly so instruct the jury, and it may also be so obviously intended as a general admission that the court may instruct the jury to treat it as such—as, for instance, where the parties sign an agreed statement of facts. But perhaps more often, especially in reference to oral admissions, it is uncertain whether they were intended as general admissions, like admissions in a pleading, by which the party intends to stand at all times, or as a mere waiver of proof for the purposes of facilitating the pending trial. Then the tribunal to determine what was the import and intent of the admission is the jury before which the case is then pending for hearing."

Where an attorney in stating the case said in the presence of his client that his client would testify to certain facts, it was held that this amounted to an admission of those facts by his client which could be used against him in a suit by a third party; as the statement was an assertion of a matter of fact made by the immediate representative of the client in the course and scope of such agency, for the benefit of such client, in his presence and with his concurrence. Lord v. Bigelow, 124

The Admissions of an Attorney's Clerk in the performance of his duties will be regarded as the admissions of the attorney.¹

c. HUSBAND AND WIFE—Husband's Admissions as to Wife's Separate Estate.—The admissions of the husband respecting the wife's separate estate are not competent evidence against the wife except where he acts as her agent and within the scope of his authority.²

Wife's Admissions as Affecting Husband.—And it may be laid down as a general principle that the admissions of the wife are not binding upon the husband,³

Rep. 281, it was held that where the agency of a wife for her husband extended only to the performance of certain specific acts of a general transaction, her admissions in respect to other matters connected with the general transaction were not admissible in evidence against the husband.

The declarations of the wife in reference to the title of a slave over whom she merely exercised control as a domestic in the family were not admissible against the husband. Perry v. Graham, 18 Ala. 822.

In an action for damages from the bite of a dog, declarations of the defendant's wife are inadmissible, as evidence, against the husband, although the injury occurs in a part of the house under the particular charge of the wife. Her performance of domestic duties therein does not constitute her the agent of the husband in such a sense as to render her admissions evidence against him. Logue v. Link, 4 E. D. Smith (N. In an action to recover damages sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of the unlawful taking of her property by the defendants, proof that a witness was referred by the plaintiff to her brother as to the fact of the quantity of goods in the store was held to be admissible. Wehle v. Spelman, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 634.

Where there is No Intention to be Bound—No Agency.—But where a party claiming property alleged to have been transferred to him for the purpose of defrauding creditors was inquired of by a creditor as to his responsibility, and referred the creditor to the business men of a place where he had formerly resided to ascertain in regard to such responsibility, it was held that this reference did not authorize the statements of the business men at such place made in answer to the inquiries of the creditor to be given in evidence on behalf of the officer who subsequently attached such property at the suit of the creditors, it appearing from the whole transaction that no authority in the nature of an agency was bestowed. Rosenbury v. Angell, 6 Mich. 508.

In Meade v. M'Dowell, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 195, it was held that if the surety confides to the principal the power of making a contract, he confides to him the power of furnishing evidence of the contract, and if the contract is by parol, subsequent declarations of the party are evidence, though not conclusive.

In Irby v. Brigham, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 750, it was held that where several parties to a suit have a joint interest in the subject matter either as plaintiffs or as defendants, an admission made by one is evidence against all.

The Admission of One or Two Joint Beneficiaries under an insurance policy was admitted in evidence for the defendant in an action on the policy. Southern L. Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, 53 Ga. 535.

The admission of certain facts by the principal obligor, in which facts he and his sureties were jointly interested, is admissible evidence against them all. Parker v. State, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 292.

In Ellis v. Dempsey, 4 W. Va. 126, it was held that the declarations of one of several defendants sued as joint trespassers, made at the time and in the execution of the alleged trespass, relative to his purpose and intent, and the character in which he acted, whether upon his own responsibility or in conjunction with others and under their authority, are admissible as part of the res gestæ. See Gray v. Nations, 1 Ark. 557; Matthew v. Herdtfelder (Supreme Ct.), 15 N. Y. Supp. 165.

Must be Subsisting Interest at the Time.—Where the admissions of one person are offered in evidence against another on account of their joint interest in the subject, the joint interest must have subsisted at the time the admission was made. Blakeney v. Ferguson, 14 Ark. 641.

A statement made by a person in the presence of his associates and acquiesced in by them is admissible against them. Lathrop v. Bramhall, 3 Hun (N. Y.) 304.

In U. S. Bank v. Lyman, 20 Vt. 666, it was held that the admissions of one of several joint contractors or promissors are admissible, for some purposes, as evidence against all, when they do not extend to creating a new contract, or enlarging a pre-existing obligation or liability, but merely show that the obligation or liability has not been discharged or has been discharged in part only.

But in Wallis v. Randall, 81 N. Y. 164, it was held that one joint debtor cannot bind another by his statements or admissions unless he is the agent or in some way the representative of the other and authorized to speak for him; the mere fact of joint liability does not give the authority.

Joint Makers of Promissory Note.—The admissions of one or two or more joint makers of a promissory note are competent evidence against all. Whitcomb v. Whiting, 2 Doug. 652; Jackson v. Fairbank, 2 H. Bl. 340; Camp v. Dill, 27 Ala. 553; Bound v. Lathrop, 4 Conn. 336, 10 Am. Dec. 147; Lincoln Academy v. Newhall, 38 Me. 179; Beitz v. Fuller, 1 McCord (S. Car.) 541. Compare Bush v. Stowell, 71 Pa. St. 213, 10 Am. Rep. 694.

But in an action against one of two joint makers of a note, the execution of which is denied by the defendant, what the comaker said at the time of delivering the note to the plaintiff is not admissible. Smith v. Wagaman, 58 Iowa 11.

The Former English Rule that an admission by one obligor binds others whom he is bound to indemnify or contribute to, does not prevail in Alabama. Rapier v. Louisiana Equitable L. Ins. Co., 57 Ala. 100. See also Abel v. Forgue, 1 Root (Conn.) 502.

There is Some Diversity of Opinion as to whether the acknowledgment of a debt by one joint debtor is admissible evidence against all to take the case out of the statute of limitations. The following are the cases supporting the affirmative side of the question: Whitcomb v. Whiting, 2 Doug. 652; Jackson v. Fairbank, 2 H. Bl. 340, 20 Am. Dec. 110; Coit v. Tracy, 8 Conn. 268; Caldwell v. Sigourney, 19 Conn. 37; Bound v. Lathrop, 4 Conn. 336, 10 Am. Dec. 147; Cox v. Bailey, 9 Ga. 467, 54 Am. Dec. 358; Getchell v. Heald, 7 Me. 26; Shepley v. Waterhouse, 22 Me. 497; Lincoln Academy v. Newhall, 38 Me. 179; White v. Hale, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 291, 15 Am. Dec. 209; Johnson v. Beardslee, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 3; Beitz v. Fuller, 1 McCord (S. Car.) 541.

But compare Rogers v. Clements, 92 N. Car. 81; Bush v. Stowell, 71 Pa. St. 213, 10 Am. Rep. 694.

By Statute in several of the states, it is declared that no acknowledgment or admission made by one joint contractor shall affect the liability of the others. Rev. Stat. of Maine (1890), p. 690, § 98; Public Stat. of Massachusetts (1882), c. 197, § 17; Harding v. Butler, 156 Mass. 34; Faulkner v. Bailey, 123 Mass. 588; Rev. Laws of Vermont (1880), § 976; Bailey v. Corliss, 51 Vt. 366; Carlton v. Coffin, 27 Vt. 496; Rogers v. Anderson, 40 Mich. 290.

In Holme v. Green, 1 Stark. 488, 2 E. C. L. 187, it was held that in order for such an admission to be binding on the other contractors it must be clear and explicit.

In Wyatt v. Hodson, 8 Bing. 309, 21 E. C. L. 301, it was held that the payment of interest within six years by one of several joint contractors takes a debt out of the statute of limitations as against all. See Block v. Dorman, 51 Mo. 31. Compare Faulkner v. Bailey, 123 Mass. 588.

Also, it was held in Burleigh v. Stott, 8 B. & C. 36, 15 E. C. L. 151, that a part payment operates as a promise to pay a joint note so as to take the debt out of the statute of limitations. See also Jackson v. Fairbank, 2 H. Bl. 340; Whitcomb v. Whiting, 2 Doug. 652; Knight v. Clements, 45 Ala. 89, 6 Am. Rep. 693; Craig v. Callaway County Ct., 12 Mo. 94; *Disborough v. Quantum of Interest.—It matters not how small the interest in the subject matter may be.¹

Joint Interest—Community of Interest.—It is a joint interest, however, and not a mere community of interest, that renders the admissions of one person receivable in evidence against another.² There is no such joint interest between

In Littlefield v. Littlefield, 91 N. Y. 203, it was held that a joint maker of a note may confer authority upon another maker to make a payment which will be effectual as against a plea of the statute of limitations.

Ratification of Void Contract.—In Chamberlain v. Dow, 10 Mich. 319, it was held that where two persons together make a bargain to buy goods of the value of more than fifty dollars, which is void because not in writing, the subsequent acceptance of the goods by one, without the knowledge or assent of the other, will not amount to a ratification of the void bargain as to both.

Surviving Promisor and Executor of Copromisor.—There is no such joint interest as to make the interest of one competent evidence against the other between a surviving promisor and the executor of his copromisor. *Atkins v. Agreement to Keep Codefendant in Stock.—Proof that A agreed to keep B in stock as a blacksmith, and that A admitted that he was liable for goods got by B after a certain date, is not sufficient to establish such a joint interest between A and B as to make the admissions of the former receivable against the latter. Wonderly v. Booth, 19 Ind. 169.

Insured and Beneficiary.—In Supreme Lodge v. Schmidt, 98 Ind. 374, it was held that where one takes an insurance policy on his own life in a mutual society, payable upon his death to another or "to such other person or persons as he may subsequently direct," no subsequent admissions of his are admissible in evidence against the beneficiaries in a suit by them upon the policy. See also Rawls v. American L. Ins. Co., 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 357.

Widow Denying Legality of Her Marriage.—In an action by a widow for herself and minor children for the wrongful death of her husband, an ex parte affidavit of the widow denying the legality of her marriage with the decedent is not admissible as against all the plaintiffs. Jackson v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 46 La. Ann. 226.

The Admissions of the Father of a Girl who had brought suit against a railroad company for an injury to her were held inadmissible in evidence against her administrator afterwards prosecuting the suit, in the absence of any showing that the father was interested in the result. Taylor v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 48 N. H. 304, 2 Am. Rep. 229.

Father Suing for Injury to Minor Child—Latter's Admissions.—In an action for the loss of services of plaintiff's minor son, whose death was alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence, statements of the son as to the cause of the accident, and that he alone was in fault, were held not to be admissible against the plaintiff as admissions, as the right of action is personal to plaintiff, and deceased could not bind him by admissions against his interest; but they were held to be competent as part of the res gesta. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Berry, 2 Ind. App. 427.

Declarations of Inhabitants.—There is some diversity of opinion among the authorities as to the admissibility of the admissions of inhabitants of a territorial political division. In New Ebenezer Assoc. v. Gress Lumber Co., 89 Ga. 125, it was held that an offer by members of the committee of an association, to pay fifty cents on the dollar on a claim arising from a contract made by only one member of the committee, which contract the committee claimed to have been unauthorized, was inadmissible in evidence in an action against the association on the contract, unless made by a majority of the committee.

Where Admission is Competent against Only One of Several Codefendants.—Where, however, an admission is competent evidence against one only of several joint defendants, it will not be excluded merely because it may affect the case of his codefendants; but the latter are entitled to an instruction to the jury limiting the application of the evidence.¹

Person Need Not be Party to the Record.—The person making the admission need not be a party to the record.²

b. PARTNERS—Rule Stated.—By the very act of association each member of a partnership is constituted the agent of all.³ Hence the admissions of a partner made during the continuance of the partnership,⁴ and within the scope Silent Partner.—Thus in Weed v. Kellogg, 6 McLean (U. S.) 44, it was held that the admissions of a silent partner in the proceedings may be given in evidence. See Fickett v. Swift, 41 Me. 67, 66 Am. Dec. 214; Webster v. Stearns, 44 N. H. 502.

The Admission by One of Two Partners, of the correctness of an account stated against the partnership, is sufficient in a suit against the firm on such account, even though for want of service the suit has been dismissed as to the partner making the admission. Cady v. Kyle, 47 Mo. 347.

An Entry Made by One Partner on the Books of the Firm during the copartnership, will, after its termination, be evidence against the other partner, if he at the time knew of the entry or had an opportunity to examine the books, and did not dissent from it. Dunnell v. Henderson, 23 N. J. Eq. 174; Walden v. Sherburne, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 409.

Admissions Prior to Partnership.—In Catt v. Howard, 3 Stark. 3, 14 E. C. L. 143, it was held that a declaration of one of two partners is not evidence to charge the other with respect to a transaction with that other partner which occurred previous to the partnership, unless a joint responsibility in the subject matter be shown.

After Dissolution.—It is a general rule, that after dissolution of a partnership one of the former partners cannot by his acknowledgments or assertions impose an obligation on his late copartner.

After the Termination of the Partnership, no admission or acknowledgment by one of the partners, of the correctness of an account made before the dissolution of the partnership, is legal evidence against the other members of the firm. Conery v. Hayes, 19 La. Ann. 325.

A Partner cannot Confess Judgment against the firm after dissolution. Mair v. Beck (Pa., 1886), 2 Atl. Rep. 218.

But this Rule does Not Apply where the partner is authorized to settle the business of the firm. Burton v. Issitt, 5 B. & Ald. 267, 7 E. C. L. 91; Ide v. Ingraham, 5 Gray (Mass.) 106; Reppert v. Colvin, 48 Pa. St. 248; Hogg v. Orgill, 34 Pa. St. 344; Nichols v. White, 85 N. Y. 531.

The admissions of one partner with reference to the business of the firm, made subsequently to the date of an assignment of their assets, are admissible in evidence in a suit against all the members of the firm where they have pleaded that they are still partners as to all matters of a firm nature. Hunter v. Hubbard, 26 Tex. 537.

In Drumright v. Philpot, 16 Ga. 424, 60 Am. Dec. 738, A subscribed the name of a firm, of which he claimed to be a member, to a contract of sale; B, his copartner, afterward ratified the act by receiving the purchase money. It was held that the subsequent adoption of B being established, it was admissible to give in evidence the declarations of A as to the partnership, made when the contract was executed.

There is Authority, however, for the Rule that the admissions of one copartner, made after the dissolution of a firm, in relation to facts which took place during the existence of the copartnership, in the regular course of business of the firm, and not creating a new liability, are admissible against his associates. Wood v. Braddick, 1 Taunt. 104; Cochran v. Cunningham, 16 Ala. 448, 50 Am. Dec. 186; Parker v. Merrill, 6 Me. 41; Darling v. March, 22 Me. 184; Cady v. Shepherd, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 400, 22 Am. Allen*, 13 Ill. 596.

If a Note has been Indorsed by Partners in the name of their firm, a waiver of demand and notice, being but the modification of an existing liability, by dispensing with certain testimony which would otherwise be required, may be made by one partner, after the dissolution of the firm and before the note becomes payable. Darling v. March, 22 Me. 184.

In Cochran v. Cunningham, 16 Ala. 448, 50 Am. Dec. 186, it was held that in a suit at law by partners the admission of one of them, after the dissolution of the firm, that he has no right of action, is competent testimony in bar of the suit.

But in Gillighan v. Tebbetts, 33 Me. 360, it was held that such admissions will not be received where the partner has parted with all interest. See Hitt v. Allen, 13 Ill. 596.

Taking Debt out of Statute of Limitations.—It seems to be the better doctrine in this country, that an acknowledgment of a partnership debt and a promise to pay it, made after dissolution, will not enable the creditors to enforce it against the copartners, if it is already barred by the statute of limitations.

Acknowledgment after Dissolution, but before Statute of Limitations Takes Effect.—But there is great diversity of opinion as to whether an acknowledgment made by a partner before the action was barred by the statute of limitations, though after dissolution of partnership, is admissible against the other members of the firm.

For the Affirmative View of This Question see Espy v. Comer, 76 Ala. 501; Newman v. McComas, 43 Md. 70; Mayberry v. Willoughby, 5 Neb. 368, 25 Am. Rep. 491; Graham v. Selover, 59 Barb. (N. Y.) 315; Reppert v. Colvin, 48 Pa. St. 248.

In Kerper v. Wood, 48 Ohio St. 622, Marshall, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The fact that payments were made and that the note was given * * * within six years of the commencement of the suit and before the action was barred, can make no difference in the application of the statute, as whether payments were made or a promise given before or after the demand was barred, in either case it is a question of the authority of the one making the payment or promise to bind the other, and if the authority is not express, the other is not bound or affected thereby."

A partnership note is taken out of the of the partnership business,¹ are, in general, admissible in an action against all the partners.²

Not Admissible to Prove the Partnership.—They are not evidence to prove the partnership itself;³ but that being once admitted or proved aliunde, the admissions operation of the statute of limitations by a part payment thereof made by one partner within six years, although the firm had then been dissolved by the voluntary act of partners, if the holder of the note had previous dealings with the firm, and was not notified and had no knowledge of the dissolution. Sage v. Ensign, 2 Allen (Mass.) 245.

It has been held in Massachusetts and Vermont that the statutes in these states declaring that the promise or payment of a joint contractor cannot take a debt out of the statute of limitations against another joint contractor, do not have reference to partners, and that hence admissions made by one partner before dissolution of partnership will be as effectual against the other partners as if made by all. *Harding v. Where the business of a copartnership, as

It is held that the declarations of a party to the suit as to the existence of a partnership are unquestionably competent to prove him to have been a member of the alleged firm, and who were admitted by him to have been the persons composing it, Edwards v. Tracy, 62 Pa. St. 378; Taylor v. Henderson, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 453; Johnston v. Warden, 3 Watts (Pa.) 101; Lenhart v. Allen, 32 Pa. St. 312; Bowers v. Still, 49 Pa. St. 65; *Carr v. Not Competent against One when Made before His Connection with Enterprise.—Similarly, the introduction of such evidence must first be laid by showing prima facie the existence of the common design.¹

8. Strangers.—The admissions of strangers to the suit are competent evidence where the issue is substantially upon the rights and obligations of such persons at a particular time, and the admissions would be receivable in evidence in an action against them.²

IV. WHAT ADMISSIONS ARE RECEIVABLE.—1. Generally—Admissions Stated as Facts.—The admissions of matters stated as facts are receivable in evidence against the party making them, whether true or false, and whether based upon per-evidence of the declarations of one conspirator before the other was leagued with him is not admissible as against the latter. People v. Irwin, 77 Cal. 495; State v. Grant, 86 Iowa 216.

What a Sufficient Foundation.—In an action on the case for conspiracy, proof of a division of the profits of the fraudulent transaction is sufficient evidence of combination in the first instance to render admissible the declarations of one conspirator against the rest. Kimmell v. Geeting, 2 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 125.

In Riehl v. Evansville Foundry Assoc., 104 Ind. 74, Elliot, J., said: "It is not necessary that there should be positive evidence of a conspiracy; it is sufficient if the circumstances show that the parties had embarked in a joint undertaking to commit a wrong."

In Hart v. Hopson, 52 Mo. App. 177, it was held that proof of the existence of a conspiracy, necessary to render competent the declarations of a stranger on the ground that he was a co-conspirator of the party against whom they are offered, may be circumstantial, but it must more than raise a bare suspicion of a possible conspiracy.

In Com. v. Brown, 14 Gray (Mass.) 419, it was held that the question of the existence of such common purpose is primarily to be passed upon by the court, for the purpose of deciding on the admissibility of the evidence of the admissions, but ultimately to be decided by the jury.

When Receivable before Prima Facie Case Established.—It has been held that it is proper sometimes for the sake of convenience to admit evidence of the declarations of a conspirator before a prima facie conspiracy has been established where the prosecution promises to introduce such proof at a subsequent stage of the cause. Hall v. State, 31 Fla. 176; Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 7, 3 Am. St. Rep. 320; State v. Daubert, 42 Mo. 239; State v. Grant, 86 Iowa 216. Compare Browning v. State, 30 Miss. 656; Mawich v. Elsey, 47 Mich. 10.

In Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 195, it was held that without such assurance on the part of the prosecution the evidence will be inadmissible.

In State v. Daubert, 42 Mo. 239, it was held that while admissions of a conspirator might sometimes be introduced before a prima facie conspiracy was shown, yet this latitude of admitting the evidence out of the regular order should be allowed with great circumspection and caution.

Admissions of Law.—The admissions of a party in relation to a question of law are inadmissible in evidence.³

Admissions for Sake of Compromise.—Admissions made expressly for the purpose of effecting a compromise of a matter under controversy,⁴ and offers of money

Hypothetical Admissions.—The admissions of a party, made upon the hypothesis that information given him by another is true, are admissible in evidence against him in connection with proof of such information. Chapman v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 26 Wis. 295, 7 Am. Rep. 81.

Uncertainty of Statement.—The admission by a defendant that a part of an account presented to him is correct, without stating which part, is inadmissible in evidence for its uncertainty. Watson v. Byers, 6 Ala. 393. See also Polk v. Robertson, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 463; Glazier v. Streamer, 57 Ill. 91.

Where Matter Admitted Involves Questions of Both Law and Fact.—In Crockett v. Morrison, 11 Mo. 3, Napton, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "It is well settled that the admissions of a party in relation to a question of law are no evidence. Such admissions do not make the law either one way or the other, and where the matter admitted involves a question of law as well as fact it falls within this rule, and is therefore incompetent proof."

Misapprehension of Legal Rights.—The admissions of a party, under a misapprehension as to his legal rights, do not affect his interest. Moore v. Hitchcock, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 292; Solomon v. Solomon, 2 Ga. 18; Rowen v. King, 25 Pa. St. 409.

To Permit the Introduction of Such Offers tends to buy peace,¹ if not accepted, cannot be proved against the party making to discourage the adjustment of suits, and, for that reason, is against the public policy of the law. Jones v. Foxall, 15 Beav. 388; Home Ins. Co. v. Baltimore Warehouse Co., 93 U. S. 527.

Failure to Object to Statements Contained in Offer.—In Patrick v. Crowe, 15 Colo. 543, it was held that a written offer of compromise made by one of the defendants and rejected by the plaintiff is not rendered admissible against the latter by the fact that he read it without specifically objecting to matters therein prejudicial to his case.

Confidence.—It must appear that the admission was made in confidence of a compromise, or it will be admissible in evidence. Campau v. Dubois, 39 Mich. 274; Manistee Nat. Bank v. Seymour, 64 Mich. 59; Kahn v. Traders' Ins. Co. (Wyo., 1893), 34 Pac. Rep. 1059.

Admissions to a third person not an attorney, and not under any pledge of confidence, are competent evidence against the person making them, notwithstanding they were made with intent to promote a compromise of the demand to which they relate. Ashlock v. Linder, 50 Ill. 169. See Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 279; Moore v. Gaus, 113 Mo. 98.

Facts Stated for Opinion of Court.—In Hart's Appeal, 8 Pa. St. 32, it was held that the facts set out in a case stated for the opinion of a court are not evidence in a subsequent proceeding, nor for any other purpose than that for which they are submitted.

Offers "without Prejudice."—"Decided cases may be found where it is said that the evidence is admissible unless the offer made was stated to be without prejudice; but the rule in general, both in England and the United States, is that the offer will be presumed to have been made without prejudice if it was plainly an offer of compromise." Clifford, J., in West v. Smith, 101 U. S. 263, citing Lofts v. Hudson, 2 M. & R. 481, 17 E. C. L. 318; Phil. Ev. (5th Am. ed.) 427, note 124; 1 Greenl. Ev., § 192.

In Jones v. Foxall, 15 Beav. 388, Sir John Romilly, M.R., said: "In my opinion such letters and offers are admissible for one purpose only, namely, to show that an attempt has been made to compromise the suit, which may sometimes be necessary; as, for instance, in order to account for the lapse of time; but never for the purpose of fixing the person making them with any admissions contained in such letters." See also Hoghton v. Hoghton, 15 Beav. 278; In re River Steamer Co., L. R. 6 Ch. 822; Molyneux v. Collier, 13 Ga. 406.

Admission of Distinct Fact Made during Efforts to Compromise.—In White v. Old Dominion Steamship Co., 102 N. Y. 660, it was held that proof of the admission, by one of the parties to an action, of a distinct fact which in itself tends to make out a cause of action or defense, is not rendered inadmissible because made during negotiations relating to a compromise, unless it is expressly stated to be made without prejudice; but if the admission is of such a character as to convince the court that it would not have been made except for the purpose of the negotiations, and under an agreement, fairly to be implied from the circumstances, that it was not to be used to the prejudice of the party making it, there is no error in excluding the evidence.

Negotiations to Effect Compromise must Appear.—In order that admissions shall be excluded on the ground that they were made for the sake of a compromise, it must be clearly shown that such subsequent negotiations were had. Steege v. Walls, 4 Ind. App. 18.

A conversation between the parties to a suit, shortly before the trial, in which defendant made certain admissions, was not inadmissible as evidence because brought out by plaintiff through a proposition of settlement, when it did not appear that defendant's admissions were made with a view to a compromise, or that any terms of settlement were discussed. Akers v. Kirke 91 Ga. 590. See Robb v. Hewitt, 39 Neb. 217; Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 281.

Admissions Subsequent to Negotiation.—After a negotiation for a settlement had failed, and the parties were about separating, and continued in conversation, it was held that declarations of one party to the other were clearly admissible against the party making them. Broschart v. Tuttle, 59 Conn. 2.

To Prove that Compromise was Effected.—Evidence of an offer of compromise may be admissible to prove that a compromise was actually effected. Collier v. Nokes, 2 C. & K. 1012, 61 E. C. L. 1012; In re River Steamer Co., L. R. 6 Ch. 822; Paulin v. Howser, 63 Ill. 312.

Mississippi—Inclining against Exclusion.—In Grubbs v. Nye, 13 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 443, it was said that the courts of late, and especially in this country, have leaned against the exclusion of offers of compromise as evidence.

In Colburn v. Groton (N. H., 1890), 28 Atl. Rep. 95, it was held that whether defendant's payment of a claim was an admission of liability, or a mere purchase of peace, was a question of fact for the court.

them. But admissions of independent facts are receivable in evidence, though made during negotiations for a compromise.¹

Admissions under Duress.—Evidence of an admission is not excluded in a civil case because it was made under legal compulsion;² but the rule is otherwise if the person making it was imposed upon or under duress.³

Matters Material to the Issue.—Admissions, to be receivable in evidence, must relate to matters material to the issue.⁴

2. Parol Admissions in Pals.—Parol admissions made in pals are competent evidence of such facts as are provable by parol evidence;⁵ but they cannot be

Where the execution of the contract sued on is denied by the defendant, a letter offering to compromise the claim and making an express recognition of the contract is admissible in evidence as an admission of the execution of the contract. Scofield v. Parlin, 61 Fed. Rep. 804.

In Clapp v. Foster, 34 Vt. 580, it was held that evidence that the defendant offered to settle the plaintiff's claim if the latter would consent to a continuance of the cause for a certain period, was admissible as tending to establish his liability.

Where there is no controversy over the amount due, a proposition relating solely to the method of paying the claim due is not privileged. Hood v. Tyner, 3 Ind. App. 51; Kahn v. Traders' Ins. Co. (Wyo., 1893), 34 Pac. Rep. 1059.

Dec. 79; Simmons v. Haas, 56 Md. 153; Knapp v. Hanford, 6 Conn. 170.

In Nichols v. Allen, 112 Mass. 23, it was held that the admission by a defendant who denies his signature to a note in suit, that he made a note somewhat of the purport declared on, is of itself, when made in answer to an interrogatory filed by the plaintiff, sufficient evidence for the consideration of the jury.

Evidence of the declarations of a testator that he did not intend to claim anything upon a certain bond, is receivable to show that he ordered its destruction, where direct evidence of such an order has been offered. Albert v. Ziegler, 29 Pa. St. 50.

Where a witness testified that after the purchase of certain property by B and A, he heard them talking about some outstanding liabilities, and heard B speak to A about two five hundred dollar notes on which he said he had paid some, and that A must pay some, and the witness did not know what notes were referred to, or hear A say anything, it was held that there being no evidence of any other transaction to which the conversation could have related, prima facie it must be taken as evidence of notice to A of the plaintiff's lien on B's note of five hundred dollars. Moore v. Raymond, 15 Tex. 554.

admitted to contradict documentary proof,¹ or as a substitute for existing evidence by matter of record.²

3. Documentary Admissions.—The admissions of a party may be contained in a written instrument,³ in which case they are receivable against him, though

The existence of an outstanding equitable title to land, in a third person, may be proved by a party's parol admission. Lewis v. Harris, 31 Ala. 689.

The creditor authorized his debtor to make payment to B, and afterwards said, "If B will acknowledge payment to him, I will admit it." It was held that proof of the oral acknowledgment of B was admissible, after his death, to show payment. Click v. Hamilton, 7 Rich. (S. Car.) 65.

Such evidence is generally inadmissible where evidence of a higher nature is obtainable. Mason v. Park, 4 Ill. 532.

Admissions by Telephone.—Conversations through a telephone, when pertinent, are competent evidence. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Heidenheimer, 82 Tex. 195; Wolfe v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 97 Mo. 473, 10 Am. St. Rep. 331; Stapp v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 349; People v. Ward, 3 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 483.

In Wolfe v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 97 Mo. 473, 10 Am. St. Rep. 331, it was held that the fact that the voice at the telephone was not identified did not render the conversation inadmissible.

But the better doctrine seems to be that the person with whom the conversation is held should be identified. J. Obermann Brewing Co. v. Adams, 35 Ill. App. 540; People v. Ward, 3 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 483; Stapp v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 349.

But the contents of a writing may be proved by parol evidence. Slatterie v. Pooley, 6 M. & W. 664; Newhall v. Holt, 6 M. & W. 662; Earle v. Picken, 5 C. & P. 542, 24 E. C. L. 448; Loomis v. Wadhams, 8 Gray (Mass.) 557; Crichton v. Smith, 34 Md. 42; Taylor v. Peck, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 11. See Cramer v. Shriner, 18 Md. 140. Compare Threadgill v. White, 11 Ired. (N. Car.) 591.

The court, in delivering the opinion in Slatterie v. Pooley, 6 M. & W. 664, said: "The reason why such parol statements are admissible, without notice to produce or accounting for the absence of the written instrument, is, that they are not open to the same objection which belongs to parol evidence from other sources, where the written evidence might have been produced; for such evidence is excluded from the presumption of its untruth, arising from the very nature of the case, where better evidence is withheld; whereas what a party himself admits to be true may reasonably be presumed to be so."

It was held, in Morris v. Wadsworth, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 103, that a failure of title to lands can be shown only by documentary evidence; still, a witness, in testifying to conversations with the party responsible in damages, may speak of such failure, if the plaintiff disavows all benefit of proof of failure of title arising from such conversations.

In Lands v. Crocker, 3 Brev. (S. Car.) 40, it was held that mere verbal declarations that a release had been executed will not be sufficient to establish the existence of a deed, more particularly where there is no other evidence to support the presumption of its having been executed.

In Clute v. Small, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 238, it is held that the contents of a letter which is lost, containing a memorandum of an admission, are not admissible in evidence, where the writer of it can only say that what he wrote was undoubtedly true, but that he has no recollection of the contents of the letter, except that it contained a proposition of settlement.

In Blackington v. Rockland, 66 Me. 332, it was held, that the written admissions of a party to a suit are receivable in evidence against him, to prove facts directly in issue, although such facts are established by a writing not produced, and, in its absence, not accounted for.

In Rich v. Flanders, 39 N. H. 304, it was held, that if a party to a suit, whether upon the stand as a witness, or otherwise, is shown a paper containing written statements material to the issue and adverse to his interests, and he, after examination, admits that the statements therein contained are true, the paper containing the statements may go to the jury, in connection with his statements, as the admission of the party, and it makes no difference when, where, or by whom the statement was thus written.

Will.—Where B said that he had given a certain negro to A, the will of B, of that date, is admissible to explain his declarations. Morisey v. Bunting, 1 Dev. (N. Car.) 3. See Clark v. Wood, 34 N. H. 447.

Letters.—Letters are receivable as admissions. Holley v. Knapp, 45 Ill. App. 372; Butler v. Iron Cliffs Co., 96 Mich. 70; Wiggin v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 120 Mass. 201; Prussel v. Knowles, 4 How. (Miss.) 90;

A letter will be admitted in evidence, even though it is addressed to a third person. Wilkins v. Burton, 5 Vt. 76.

Notes, Bonds, etc.—Notes, bonds, etc., are prima facie admissions of indebtedness, to the full amount secured thereby. Mowry v. Bishop, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 98; Bowers v. Hurd, 10 Mass. 427. See also Alabama, etc., R. Co. v. Sanford, 36 Ala. 703; Child v. Moore, 6 N. H. 33; Rawson v. Adams, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 130.

In Carlisle v. Davis, 9 Ala. 858, it was held that a writing in the possession of the plaintiff, purporting to be indorsed to the defendant, but not proved to have been ever held by him, is not admissible to raise a presumption against him, although the maker's and indorser's signatures are proved.

An indorsement against one's interest on a note is admissible in evidence against him. Harper v. West, 1 Cranch (C. C.) 192; Clarke v. Ray, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 318.

Accounts Rendered by a Party whose duty it is to state and account for the information of another are admissible in evidence against him. Gradwohl v. Harris, 29 Cal. 150; Carroll v. Ridgaway, 8 Md. 328; King v. Maddux, 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 467; McKim v. Blake, 139 Mass. 593; Halleck v. State, 11 Ohio 400; Goodwin v. Armstrong, 19 Ohio 44; Lockwood v. Thorne, 18 N. Y. 285. See Hyde v. Stone, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 354, 22 Am. Dec. 582; Burrows v. Stevens, 39 Vt. 378. See the title ACCOUNTS.

Entries in the Books of a Party, Made by Himself or his clerk or bookkeeper, are evidence against him. State v. Wooderd, 20 Iowa 542; Currier v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 31 N. H. 209. See Chase v. Smith, 5 Vt. 556.

A Tax Collector's "Stub Book" has been admitted against him. Britton v. State, 77 Ala. 202.

Tax List.—In a suit for the recovery of personal property, the tax list sworn to by a party showing no claim to the property, is receivable in evidence against him. Lefever v. Johnson, 79 Ind. 554.

Partnership Books.—Entries in partnership books, made in the regular course of business, during the continuance of the firm, are evidence in suits between the partners. Perry v. Butt, 14 Ga. 699; Topliff v. Jackson, 12 Gray (Mass.) 565; Caldwell v. Leiber, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 483; Tucker v. Peaslee, 36 N. H. 167. See Symonds v. Gas Light, etc., Co., 11 Beav. 283.

Such entries are also evidence against the partnership, when sued by a stranger. Perry v. Butt, 14 Ga. 699.

But, in Brannin v. Foree, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 506, entries made in the books of a firm were not admitted as evidence against a stranger in a suit by the partnership. Compare White v. Tucker, 9 Iowa 100.

But to Make Such Books Admissible, it must appear that they were fairly kept, and that the party against whom they are to be used had access to them. Turnipseed v. Goodwin, 9 Ala. 372; Adams v. Funk, 53 Ill. 219.

Such entries are not evidence, when made after the partnership has been dissolved. Boyd v. Foot, 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 110.

Nor are they evidence against any one, to show that he is a member of the partnership. Robins v. Warde, 111 Mass. 244.

Bank Books, etc.—Bank books may be used against the bank, as admissions of the facts contained therein. Forniquet v. West Feliciana R. Co., 6 How. (Miss.) 116; Manhattan Co. v. Lydig, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 377, 4 Am. Dec. 280. See Olney v. Chadsey, 7 R. I. 224.

They may also be used against a person dealing with the bank, so far as he has made the person making such entries his agent. 2 Whart. Ev., § 1131; Lehman v. Rothbarth, 111 Ill. 186; Union Bank v. Knapp, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 96, 15 Am. Dec. 181.

In Merchants' Bank v. Taylor, 21 Ga. 334, it was held that in a case between an incorporated bank and a stockholder of the bank, the books of the bank are admissible against the stockholder.

Memoranda, Receipts, etc.—A memorandum in writing, though not signed by the party, is admissible in evidence against him. Gaines v. Gaines, 39 Ga. 68; Snyder v. Reno, 38 Iowa 329; Cook v. Anderson, 20 Ind. 15; Wadsworth v. Ruggles, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 63; Errico v. Brand, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 654; Hosford v. Foote, 3 Vt. 391.

In the same way, a receipt will be evidence against the person by whom it was given. Rea v. Trotter, 26 Gratt. (Va.) 585.

Telegrams.—A telegram may be used as admission against the party sending it, but the original draft in the handwriting of the party or his agent should be produced. Matteson v. Noyes, 25 Ill. 591; Williams v. Brickell, 37 Miss. 683, 75 Am. Dec. 88; Durkee v. Vermont Cent. R. Co., 29 Vt. 127. See Benford v. Sanner, 40 Pa. St. 10, 80 Am. Dec. 545.

Car. 91; Oregon R., etc., Co. v. Dacres, 1 Wash. 195; Vanneman v. Swedesboro Loan, etc., Assoc., 42 N. J. Eq. 263.

In Lawrence v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. Eq. 317, it was held that an answer, though responsive, has not the effect of evidence where the facts are not within the personal knowledge of the defendant.

In Watters v. Parker (Tex., 1892), 19 S. W. Rep. 1022, it was held that defendant's admissions in a plea of abatement cannot be relied upon where it was overruled, and he went to trial on a general answer.

Admissions Made by Party as Witness.—Matters to which a party has testified are admitted by him, though no such admission is contained in the pleadings. Judge v. Jordan, 81 Iowa 519.

Deposition.—A deposition may be used against the person making it, although he is present to testify, or has testified. State v. Chatham Nat. Bank, 80 Mo. 626; Meyer v. Campbell (C. Pl.), 20 N. Y. Supp. 705; Phenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Clark, 58 N. H. 164.

And this although the deposition was improperly taken. Carr v. Griffin, 44 N. H. 510; Edwards v. Norton, 55 Tex. 405.

But in Dwinel v. Godfrey, 44 Me. 65, it was held that no statement contained in any deposition taken in perpetuum can be given as evidence against the deponent.

Suppressed Deposition.—In Parker v. Chancellor, 78 Tex. 524, it was held that though the plaintiff's deposition, taken by the defendant, has been suppressed, the answers are receivable as admissions where it appears they were given and subscribed by the plaintiff.

Payment of Money into Court.—In Bacon v. Charlton, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 582, it was held that where money is tendered and paid into court, upon a declaration which contains but one cause of action specifically set forth, it operates as a conclusive admission of every fact which the plaintiff would be bound to prove in order to maintain his action. See 1 Greenl. Ev., § 205; Dyer v. Ashton, 1 B. & C. 3, 8 E. C. L. 2.

But in Hubbard v. Knous, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 556, it was held that where the declaration contains more than one count, and a portion only of the sum demanded is paid into court, without specifications as to which of the counts it is to be applied upon, such payment is an admission only that the defendant owes the plaintiff the sum so paid, on some one or several of the counts, but it does not admit an indebtedness under any one count, or a liability on all of them. See also Stapleton v. Nowell, 6 M. & W. 9; Archer v. English, 1 M. & G. 873, 39 E. C. L. 691; Kingham v. Robins, 5 M. & W. 94.

Pleading Stricken out.—A pleading which is stricken out on motion of the adverse party, may nevertheless be admissible in evidence. Fite v. Black, 92 Ga. 363; Peckham Iron Co. v. Harper, 41 Ohio St. 100.

Pleading Withdrawn.—So of admissions contained in a pleading which is afterwards amended or withdrawn. Daub v. Englebach, 109 Ill. 267; Soaps v. Eichberg, 42 Ill. App. 375; Juneau v. Stunkle, 40 Kan. 756; Guy v. Manuel, 89 N. Car. 84; Adams v. Utley, 87 N. Car. 356; Smith v. Pelott (Supreme Ct.), 18 N. Y. Supp. 301; New York, etc., Transp. Co. v. Hurd, 44 Hun (N. It was held, however, in Folger v. Boyinton, 67 Wis. 447, that, after a pleading has been amended, the original pleading cannot be used or referred to on the trial, as proof of any fact, unless it has been introduced in evidence.

But in California such original pleading is held to be inadmissible. Wheeler v. West, 71 Cal. 128; Mecham v. McKay, 37 Cal. 154; Ponce v. McElvy, 51 Cal. 222; Johnson v.

They are Admissible also against Him in Another Suit in behalf of either the adverse party or a stranger, provided they were sworn to by the client personally, or were drawn under his special instructions.¹

Powers, 65 Cal. 179. Compare Coward v. Clanton, 79 Cal. 23.

In Massachusetts it is declared by statute that neither the declaration, answer, nor any subsequent allegation shall be deemed evidence on the trial, but allegations only whereby the party making them shall be bound. A bill in equity signed by the complainant may be admitted in evidence in another suit as an admission of the facts therein stated. Buzard v. McNulty, 77 Tex. 438.

A Bill Brought to Enjoin the Prosecution of an action at law may be read in evidence against the complainant upon the trial of such action as an acknowledgment of the facts therein. Kankakee, etc., R. Co. v. Horan, 131 Ill. 288.

In Lynde v. McGregor, 13 Allen (Mass.) 182, 90 Am. Dec. 188, it was held that answers made in writing under oath, but with the understanding that they may be revised by counsel before being signed, are clearly admissible in evidence against the party answering, though neither signed nor revised.

But statements made in pleadings signed only by the attorney, and not sworn to by the client, are not competent evidence against the latter, in another suit where the statements were made without his knowledge or sanction. Delaware County v. Diebold Safe, etc., Co., 133 U. S. 473; Combs v. Hodge, 21 How. (U. S.) 404; Dennie v. Williams, 135 Mass. 28; Vogel v. Osborne, 32 Minn. 167; Siebert v. Leonard, 21 Minn. 442; *Crump v. In Boileau v. Rutlin, 2 Exch. 665, it was held that pleadings in equity, as well as at common law, are not to be treated as positive allegations of the truth of the facts therein, for all purposes, but only as statements of the case of the party, to be admitted or denied by the opposite side, and, if denied, to be proved and ultimately submitted for judicial decision.

Affidavits.—In the same way an affidavit filed in a cause is competent evidence against the party making such affidavit on the trial. National Steamship Co. v. Tugman, 143 U. S. 28; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ohle, 117 U. S. 123; Hyman v. Wheeler, 29 Fed. Rep. 347; Snydacker v. Brosse, 51 Ill. 357, 99 Am. Dec. 551; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Hulett, 50 Vt. 637.

See also Forrest v. Forrest, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 103.

An affidavit filed in the Court of Claims, by a government contractor, as to the amount of grain left on his hands by a quartermaster, was held admissible against him in his action against a carrier for unreasonable delay in forwarding. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Cobb, 64 Ill. 143.

In Bowen v. DeLattre, 6 Whart. (Pa.), 430 it was held, in an action by the payee against the maker of a promissory note, that an affidavit of defense in the same case, made by the defendant under the Pennsylvania Act of 1835, in which he admitted the making of the note, might be read in evidence by the plaintiff, as an admission of the fact of making the note.

Depositions.—Statements made by a party in a deposition given by him in another cause may be used in evidence against him as an admission. Brewer v. Hyndman, 18 N. H. 9. See Knowlton v. Moseley, 105 Mass. 136; Indo v. Gibbs, 3 Gray (Mass.) 539; Williams v. Cheney, 3 Gray (Mass.) 215. Compare Elsass v. Harrington, 28 Mo. App. 300.

Admissions of a Witness.—The admissions of a party made as a witness at one trial may be used against him in a subsequent suit. Lorenzana v. Camarillo, 45 Cal. 125; Wheat v. Summers, 13 Ill. App. 444; McKinzie v. Reneau, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 411; Kurtzmeyer v.

V. MODE AND REQUISITES OF PROOF—General Rule.—Admissions may be proved by any competent witness who heard them.¹

Precise Language should be Given, if Possible.—He should give the precise language used by the declarant, if possible; but if this cannot be done, it will suffice if he states the substance thereof.²

The Whole Admission, however, must be submitted, both the favorable and unfavorable parts;³ but the rule does not extend to matters distinct from the

In Castleman v. Sherry, 46 Tex. 228, it was held that a statement of facts purporting to contain the testimony of a party to a suit in a former trial, but which was not signed by him, does not stand on the footing of an admission in writing, and is not admissible against him.

Plea of Guilty in Criminal Cause Used as Admission in Civil Action.—In a civil suit for assault and battery the record of a criminal prosecution for the same act, in which the defendant pleaded guilty and was convicted, is proper evidence for the plaintiff, but only as an admission of the defendant. Eno v. Brown, 1 Root (Conn.) 528; Rudolph v. Landwerlen, 92 Ind. 34; Green v. Bedell, 48 N. H. 546. See also Birchard v. Booth, 4 Wis. 67.

1. Provable by any Competent Witness Who Heard Them.—Wilcox v. Green, 28 Conn. 572; Marshall v. Adams, 11 Ill. 37; Com. v. Griffin, 110 Mass. 181; Green v. Cawthorn, 4 Dev. (N. Car.) 409; Miller v. Wood, 44 Vt. 378; Reed v. Rice, 25 Vt. 171; Bailey v. Wright, 24 Ark. 73. See also Smith v. Williams, 89 Ga. 9; Hinters v. Hinters, 114 Mo. 26; Deitz v. Regnier, 27 Kan. 94.

In Reed v. Rice, 25 Vt. 171, it was held that if the admissions of a person are competent evidence in a case, they may be shown by writing, under the hand of the party, or by a witness who heard them made, or the party himself may be called, if a competent witness.

As to admissions in writing, see supra, this title, Documentary Admissions.

As to judicial admissions, see supra, this title, Judicial Admissions.

When a witness testifies that plaintiff showed him an account purporting to be a statement of money he had paid out for defendant, and that the witness took a copy of the footings of such account, the copy is admissible against plaintiff, as being a sworn copy of an admission by him. Butler v. Cornell, 148 Ill. 276.

Admissions are not receivable in evidence in chancery in England, unless put in issue by the pleadings. 1 Greenl. Ev. (14th ed.), § 171, n.; Austin v. Chambers, 6 Cl. & F. 1; Attwood v. Small, 6 Cl. & F. 234; Copland v. Toulmin, 7 Cl. & F. 350. But it is sufficient in the United States that the proposition to be established by the admission is stated in the bill. Brandon v. Cabiness, 10 Ala. 156; Smith v. Burnham, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 612.

See Lyford v. Gove, 44 N. H. 253; Bailey v. Wright, 24 Ark. 73; Jenkins v. Eldredge, 3 Story (U. S.) 181.

Admissions Made on Witness Stand.—In Grafenreid v. Kundert, 31 Ill. App. 394, it was held that an admission made by a deceased party in interest, when on the witness stand, is to be proven in the same manner as if it had been made elsewhere.

Collateral Facts.—In Lamar v. Pearre, 90 Ga. 377, it was held that collateral facts relevant to the principal fact and embraced with it in a declaration made against interest may, as well as the principal fact itself, be proved by the declaration.

Where the Admissions are Contained in a Conversation, the questions and responses of both parties thereto should be given. Grand Rapids, etc., R. Co. v. Diller, 110 Ind. 223; Phares v. Barber, 61 Ill. 272; Howard v. Newsom, 5 Mo. 523; Platner v. Platner, 78 N. Y. 90.

Where an Admission of the Correctness of an Account rendered is implied, the credits as well as the debits should be considered. Fitzpatrick v. Harris, 8 Ala. 32.

Letters.—Where it was proposed on the part of the plaintiff to give in evidence a letter written by the defendant's attorney, which purported to be an answer to a letter written to him by the plaintiff's attorney, it was held that, if the plaintiff put in this letter of the defendant's attorney, he should also call for and put in the letter to which it was an answer. Watson v. Moore, 1 C. & K. 626, 47 E. C. L. 626. See also Holler v. Weiner, 15 Pa. St. 242; Lippus v. Columbus Watch Co. (Supreme Ct.), 13 N. Y. Supp. 319.

In Bailey v. Pardridge, 35 Ill. App. 121, it was held that declarations of a party in his own favor, contained in his letters offered in evidence by his adversary to prove certain admissions, are good evidence.

At Common Law, where any pleading of the adverse party is read in evidence, as an admission, it is necessary to read the whole pleading. Whart. Ev. (3d ed.), § 1105; Bath v. Bathersea, 5 Mod. 10; Bermon v. Woodbridge, 2 Doug. 781; Baildon v. Walton, 1 Exch. 617; Stuart v. Kissam, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 494; Gildersleeve v. Mahony, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 383; Spencer v. Fortescue, 112 N. Car. 268. Compare Parker v. Lanier, 82 Ga. 216; Kentucky, etc., Cement Co. v. Cleveland, 4 Ind. App. 171.

But a different rule obtains in equity, according to the English practice. Whart. Ev., § 1104; Bartlett v. Gillard, 3 Russ. 149.

If the Testimony in a Formal Trial is Read, all that is relevant, both in chief and on cross-examination, must be given. Smith v. Biggs, 5 Sim. 391; Gildersleeve v. Caraway, 10 Ala. 260, 44 Am. In an Action for False Imprisonment against a justice, if a warrant is put in by the plaintiff as his evidence, the defendant may use a recital of it of an information on oath, in consequence of which the warrant was granted by him, as evidence of that fact. Haylock v. Sparke, 1 El. & Bl. 471, 72 E. C. L. 471. Compare White v. Morris, 11 C. B. 1015, 73 E. C. L. 1015.

But where an attempt to effect a settlement of accounts had been made by certain parties, seven years before the commencement of the suit, which attempt had failed, the admissions made by one party at that time were not allowed to be given in evidence by a person who did not recollect the whole conversation. Scott v. Young, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 542. Compare Nash v. Gibson, 16 Iowa 305.

In Wolfe v. Perryman (Ala., 1891), 9 So. Rep. 148, it was held that a witness who hears the terms of a contract discussed in the presence of the parties a few minutes after they have been agreed upon, and before the persons have dispersed, is competent to prove the contract, although he did not actually hear it made.

4. Bermon v. Woodbridge, 2 Doug. 781; Baildon v. Walton, 1 Exch. 617; Wilson v. Calvert, 8 Ala. 757; Adkins v. Hershy, 14 Ark. 442; Ayers v. Metcalf, 39 Ill. 307; *Licett v. Va. 477. But see Fox v. Lambson, 8 N. J. L. 275.

VI. WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.—Admissions, Deliberately Made, may afford proof of the most satisfactory character.¹

But Verbal Admissions, Un corroborated by other facts or evidence in the case, should always be weighed with great caution.²

In Barnes v. Allen, 1 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 111, it was held that although the jury are not necessarily bound to give equal credit to all parts of an admission, it is not proper to instruct them in effect that they may arbitrarily believe the fact admitted and disbelieve the reasons for it.

In Fox v. Lambson, 8 N. J. L. 275, it was held that though, where a declaration is offered in evidence, a court or jury may, on sufficient ground, believe a part and disbelieve another part, yet such parts must be distinct, and relate to different matters of fact.

1. Wittick v. Keiffer, 31 Ala. 199; Ector v. Welsh, 29 Ga. 443; Printup v. Mitchell, 17 Ga. 558, 63 Am. Dec. 258; Ray v. Bell, 24 Ill. 444; Mauro v. Platt, 62 Ill. 450; James v. Mickey, 26 S. Car. 270; Saveland v. Green, 40 Wis. 432.

Admission—Agreed Statement of Facts.—But it was held in Adams v. Eichenberger (Ark., 1892), 18 S. W. Rep. 853, that an admission cannot prevail over an agreed statement of facts.

Primary Evidence.—Admissions are receivable as primary evidence. Kane v. Torbit, 23 Ill. App. 311; Larrison v. Payne (Supreme Ct.), 5 N. Y. Supp. 221; Keesey v. Old, 82 Tex. 22; Grant v. Lewis, 14 Wis. 487, 80 Am. Dec. 785.

2. Verbal Admissions, Un corroborated, Received with Caution.—Wittick v. Keiffer, 31 Ala. 199; Prater v. Frazier, 11 Ark. 249; Ector v. Welsh, 29 Ga. 443; Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Kerler, 88 Ga. 39; Chandler v. Schoonover, 14 Ind. 324; Myers v. Baker, Hard. (Ky.) 553; Becker v. Crow, 7 Bush (Ky.) 198; Croizet's Succession, 12 La. Ann. 401; Higgs v. Wilson, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 337; Saveland v. Green, 40 Wis. 432; Durkee v. Stringham, 8 Wis. 2. See also Ringo v. Richardson, 53 Mo. 385; Ward v. Valentine, 7 La. Ann. 184; Johnson v. Filson, 118 Ill. 219.

This is especially true when the admission is implied from the silence of the party. 1 Greenl. Ev. (14th ed.), § 199.

Admissions Made Loosely in Conversations are of little weight. Clark v. Larkin, 9 Iowa 391; James v. Mickey, 26 S. Car. 270; O'Brien v. Flynn, 8 La. Ann. 307; Homer v. Speed, 2 Patt. & H. (Va.) 616; Durkee v. Stringham, 8 Wis. 2. See also Church v. Howard, 79 N. Y. 415.

In Prater v. Frazier, 11 Ark. 249, it was held that if made in casual conversation, after a great lapse of time, they are the weakest possible evidence admitted in the courts of justice. See also Vaughn v. Hann, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 338.

An instruction that "evidence of casual statements or admissions by a party, made in casual conversations and to disinterested persons, is regarded by law as very weak testimony, owing to the liability of the witness to misunderstand or forget what was really said or intended by the party," was held to be strictly correct. Haven v. Markstrum, 67 Wis. 493.

In Durkee v. Stringham, 8 Wis. 2, it was held that testimony of such character ought not to be allowed to overcome the force of a settlement, deliberately made by the parties in interest, when they must have known the true state of the accounts they were adjusting.

Strongest or Weakest Evidence—Dependent upon Circumstances.—Doubtless admissions may be the best or weakest evidence according to the attendant circumstances. Parker v. McNeill, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 355.

When of Little Weight.—Evidence derived from verbal admissions is of little weight where it appears that the person making them was misinformed, or did not clearly express his own meaning, or that the witness misunderstood him, or cannot give the words used, so that, by altering the expressions used, a different effect may be given to what the party did say. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Button, 68 Ill. 409.

Also, when the witness can give only part of the admissions. Chandler v. Schoonover, 14 Ind. 324; Mays v. Deaver, 1 Iowa 216.

So where the admissions relate to facts of which the party had no personal knowledge. Sparr v. Wellman, 11 Mo. 231; Stephens v. Vroman, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 250.

Admissions made by persons since deceased, and proved by witnesses who cannot be contradicted, are said to be the weakest kind of evidence. Dupre v. McCright, 6 La. Ann. 146; Wilder v. Franklin, 10 La. Ann. 279.

Where the extra-judicial declarations of a party were offered in evidence against him, and it appeared that they were not necessarily called for when made, that they were in some instances made when in an inebriated condition, and always boastfully, it was held that, if admissible at all in a suit relative to his succession, they should be entitled to no weight whatever unless strongly supported by other and independent corroborating evidence. Chapman v. Woodward, 16 La. Ann. 167. See State v. Bryan, 24 N. Car. 351.

Admissions of one of the parties to a marriage contract obtained under threats by the father of the party injured, with a deadly weapon in his hand, or by the artifice of counsel, should be received and weighed with great caution. Fidler v. McKinley, 21 Ill. 308.

Admissions of Doubtful Competency.—In Central R. Co. v. Smith, 76 Ga. 209, 2 Am. St. Rep. 31, it was held that it was proper in Georgia to admit declarations of doubtful competency, with the instructions that such doubtful competency diminishes the credibility of the declarations.

It is the Province of the Jury to weigh such evidence, and give it the consideration to which it is entitled;¹ they should see to it that the true meaning and import of an admission shall not be unduly restricted or extended.²

ADMONISH.—See note 4.

ADMR.—"Admr." is an abbreviation of the word "administrator."⁵

ADOPT.—To take a stranger into one's family as son or heir; to take one who is not a child, and treat him as one.⁶ To take and receive as one's own that which is not naturally so.⁷

An admission of the genuineness of a deed is not an admission of the truth of its recitals. Middleton v. Westenev, 7 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 393.

3. In the Sense of Tolerate.—In Pollak v. Searcy, 84 Ala. 259, an instruction was given that if the facts relating to the sale in question admitted of two constructions, the one rendering it fraudulent, the other valid, the latter must be accepted. In commenting upon these instructions the court said: "This instruction hypothesizes nothing as to the relative strength of testimony or belief, supporting the opposing alternate constructions. These may be very weak, and still not so weak or worthless as to fall within the asserted rule. Admit, in the sense here employed, is the synonym of 'tolerate.' A paraphrase of the sentence would be that, unless the testimony tending to prove the fraud is so clear as to admit of no other conclusion, then the jury must find the conveyance valid. The rule declared is too exacting." Quoted in Skipper v. Reeves, 93 Ala. 336.

Admitted to Bail.—"The allegation that the defendant was 'admitted to bail' must be understood to mean that he was discharged upon his recognizance." Shelby County v. Simmonds, 33 Iowa 347.

Admitted and Elected.—Being admitted a member of the court of a city company is equivalent to being "elected." Reg. v. Saddlers' Co., 32 L. J. Q. B. 337, 10 H. L. Cas. 404.

4. Precatory Trusts.—A testator, after a devise to his grandchildren, admonished and charged them that the gift was made in the hope that they would provide for their parents. This was held to raise no trust in favor of the parents. The court said: "Indeed, the words admonish and 'hope,' while very appropriate to the expression of a wish that the children would perform their moral duty to their parents, would be singularly inappropriate to the expression of an intention to fix any legal 'charge' or 'trust' upon the property." Arnold v. Arnold, 41 S. Car. 291. See, generally, the title PRECATORY TRUSTS.

6. Webst. Dict.; People v. Norton, 59 Barb. (N. Y.) 195. See also the titles ADOPTION OF CHILDREN; PARENT AND CHILD; SUCCESSION.

Adopt in the Sense of Legitimate.—In Blythe v. Ayres, 96 Cal. 559, the court, although recognizing that adoption was properly applied to persons who are strangers in blood, and legitimation to persons where blood relation exists, says that "the verb adopts, as used in section 230 of the California Code, is used in the sense of 'legitimates,' and that the acts of the father of an illegitimate child, if filling the measure required by that statute, would result, strictly speaking, in the legitimation of such child rather than in its adoption."

7. Webst. Dict.; People v. Norton, 59 Barb. (N. Y.) 195.

Adopt and Ratify. (See also RATIFY).—In Ellison v. Jackson Water Co., 12 Cal. 551, Field, J., says, speaking of the terms adopt and "ratify": "These terms are properly applicable only to contracts made by a party acting or assuming to act for another. The latter may then adopt or ratify the act of the former, however unauthorized. To adoption and ratification there must be some relation, actual or assumed, of principal and agent." See also Shepardson v. Gillette, 133 Ind. 125.

Adopt Distinguished from Enact.—"Much is said in argument about the meaning of the terms adopt and 'enact,' and there is no doubt a difference. To enact, implies the creating anew a law which did not exist before; but adopt no doubt implies the making that their own which was created by another, as the adoption of the statute laws of Great Britain, as they stood, by the colonial government." Williams v. Michigan Bank, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 557.

Adoption by Wife of Husband's Acts.—Where the husband contracts in writing, in his own name, for the construction of a house upon his wife's land, that the wife knew of the erection and gave directions as to the construction of some closets does not show that the husband acted as her agent, nor that she adopted the contract and made it her own. Barker v. Berry, 8 Mo. App. 446. In that case the court said: "In fact, there was no evidence tending to show that the wife was bound by what the husband had done. Of his own accord he made his express contract in writing for the building of the house, with which contract she had nothing to do; and, in the absence of any evidence other than that which this record discloses, there can be no presumption, so far as any lien is concerned, such as that which arises where the work is done or materials furnished for any building upon land 'under or by virtue of any contract with the owner or proprietor thereof, or his agent, trustee, contractor, or subcontractor,' to use the essential words of the statute. Here the contract was not with the owner. It is true that the lien does not arise from the written contract as such, but from the furnishing of the materials or doing the work upon order or direction for them; but where there is a written contract, this governs in ascertaining the nature of the order, so far as the contract covers the work at least, in the absence of other directions, and here are none. The husband ordered and used his own money. The wife knew of the building, but this fact would not authorize the jury to infer that she ordered the work to be done, or was bound so far as her land was concerned. It was perfectly consistent with the express arrangement of the special contract that the wife should visit the building and know that it was in progress. There was no obligation upon her to dissent from the agreement that the contractor had been willing to make; and so far as she adopted or, to use the inapplicable word of the plaintiff, 'ratified' anything, it was the express written contract which she adopted, and by this she was not bound. In the face of one express and special contract the law does not, except, at least, upon very clear and positive proof, raise an implied obligation inconsistent with the first; and especially should it not be so without such evidence, in the case of a wife. The husband is the head of the family, whose duty it is to provide the home. The wife, in her domestic capacity, has her own sphere, and may certainly 'give directions how she wants the closets and pantry finished,'—which is all she did here,—without authorizing an inference that she adopts as her own the contract of another person. Indeed, 'adoption' is as inapt as 'ratification' to express the meaning; for adoption implies assent to the contract as it is, and certainly the case is conceivable that the material-man is willing to look exclusively to the written contract and the parties named in it. Adoption cannot imply the insertion of a new party to the contract, or of any additional obligation not arising from it as it stands. Here the testimony of the defendant negatives all concert of action on the part of the wife, and shows that not only the contract but the arrangement for building the house was the husband's."

City Council.—Upon a report to a municipal council by one of its committees, recommending certain action to be taken by the council, a record of the proceedings of the council in the word "adopted" expresses the will of the body that the course recommended be pursued. State v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 39 Minn. 220. Here the court said: "The evidence shows, as we consider, that the city council did adopt the plans and grade shown in the information. These plans having been reported to the city council by a committee of that body, with the recommendation that the same be adopted by the council, and that the city attorney be instructed to commence proceedings in court for their enforcement, the action of the council thereupon is expressed in its records by the word 'adopted.' This expresses the adoption by the council as its will of what was thus recommended. Whether this was necessary we do not decide."

To Adopt a Route.—To adopt a route for the transportation of the mail, means to take the steps necessary to cause the mail to be transported over that route. Rhodes v. U. S., Dev. Ct. of Cl. 47.

I. DEFINITION AND ORIGIN—Definition.—Adoption is the act by which relations of paternity and affiliation are recognized as legally existing between persons not so related by nature.¹

Origin.—Adoption is not recognized by the common law, being repugnant to its principles, and exists in the United States only by special statute.² It was, however, expressly sanctioned under the civil law, and exists in many countries on the Continent of Europe which derive their jurisprudence from that law.³ Traces of the practice are found in the jurisprudence of the Jews, Greeks, and Romans.⁴

Adoption is the taking into one's family a child of another as son and heir, conferring on it a title to the privileges and rights of a child. An act, in other words, by which a person appoints as his heir the child of another. Abney v. DeLoach, 84 Ala. 393.

Adoption is the legal act whereby an adult person takes a minor into the relation of child and thereby acquires the rights and incurs the responsibility of a parent in respect to such minor. N. Y. Stat. 1873, c. 830.

St. Rep. 500, Champlin, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "Among many of the continental nations it [adoption] has been practiced from the remotest antiquity. It appears to have been a necessary concomitant of the type of archaic society when the family constituted the unit of the community, and was an important factor in developing society into the broader community called the state."

Adoption, in the Roman law, was an act by

II. CONSTITUTIONALITY OF ADOPTION STATUTES.—Adoption statutes have been enacted in almost all the states of the Union,¹ and although their constitutionality has been assailed on various grounds, in no state, so far as can be ascertained, has such a statute been declared unconstitutional² when passed with the prescribed formalities.³

III. NATURE AND REQUISITES OF ADOPTION PROCEEDINGS—1. In General.—In most of the states the mode of adoption provided by statute is by petition to the probate or other like court, reciting the requisite facts. A decree is made by the court, based upon these facts, which judicially confers upon the child the capacity or qualification to inherit, and other incidents of the status authorized by the statute of the particular state where the adoption proceeding is had. This is a judicial procedure, involving the rendition of a judgment by the court by which the new status of the child is determined.⁴

which a person undertook to rear the child of another and appoint such child as his heir. Ballard v. Ward, 89 Pa. St. 358.

Adoption was a feature of the Roman law, and obtains in Germany and France, and some other continental nations of Europe, whose jurisprudence in this respect has followed the civil law. It prevailed also as a custom among the ancient Jews. In Alabama, prior to the Code of 1852, the right of adoption was limited to the legitimation of bastard children by their fathers. Abney v. DeLoach, 84 Ala. 393.

1. Stimp. Am. St. Law, §§ 6640-6651.

2. Abandonment of Child by Father—Adoption may be Authorized on Application of Mother and without Father's Consent.—In Nugent v. Powell (Wyoming, 1893), 33 Pac. Rep. 23, it was held that the statute authorizing the adoption of a child on the application of the mother, and without the consent of, or notice to, the father where the latter has relinquished his claim to the child by abandonment, is not in conflict with any provision of the constitution. In upholding the constitutionality of the statute the court said: "As to the constitutionality of the statute, when construed as we construe it, we have this to say: An examination of the statutes of adoption in force in the United States will show that in several states the consent of and notice to abandoning parents is not required. It is enough if the fact of abandonment is made to appear; then the remaining parent may consent to the adoption. This is the case in Colorado, Illinois, Alabama, and perhaps other states. After careful search we have been unable to find any case in which the constitutionality of such statutes has been denied or questioned, and certainly we have not been referred to any. Upon principle, I am unable to conceive of any valid constitutional objection to the statute as we construe it."

Conferring Power upon Judge.—The California statute was attacked because it conferred the power of adoption upon the judge as distinguished from the court. But the court upheld the statute, saying that the legislature has full power to regulate the adoption of children, and may invest any person or officer or court with the power of receiving, witnessing, and declaring the adoption, and prescribe the form of adoption; that the matter of adoption belongs to the legislative, and not to the judicial, branch of the government; and though the act of passing upon the adoption may be judicial in the sense of being an act of judgment, still this does not make it any part of the judicial power spoken of in the constitution, and by that instrument vested in courts. In re Stevens, 83 Cal. 322.

School Fund.—The Indiana Act of Dec. 21, 1865 (1 Rev. Stat. 1876, p. 417), enabling children adopted under the laws of any other state of the Union to take and hold real estate in that state, is not in conflict with art. 8, § 2, of the state constitution, prescribing what shall constitute the common-school fund. State v. Meyer, 63 Ind. 33.

Affecting Devolution of Property.—It was held in Sewall v. Roberts, 115 Mass. 262, that the fact that the statute, as one of its incidental features, changes the descent and devolution of property, does not render it invalid unless it defeats vested rights. See also In re Jessup's Estate, 81 Cal. 408.

3. In People v. Congdon, 77 Mich. 351, Act 26, Laws of 1861, which provided for the adoption of minor children, was held to be unconstitutional, on the ground that it failed to express the object of the act in its title, in violation of the constitutional provision to that effect.

4. Judicial Procedure.—Abney v. DeLoach, 84 Ala. 393. And see the various local statutes.

Ministerial Act.—In other states a mode is adopted which is intended to be more simple and inexpensive. It consists of a written instrument, declaration, or statement, more in the nature of a deed than anything else, which is required to be executed, attested, acknowledged, and filed for record in the probate or other court of cognate jurisdiction. There is nothing judicial connected with this simple procedure; even the taking of the acknowledgment by the probate judge is purely a ministerial and not a judicial act. Abney v. DeLoach, 84 Ala. 393; Ala. Code 1886, §§ 2743-2745; Rev. Code Iowa, c. 7, § 2309; Civ. Stat. Tex., tit. 1, art. 1; Civ. Code Cal., c. 2, § 226.

Proceeding in Rem.—The adoption of a minor child has been declared to be in the nature of a proceeding in rem, the purpose being to change the status of the child, and, ipso facto, to render it what the court de-

The Compliance Required.—While the statutes authorizing adoption are in derogation of the common law, and for this reason are, in some respects, to be strictly construed, yet their construction should not be narrowed so closely as to defeat the legislative intent which may be made obvious by their terms, and by the mischief to be remedied by their enactment.¹

Presumption of Adoption.—There is no presumption that minor children living with a man who is not their father have been adopted by him.²

Noncompliance with Statute—Contract as to Property.—There are cases in which alleged adopted children have been allowed to inherit the property of alleged adopting parents when the statutory requirements regarding adoption have not been substantially complied with. But this has not been upon the ground that the defective proceedings constituted a valid adoption, but on the ground that there was a contract by such alleged parents to leave their property to such children, and that the latter having performed their part by rendering the services due from children to their parents, equity will enforce the contract against the representatives of the alleged adopting parents.³

clares it to be—the child and heir of the adopting parent. Van Matre v. Sankey, 148 Ill. 536.

Texas Statute.—The Texas Adoption Act modifies the law of Spain on that subject as far as the rights of the adopted child are concerned. Under the civil law the adopted child could not inherit if the adopting father had a legitimate child living. The statute of Texas confers on the adopted child the rights of a natural child only with reference to the estate, and does not constitute him a member of the family of the adopter, nor invest him with the privileges and duties peculiar to the relation of parent and child, as does the civil law. Eckford v. Knox, 67 Tex. 200; Taylor v. Deseve, 81 Tex. 246.

1. Strict Compliance.—In the following cases a strict compliance with the provisions of the statute was held necessary in order to constitute a valid adoption. Furgeson v. Jones, 17 Oregon 204, 11 Am. St. Rep. 808; Luppie v. Winans, 37 N. J. Eq. 245; Keegan v. Geraghty, 101 Ill. 26; Johnson v. Terry, 34 Conn. 259; Ex p. Clark, 87 Cal. 641; In re Jessup's Estate, 81 Cal. 408; Wallace v. Rappleye, 103 Ill. 229.

Verbal Agreement.—It was held, in Taylor v. Deseve, 81 Tex. 246, that a verbal agreement between the father, the mother being dead, and another, to the effect that the latter should have the custody of the child, did not constitute an adoption of such child, and that no rights grew out of such agreement. See also State v. Baldwin, 5 N. J. Eq. 454.

Failure to Execute Instrument—Intention to Execute.—In Iowa, where an instrument, intended to effect the adoption of an infant, was signed and acknowledged by his surviving parent, but the parties who intended to adopt the child failed to execute it, because the justice who had possession of the instrument was ill, and the child resided with his intended parents for nearly two years, it was held that there was not such a compliance with the provisions of the statute as to constitute a legal adoption. Long v. Hewitt, 44 Iowa 363.

Filing Instrument for Record.—In Iowa, where the articles of adoption of a child were executed, signed, and acknowledged by the parties, but were not filed for record until after the death of the person making the adoption, it was held that the act of adoption was incomplete, and the child could not inherit as the heir of the decedent. Tyler v. Reynolds, 53 Iowa 146. Followed in Gill v. Sullivan, 55 Iowa 341. And this is true notwithstanding the fact that the child has complied with the terms of such articles during the full period of his minority. Shearer v. Weaver, 56 Iowa 578. And in McCollister v. Yard (Iowa, 1894), 57 N. W. Rep. 447, it was held that the instrument must be filed during the minority of the child, or there is no valid adoption.

Substantial Compliance.—In the following cases it has been held that a substantial compliance with the provisions of the statute is sufficient. In re Williams' Estate, 102 Cal. 70; Cofer v. Scroggins, 98 Ala. 342; People v. Bloedel (Buffalo Super. Ct.), 4 N. Y. Supp. 110; Abney v. DeLoach, 84 Ala. 393.

In In re Johnson's Estate, 98 Cal. 531, the court said: "The essential foundation of the proceeding is the consent of the persons named in the statute, and when this has been given in the presence of the proper judge, and manifested in writing, and by the order of such judge, the contract cannot be declared invalid because of some merely technical objection to the manner in which the judge who signed the order of adoption may have discharged his duty in the premises."

It was held in Fosburgh v. Rogers, 114 Mo. 122, that the adoption of a child under the surname of its adoptive parents, without disclosing its former name, is not insufficient for that reason, provided his identity is otherwise indicated with certainty; the statute not requiring its former name to be mentioned.

It has been held in Vermont that adoption proceedings will not be vitiated by failure to insert in the body of the deed the name of the person adopted, when his consent is evidenced by the signature of his guardian. Bancroft v. Bancroft, 53 Vt. 9.

2. In re Romero's Estate, 75 Cal. 379.

3. Van Tine v. Van Tine (N. J., 1888), 15 Atl. Rep. 249; Wright v. Wright, 99 Mich. 170; Healey v. Simpson, 113 Mo. 340.

2. Consent and Notice—The Parents.—In order to constitute a valid adoption under the statutes, the written consent of a child's natural parents must be obtained, if living, or the consent of the survivor, if one is dead,¹ provided

Where the father of an infant child made an agreement with an uncle of the infant, at the uncle's request, that the infant should be taken by said uncle and adopted as his own child, and that he should leave such property as he might have at his death, and the death of his wife, to such child, and where the uncle in pursuance of this agreement took the child and had him baptized, the child assuming his surname and living with him for twenty-five years, it was held that the child might maintain his bill upon the agreement after such performance on his part. Van Dyne v. Vreeland, 11 N. J. Eq. 370.

Under a Michigan statute, providing for the organization of mutual benefit associations, "to secure to the family or heirs of any member, upon his death, a certain sum of money," it was held that the term "family" will cover a case where the insured and the beneficiary were an old man and a young woman, respectively, not related at all, but who had lived for a number of years in the same household, and had treated each other as father and daughter. Carmichael v. Northwestern Mut. Bea. Assoc., 51 Mich. 494.

Before the enactment of the New York Adoption Law, a girl was surrendered by her parents, while quite young, to a man and his wife. They agreed, in consideration thereof, to take her as a daughter, giving her their name and promising to leave their property to her. The parents did not exert any control over the girl, and she supposed, until after the death of her adopted parents, that she was the daughter of the latter. The adopted mother died without making a will, supposing that by the will of her husband, who had died previously, the property would pass to the girl. It was held that the promise of the adopted parents to leave their property to the girl would be enforced. Godine v. Kidd (Supreme Ct.), 19 N. Y. Supp. 335.

A man and his wife made an agreement to adopt an infant as their child, and leave it their property upon their death, but failed to execute a legal adoption. The child wholly performed its part of the agreement by living with them and rendering the obedience due from a child to its parents; the husband died leaving his property to his wife; the child continued to live with the wife until she died, intestate. It was held that the contract was valid, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a specific performance in regard to the disposition of the property. Sharkey v. McDermott, 91 Mo. 647 (reversing Sharkey v. McDermott, 16 Mo. App. 80).

Suing in Adopted Name.—In Watson v. Watson, 49 Mich. 540, it was held, where a girl had been practically though not formally adopted into a family, in pursuance of an understanding that she should be treated in all things as a daughter, that she might use the name of her adopted parents as her own in bringing a suit against the head of the family.

1. Consent of Parents.—Luppie v. Winans, 37 N. J. Eq. 245; Humphrey, Appellant, 137 Mass. 84; Ex p. Chambers, 88 Cal. 216; Nugent v. Powell (Wyoming, 1893), 33 Pac. Rep. 23; In re Johnson's Estate, 98 Cal. 531; Booth v. Van Allen, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 401; In re Clements, 78 Mo. 352.

Statutes of Adoption are Founded on Consent, and when consent is required to be given, the court has no jurisdiction without it. Furgeson v. Jones, 17 Oregon 204, 11 Am. St. Rep. 808.

Word "Parents" Construed.—The word "parents," as used in the various statutes, is construed to mean only the lawful father and mother; and if a child be illegitimate, the consent of the mother only is necessary, and it is not necessary to give notice to the putative father. Gibson, Appellant, 154 Mass. 378; Booth v. Van Allen, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 401.

Consent Presumed.—It was held in Sword v. Keith, 31 Mich. 247, that where a child, on the death of his father, was adopted by his uncle, who stood to him in loco parentis, and to whom he sustained the relation of an adopted child until he became of age, it will be presumed, nothing appearing to the contrary, after a lapse of twenty years from his majority, that his mother has assented to such adoption by his uncle, and to his emancipation from any parental control or rights she might have asserted at that time.

Consent Dispensed with.—In most of the states a parent's consent may be dispensed with when he or she has been divorced for adultery or cruelty, or when he or she has been judicially deprived of the custody of the child. Cal. Civ. Code, § 224; Dak. Civ. Code, § 110; Idaho Civ. Code, § 4; Ill. Rev. Stat., c. 4; N. Y. Rev. Stat., tit. "Children," § 32; Nev. Gen. Stat., c. 24, § 4; Nugent v. Powell (Wyoming, 1893), 33 Pac. Rep. 23; Rev. Code Iowa, c. vii., § 2308.

It has been held in California that § 224, Civ. Code, rendering the consent of a parent divorced on account of adultery unnecessary to a valid adoption of a child, is applicable, even though the divorce was granted before the enactment of that provision, and for an act of adultery committed in another state. In re Williams' Estate, 102 Cal. 70.

It was held in Baker v. Strahorn, 33 Ill. App. 59, that a wife who has been awarded a divorce and the custody of the child, where she has no means to support the child, may give her consent to its adoption, and that this will be sufficient against the opposition of the husband, in the absence of any pecuniary aid on his part to the child.

It seems that in Georgia the consent of the mother is not necessary, unless the father is dead, or has abandoned his family; and if both be dead, or have abandoned the child, they be known, and not hopelessly intemperate or insane, and have not abandoned the child;¹ or notice must be served upon them of the adoption proceedings.²

The Guardian or Next Friend.—If the parents be dead, or incapacitated as mentioned above, then the consent of the child's guardian or next friend must be obtained, or notice served upon him.³

Consent of Child.—In many of the states the consent of the child must also be obtained if it is over fourteen years of age,⁴ while in other states the child's consent must be obtained if it is over twelve years of age.⁵

then the consent of no one is required, but the court may decree the adoption if it seems to be for the best interests of the child. Ga. Code 1882, § 1788.

The mother of an illegitimate child consented to its adoption before she became of age, and the adoption was thereupon decreed. It was held that her consent was sufficient to render the decree valid. In re Bush, 47 Kan. 264.

1. Abandonment of Child.—In Winans v. Luppie, 47 N. J. Eq. 302, the court said: "The statutory notion of abandonment does not necessarily, we think, imply that the parent has deserted the child, or even ceased to feel any concern for its interests. It fairly may, and in our judgment does, import any conduct on the part of the parent which evinces a settled purpose to forego all parental duties and relinquish all parental claims to the child."

Where the mother of the child is a party to adoption proceedings and gives her consent to the same, the father who has abandoned the child is not entitled to notice of the proceedings, nor is his consent to the adoption necessary. Nugent v. Powell (Wyoming, 1893), 33 Pac. Rep. 23, in which case the court said: "The 'parent' referred to in § 2279 (Rev. Stat. Wyoming, relative to adoption of children) is a parent who still possesses some right in or to the custody over and control of the child, which he or she can relinquish." See also Barnard v. Barnard, 119 Ill. 92.

It was, however, held in Schiltz v. Roenitz, 86 Wis. 31, that a parent could not be deprived of the custody of his child by adoption proceedings based on his alleged abandonment of the child, where he had no notice of the proceeding and no opportunity to defend.

Where Parent is Deprived of Civil Rights.—In New York the necessity for consent or notice to a parent is dispensed with if such parent has been deprived of civil rights. N. Y. Rev. Stat., tit. "Children," § 32.

And the same rule applies in Oregon and Rhode Island, where such parent is put in prison for more than three years. Code of Oregon, § 2939; Furgeson v. Jones, 17 Oregon 204, 11 Am. St. Rep. 808; Pub. Stat. R. I., c. 164, § 3.

2. Service of Notice.—In some of the states, where a parent does not consent to the adoption of his child, and does not belong to one of the excepted classes, it is required that he shall be personally served with a copy of the petition or order, if found in the state, and if not, by publication made for a certain length of time (generally three weeks) in a newspaper printed in the county where the proceedings for adoption are had. Humphrey, Appellant, 137 Mass. 84; Oregon Code, § 2940; Furgeson v. Jones, 17 Oregon 204, 11 Am. St. Rep. 808; Schiltz v. Roenitz, 86 Wis. 31; R. I. Pub. Stat., c. 164, § 4; Ga. Laws 1889, p. 69.

It was held in Lee v. Back, 30 Ind. 148, that a decree depriving the father of the custody of his infant child, without jurisdiction of the person of the father having been acquired by notice, is void.

3. Consent of Guardian or Next Friend.—Ill. Rev. Stat., c. 4, § 5; N. H. Pub. Stat., c. 188, § 3; N. Y. Laws 1873, c. 830, § 7; R. I. Pub. Stat., c. 164, § 3; Wis. Code, § 4022.

It was held in Burger v. Frakes, 67 Iowa 460, that when a minor has a legally appointed guardian, he cannot be adopted except with the consent of such guardian.

In Massachusetts, if the person to be adopted is a married woman, the written consent of her husband is necessary in order to render the proceedings valid. In case of a subsequent adoption, the consent of the previous adopting parent is required. Mass. Pub. Stat., c. 148, § 2.

Where an orphan child has been supported wholly at the expense of an orphan asylum for the period of a year, such child cannot legally be adopted without the consent of the orphan asylum managers, given in the same manner that the consent of parents for the adoption of their children is required to be given. Ex p. Chambers, 80 Cal. 216.

If a Child Has no Guardian or Next Friend, then the court is, in its discretion, empowered to appoint one for it, to give or withhold consent as he may deem best. Pub. Stat. R. I. c. 164, § 3; Edds, Appellant, 137 Mass. 346.

4. Consent of Child.—See statutes of Colorado, Connecticut, Illinois, Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Ohio, Oregon, Rhode Island, Utah, Virginia, Washington, and Wisconsin, all of which require the consent of the child if it is over fourteen years of age.

5. The statutes of Arizona, California, Dakota, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, and New York require the consent of the child if it is over twelve years of age.

In Michigan the statute requires that the consent of the child be obtained if it is over seven years of age.

In Kansas the statute requires in all cases the consent of the person to be adopted, regardless of its age.

IV. WHO MAY ADOPT AND WHO MAY BE ADOPTED—Who may Adopt.—Generally, any person, being a resident of the state, and twenty-one years of age, is capable of adopting a child as his own.¹ But a person having a wife or husband capable of giving consent, from whom he or she is not lawfully separated, cannot adopt a child unless such wife or husband consents thereto.²

In those states whose statutes allow adults to be adopted, the consent of the parents of such adult is not required; the consent of the person to be adopted being sufficient. Ga. Code, § 1790; Mass. Pub. Stat., c. 148, § 3.

Consent of Minor Presumed.—In Morrison v. Sessions, 70 Mich. 297, 14 Am. St. Rep. 500, it was held that where the statute requires the assent of the minor to be adopted, in order to make the proceedings valid, such assent will be presumed, unless his dissent expressly appears, if the court is satisfied that such adoption is for the benefit of said minor.

Notice to Child.—In Van Matre v. Sankey, 138 Ill. 536, it was held that, unless the statute so requires; no notice to the child is necessary in proceedings for its adoption; the assent of its guardian will suffice.

1. Who may Adopt.—See the statutes of Arizona, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Montana, Nevada, New Jersey, and Vermont.

In Iowa, any person competent to make a will can adopt a child. Rev. Code Iowa, c. 7, § 2307.

Specified Difference in Age Required.—In some states the person adopting must be at least fifteen years older than the person adopted. See statutes of Idaho, Louisiana, and New Jersey.

In other states the person adopting must be at least ten years older than the person adopted. See statutes of California, Dakota, and Nevada.

In Nevada a Mongolian can neither adopt nor be adopted. Gen. Stat. Nev., § 610.

"Resident" Defined.—In Wolf's Appeal, 22 W. N. C. (Pa.) 93, in construing the Adoption Act of May 4, 1855, the court said: "The purpose of our Adoption Act is to promote the welfare of the child to be adopted, and any one desirous of adopting a child may invoke the power of the court of the county in which he or she may reside. It does not require that the petitioner shall be a citizen, a freeholder, or an inhabitant; nor does it require that he shall reside any certain length of time. It does not say that he shall be a permanent resident, which has been held to be synonymous with inhabitant; nor that he may be a temporary resident, which has been held synonymous with a sojourner. After a careful examination of all the authorities cited (they are too numerous to be classified or referred to here), I am of opinion that the word 'resident,' as used in the Act of May 4, 1855, includes both a permanent and a temporary resident, and the jurisdiction of the court is, therefore, sufficiently set forth in the petition." See also Van Matre v. Sankey, 148 Ill. 536.

Adoption by Nonresidents.—In Massachusetts, a person not an inhabitant of the commonwealth, who desires to adopt a child residing there, may present a petition to the probate court in the county where the child resides. Mass. Pub. Stat., c. 148, § 1.

Where adoption proceedings were conducted in New Hampshire, the statute of which state authorizes the adoption of a child on petition to the probate court in the county where the petitioner or the child resides, and the adopting parent was not a resident of New Hampshire when the petition was filed or the order for adoption made, the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, in construing the New Hampshire statute, said: "The law of New Hampshire, as recited in the case stated (which is the only evidence thereof before us), declares that upon a decree of adoption according to that law the child shall become to all intents and purposes, including inheritance and all other legal consequences and incidents of the natural relation of parent and child (except taking property expressly limited to heirs of the body), the child of the persons adopting him, and contemplates that immediately upon such decree their domicile shall become his. Such a statute is not to be presumed to extend to a case in which the domicile of those petitioning for leave to adopt a child is in another state. The provision in the statute of New Hampshire that the decree may be made in the county where the petitioner or the child resides, implies that the statute is intended to be limited to cases in which all parties have their domicile in that state, and there is no presumption in favor of the jurisdiction of a probate court exercising a special authority conferred by statute, and not according to the usual course of proceedings at common law or in chancery." Foster v. Waterman, 124 Mass. 592.

Guardian may Adopt.—Under the Vermont statute, a person in signing the instrument of affiliation may act in the double capacity of guardian and adopter. Bancroft v. Bancroft, 53 Vt. 9. See also Sewall v. Roberts, 115 Mass. 262.

2. Consent of Other Spouse Necessary.—Wallace v. Rappleye, 103 Ill. 229. See statutes of Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Dakota, Delaware, Idaho, Illinois, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Rhode Island, Utah, Vermont, Washington, and Wisconsin.

In Pennsylvania it is not necessary for one spouse to join the other in adoption proceedings, and where a woman did not join her husband in proceedings for the adoption of a child, it was held that such child did not become her child by adoption; that no confidential relations existed between them, and that in business transactions they dealt at

Who may be Adopted.—The statutes of many of the states authorize the adoption of "any minor."¹ A number of the states, however, provide for the adoption of "any child."² Some of the courts hold that the word "child," as used in these statutes, means "minor child,"³ while others hold that it includes adults as well as minors.⁴

arm's length. Nulton's Appeal, 103 Pa. St. 286.

Joint Adoption by Husband and Wife.—Many of the statutes, while requiring the consent of one spouse to the adoption of a child by the other, fail to expressly authorize the joint adoption by husband and wife. But whenever adoption proceedings have been attacked on the ground of being an attempted joint adoption, a proceeding which the statute did not authorize, the proceedings have been held to be valid. In Abney v. DeLoach, 84 Ala. 393, where the question was raised, the court said: "It is suggested in the bill that the adoption paper was signed by both John N. Sanders and his wife, and that the signature of the wife rendered it invalid as the joint act of both, a form of adoption which, it is said, is unauthorized by the statute. We do not think that a valid juridical act by one person can be rendered invalid by the consent or signature of another. The most that can be urged is that the signature of the wife was mere surplusage. It could not vitiate the act of the husband, who was sui juris, and, as we have shown, who complied with every essential requisite of the statute in the proceeding by which he sought to adopt the child named in the instrument of adoption."

In Krug v. Davis, 87 Ind. 590, the court said: "The obvious purpose of the statute before us was to authorize the incorporation of the children of other persons into families desirous of assuming control over them, and in that way to sanction the formation of new and artificial family relations between persons not necessarily of the same blood." After stating the objections made to a joint adoption, the court answered them as follows. "On the contrary, the better and more reasonable construction appears to us to be that a wife may unite with her husband in such proceeding, as, from the very nature of things, the interests of the entire family are necessarily involved in the object sought to be accomplished by it. There is not only no inconsistency, but a manifest propriety, in the wife thus uniting with her husband, as by doing so the adopted child is made to assume, in a general sense, the same position in the family which it would occupy if it were the natural child of both, born in lawful wedlock." Followed in Markover v. Krauss, 132 Ind. 294.

The same question arose in California, under a statute similar to the Indiana statute, and the court held as follows: "Under these sections the wife has precisely the same right to adopt a child as the husband, and we know of no reason why both may not unite in an application for the adoption of a child as the child of both, or why, in such a case, the order of adoption should not declare that the child shall henceforth be treated and regarded as the child of both spouses. On the contrary, such procedure would seem to be in entire harmony with the object of the law, and an appropriate way by which husband and wife may mutually consent to the adoption of a stranger in blood into the family, and to assume towards such a child the duties of the parental relation." In re Williams' Estate, 102 Cal. 70.

1. See statutes of Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Dakota, Iowa, Kansas, Montana, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Utah, Virginia, Washington, and Wyoming.

Where the adoption statute uses the words "any minor," no adult can be adopted under its provisions. McCollister v. Yard (Iowa, 1894), 57 N. W. Rep. 447.

Excepted Relations.—In Massachusetts no person can adopt his or her wife, husband, brother, sister, uncle, or aunt, either of the whole or of the half blood. Pub. Stat. Mass., c. 148, § 1.

2. See statutes of Alabama, Delaware, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Wisconsin.

3. "Child" Defined.—It was held in Moore, Petitioner, 14 R. I. 38, and in Williams v. Knight (R. I., 1893), 27 Atl. Rep. 210, that the word "child," as used in the Adoption Act of that state, meant "minor child," and that adults could not be adopted under the act.

Pennsylvania.—It has been held in Pennsylvania that there is no law authorizing the adoption of an adult. Anonymous, 1 W. N. C. (Pa.) 576.

4. Indiana.—In Markover v. Krauss, 132 Ind. 294, the court, in construing the meaning of the word "child," as used in the Indiana Adoption Act, said: "Counsel argue that, because in the statute providing for the adoption of heirs the word 'child' is used, the proceeding can only apply to infants; that an adult is no longer a child, and hence cannot be adopted. * * * It is true that the word 'child' is used throughout the entire statute, including section 829. It is also true that the word 'child,' as commonly used, carries with it the idea of tender years and of minority. It is, however, also true that one's child does not cease to be his child when it obtains its majority. The statute, unlike the statutes of many of the states, contains no provision fixing or limiting the age at which heirs may be adopted. We can see no reason why its provisions may not apply to adults equally with infants. We think they may and do."

Massachusetts.—The Massachusetts Adoption Act uses the words "any child," but it

V. EXTRA-TERRITORIAL EFFECT OF ADOPTION.—A child adopted in one state, in accordance with the laws thereof, while the parties are domiciled there, will, after removal into another state, be recognized as the legal child of the adopting parent in the latter state, for the purpose of inheriting property there.¹

plainly indicates that an adult is included in these terms, as it provides that the consent of the parents of an "adult child" shall not be necessary in order to constitute a valid adoption of such child. Pub. Stat. Mass., c. 148, §§ 1, 2.

1. In Van Matre v. Sankey, 148 Ill. 536, the court held that a decree of adoption was a declaration of competent authority, and operated to change the status of the child, and ipso facto to render it that which it was declared to be—the heir-at-law of the adopting parent—and capable of inheriting from him in all respects as if it had been his child, born in lawful wedlock; and that the status of the adopted child having been established under, and existing by virtue of, the lex domicilii, is to be recognized and upheld in every other state, unless such status, or the rights flowing therefrom, are inconsistent with or opposed to the laws and policy of the state where it is sought to be taken advantage of. See 2 Black on Judgments, § 792 et seq.

In Ross v. Ross, 129 Mass. 243, 37 Am. Rep. 321, Gray, C.J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "We are not aware of any case in England or America in which a change of status in the country of the domicile, with the formalities prescribed by its laws, has not been allowed full effect, as to the capacity thereby created of succeeding to and inheriting property, real as well as personal, in any other country, the laws of which allow a like change of status in a like manner with a like effect under like circumstances. We are, therefore, of opinion that the legal status of child of intestate, once acquired by the demandant under a statute and by a judicial decree of the state of Pennsylvania while the parties were domiciled there, continued after their removal into this Commonwealth."

In Keegan v. Geraghty, 101 Ill. 26, the court held that the rights of inheritance acquired by an adopted child under the law of Wisconsin would be recognized and upheld in Illinois only so far as they were not inconsistent with the law of descent of that state; so that if an adopted child could not take under the Illinois statute of descent, then it could not take at all, no matter what the law of Wisconsin might be in respect to the rights of an adopted child. To the same effect is Sunderland's Estate, 60 Iowa 732.

In Indiana, upon filing in any circuit court of the state a transcript of the record of the legal adoption in another state, a person so adopted has the same rights as if originally adopted in Indiana, and the rights of such person may be enforced, though the transcript is filed after he obtained his majority, and after the death of the adopting party. Markover v. Krauss, 132 Ind. 294. See also Woodward v. Woodward, 87 Tenn. 644.

Extra-territorial Effect of Decree of Legitimation.—The question of the extra-territorial effect of adoption statutes and decrees is analogous to the question of the extra-territorial effect of statutes or decrees of legitimation, in that the effect of the statute or proceeding affecting the status of the party is involved in both. The following are some of the decisions on the latter point, which, however, are not at all uniform. In Scott v. Key, 11 La. Ann. 232, it was held that an act of the Arkansas legislature, legitimizing a son, did not give him the right to inherit his father's property in Louisiana. In Barnum v. Barnum, 42 Md. 251, it was held that this act of the Arkansas legislature could have no extra-territorial operation whatever, except as to any rights that might have been acquired under it in the state of Arkansas.

In Lingen v. Lingen, 45 Ala. 410, it was held that a child legitimized in France according to the forms of law in that country could not inherit property in Alabama. In Smith v. Derr, 34 Pa. St. 126, 75 Am. Rep. 641, the court said: "The fact that inheritable capacity is granted by law elsewhere cannot change our law of descents. A capacity in Tennessee does not prove capacity here. So far as our law is concerned, legitimation by the subsequent marriage of the parents abroad, by act of a foreign legislature, or by judicial decree abroad, are all fruitless. If they were allowed to constitute inheritable capacity here, then adoption might have the same effect. Then we should be without any law of inheritances in favor of relations in other states, except such as our neighbors should be pleased to give us. It is the fact of birth in wedlock that gives inheritable capacity, and not any artificial legitimation."

In Doe v. Vardill, 5 B. & C. 438, 11 E. C. L. 266, it was held that a person born in Scotland of parents domiciled there, but not married until after his birth, though legitimated by the laws of Scotland, could not take real estate in England as heir, his father having died intestate.

Contra.—In Miller v. Miller, 91 N. Y. 315, 43 Am. Rep. 669, it was held that when an illegitimate child has, by the subsequent marriage of his parents, become legitimate by virtue of the laws of the state, or country, where such marriage took place, and the parents were domiciled, it is thereafter legitimate everywhere, and entitled to all the rights flowing from that status, including the right to inherit.

The same decision was reached in New Jersey in the case of Dayton v. Adkisson, 45 N. J. Eq. 603, 14 Am. St. Rep. 763, where the court said: "Many persons come to reside among us from neighboring states, and from those countries of Europe governed by the civil-law system, and bring with them children whom they suppose to be their lawful heirs for all purposes, but who would be denied the right of heirs as to real estate by

VI. DECREE OF ADOPTION—HOW AND WHEN SET ASIDE—1. In General.—In many of the states, the adopting parent, or the person adopted, by his next friend may appeal to the superior court or supreme court to have the decree of adoption set aside.¹ The statutes of some of the states provide that a parent who has not given his consent to adoption proceedings, and was not served with notice thereof, may appeal from the decree of adoption within a specified time.²

the rule adopted in England in Doe v. Vardill, 5 B. & C. 438, 11 E. C. L. 266, while, as to personal property, they would be lawful next of kin. I do not think such a state of the law a desirable one, and am not willing to be the first judge to declare such to be the law in this state. Nor do I think a law enabling, or even encouraging, parents to do simple justice to their innocent offspring, begotten out of wedlock, by investing them with the complete attributes of heirs, is immoral or tends to promote immorality. I see no reason why a man should not be permitted to adopt and invest with rights of heirship his own illegitimate child by marrying its mother; and I see no difference in morals between such mode of adoption and that provided by our statutes, which enables a man to adopt, with that effect, even the illegitimate child of unknown parents."

For further authorities on this subject, see the title LEGITIMACY.

1. How and When Decree Set Aside.—See statutes of Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Oregon, and Rhode Island.

By Act of Infant.—In Vermont it is provided by statute that a person adopted while yet a minor may dissent within one year after obtaining his majority, and thereby avoid adoption proceedings. Rev. Laws Vt., § 2539.

By Act of Next Friend.—It was held in Murray v. Barber, 16 R. I. 512, that a child adopted by a decree of the probate court, on a petition alleging abandonment by the natural father, can appeal from said decree, the father acting as next friend for the appeal.

Next of Kin cannot Appeal.—Under a statute authorizing the adopting parent or the person adopted, by his next friend to appeal from a decree of adoption, it was held in Gray v. Gardner, 81 Me. 554, that upon the death of the adopting parent his heirs or next of kin were not authorized to appeal from the decree of adoption. The court said: "Neither of the parties saw fit to appeal at the time the decree was passed. At that time, the petitioner living, it is clear the heirs presumptive had no right of appeal. They were not petitioners, nor could they in any legal sense be the representatives of the petitioner. The adoption of the child would impose no duties or obligations upon them. Nor had they any vested rights as heirs which the adoption would interfere with, nothing in this respect, of the prospect of which it was not entirely competent for the petitioner to deprive them, either by the adoption of an heir or in the various other methods known to the law. Nor are their rights increased by her death. If they are deprived of their inheritance, it is by an act of the ancestor legal and competent for her to perform, and by which they must abide. It is equally clear that they cannot appeal as representatives of the petitioner. Not as heirs, for as such they are acting and must act, if at all, in their own behalf, and for their own interests. Not as administrators, if such they were, for the decree is the result of a completed act of the intestate." See also Wolff's Appeal (Pa., 1888), 13 Atl. Rep. 760; Nugent v. Powell (Wyoming, 1893), 33 Pac. Rep. 23.

Averment of Petition—Estoppel.—Where a petition for adoption states that a man and his wife are residents of a certain county, and they have upon the strength of that representation obtained an order of the county judge of that county consenting to the adoption of a child, the adopting parents would in their lifetime have been estopped to deny its truth in any controversy as to their parental duty to support and care for the child thus adopted by them, and any heirs claiming under them will be equally estopped to deny the fact, after the death of such adopting parents. In re Williams' Estate, 102 Cal. 70.

Character of Proceeding for Revocation of Adoption.—In Van Matre v. Sankey, 148 Ill. 536, the court held that a proceeding for the revocation of an adoption is not of such a summary character that it will not be regarded as res judicata, or as conclusive upon the rights of the parties in the courts of any other state; the application having been made by all the parties interested in the revocation, and with all the material facts before it, the court having proceeded to an adjudication of the questions raised upon their merits.

2. When Natural Parent may Have Decree Revoked.—See statutes of Rhode Island and Vermont. Furgeson v. Jones, 17 Oregon 204, 11 Am. St. Rep. 808.

In Schiltz v. Roenitz, 86 Wis. 31, the court held that a decree of adoption, based upon a petition reciting the abandonment of a child by its father, the father being given no notice of the proceedings or opportunity to defend against the charge of abandonment, was not conclusive against such father, and was no evidence that he had abandoned the child as alleged, and that it was competent for him to attack the adoption proceedings.

In Nugent v. Powell (Wyoming, 1893), 33 Pac. Rep. 23, the court said: "Notwithstanding these proceedings in adoption, the father might at any time since they took place have brought an action for the recovery of the possession or custody of the child, and no

Abuse of Child by Adopting Parents.—Since the best interests of the child are always to be looked after, it would seem that the courts would revoke a decree of adoption on the ground of abuse of the child by its adopting parent, or on the ground that such parent was not a proper person to have the custody of the child.¹

one will contend, or perhaps can successfully contend, that in such case these adoption proceedings would constitute a bar to the father's action, or that they were conclusive upon him."

Interest of Child of Paramount Consideration.—In People v. Erbert, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 396, the court held that where a father has voluntarily suffered the custody of his children to be committed by indentures to third persons, on whom the indentures are binding, the court will not restore them to such father, unless it is shown to be for the benefit of the children to do so.

It is held in Janet v. Cleghorn, 54 Ga. 9, that where parental authority over an infant child is released to another, such release is not revocable without some sufficient legal reason being shown therefor.

Cannot be Revoked during Child's Minority.—It has been held in Pennsylvania, that as the adoption statute of that state contains no provision for a rescission of the contract of adoption, it cannot be revoked. After the child becomes of age he and his adopted parent may agree to rescind, but until then the child cannot consent, nor can any one waive his rights for him. In re Theil, 14 W. N. C. (Pa.) 422.

Probate Court cannot Revoke.—It was held in In re Bush, Petitioner, 47 Kan. 264, that an order of the probate court permitting the adoption of a minor is conclusive, as far as that court is concerned, and that such court can have no further jurisdiction in the matter. See also Rives v. Sneed, 25 Ga. 612.

Decree Not Void because of Mental Weakness of Petitioner.—In Brown v. Brown, 101 Ind. 340, it was held that a judgment upon the petition of a person of unsound mind, praying adoption of a child, is not void, and can only be set aside for cause. It is also held that the proper remedy of a person who asserts that an order directing the adoption of a child is invalid, because of the mental incapacity of the adoptive parent, is in equity; that an unexplained delay of more than ten years will prevent the maintenance of such a suit, as, were it otherwise, it would encourage what equity abhors, sloth and negligence.

Rights of Adoptive Parent to Custody of Child will be Enforced.—In Armitage v. Hoyle, 2 How. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 438, it was held that where a parent had by a duly executed deed disposed of the custody and tuition of his minor child, and the person adopting had accepted the child, an action would lie to enforce the rights of the adopting parent, and that an injunction would be granted restraining the interference of the natural parent, and all persons acting under him, with the custody and management of the child by its adopting parent.

Habeas Corpus.—It was held in Meyers v. Meyers, 32 Ill. App. 189, that an appeal by the natural parent from a decree for the adoption of his child cannot be maintained in the absence of express statutory provision concerning same, and that the only remedy for such parent is by habeas corpus.

Decree Not Rescinded by Subsequent Informal Proceedings.—A decree of adoption fixes the status of both the adopting parent and the child adopted, with all its reciprocal rights and obligations. A subsequent written statement by the adopting parent to the effect that the child's natural mother may have it whenever she desires, does not rescind the decree of adoption. In re Clements, 12 Mo. App. 592.

1. Revocation of Adoption Decree on Account of Abuse of Child.—The mother of an illegitimate child having consented to its adoption, marrying afterwards, attacked the proceedings on the ground that she was not of age when she consented to the adoption of her child, and that such proceedings were therefore void. On appeal the court held that the only question for consideration was, whether the adopting parents were proper persons to have the custody of the child. In rendering its decision the court said: "The only question for our consideration is, Does the evidence establish the fact that the respondents are not proper persons to have the custody, care, and education of said infant? If it does, it is our duty to take such infant from the possession of the respondents and place it in proper hands, looking principally to the future welfare of the infant in so doing. * * * Under such circumstances it would take a strong showing to induce this court to take the child from them for any purpose. While this court would not hesitate to remove the child from their custody if they were satisfied the respondents were not proper persons to bring it up, yet it would require a stronger showing than under many circumstances and conditions to induce us to take the child from persons who adopted it as their own, by permission of the court, at such a tender age when it required so much attention and care, and after they had cared for it for a period of three years and over. * * * We believe these people who have this child are giving it, and will continue to give it, reasonably good care and a reasonably good home. If, at any time in the future, during the infancy of Bessie May, the respondents should fail in their duty to her to such an extent as to render it necessary and proper for this court to interfere in her behalf, we would, upon our attention being called thereto, promptly relieve them of the custody of the child and place it in other hands." In re Bush, 47 Kan. 264.

2. Fraud and Mistake.—Where a decree or order of adoption is obtained by fraud practiced on the court, or by mistake of a material fact, it will be revoked.¹

3. May Not be Attacked Collaterally.—The judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, decreeing the adoption of a child, fixes the status of both the adoptive parent and the child, and is conclusive as against all collateral attacks by parties or their privies.²

In Janes v. Cleghorn, 54 Ga. 9, the court said: "That a contract made by a parent, releasing his parental authority over his child to a third person, may be revoked for good and sufficient legal reasons, we do not doubt, such as bad treatment, want of social standing, and the like, but nothing of that sort is pretended in this case."

1. Fraud Ground for Revocation.—Where a decree of adoption was based upon a petition so framed as to induce the court to believe that the infant was an unfortunate child whose father was unknown and whose mother had abandoned it, and that there was no one interested in the application except the petitioner; whereas the facts were that the child had been placed with the petitioner by her own brother, its father, who was paying for its maintenance, she knowing the whereabouts of her brother at the time she filed the petition, which she did without his knowledge or consent,—it was held that the decree of adoption should be revoked on the ground that misrepresentation and fraud had been practiced upon the court. Booth v. Van Allen, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 401.

In Tucker v. Fisk, 154 Mass. 574, where a decree of adoption was attacked on the ground that the adopting parent was of unsound mind, and that the adopted child had used undue influence upon her, and had practiced fraud upon the court, Morton, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "There would seem to be nothing in the nature of a decree of adoption to take away the power of the probate court to revoke and annul it on the ground that it had been procured by fraud practiced upon the court. It is said, generally, in Waters v. Stickney, 12 Allen (Mass.) 1, 90 Am. Dec. 122, that it is impossible to deny the power of the probate court 'to correct errors arising out of fraud or mistake in its own decrees;' and the same thing is held in substance in Gale v. Nickerson, 144 Mass. 415. There is nothing in the statutes which places a decree of adoption on any different footing in this respect from that of other judgments and decrees of that court. * * * The respondent further objects, that, even if the said Eliza was of unsound mind at the time of the adoption proceedings, the validity of the decree is not thereby affected, because a judgment against an insane person is neither void nor voidable. If we assume that to be so, the answer is that the case proceeds, not on the ground that the decree is to be avoided by reason of the unsoundness of mind of Eliza, but on the ground that by means of that unsoundness, and of the undue influence which he was thereby enabled to gain over her, and his suppression of these and other facts, the respondent was enabled to perpetrate, and did perpetrate, a fraud upon the court, which resulted in a decree of adoption which would not otherwise have been made. It is not a case where, with the facts all before it, the court came to a wrong conclusion, but a case in which by means of the fraudulent conduct and undue influence which the respondent exercised over Eliza, and which he concealed from the court, he procured the entry of the decree in controversy. Edson v. Edson, 108 Mass. 590, 11 Am. Rep. 393."

In Brown v. Brown, 101 Ind. 340, where the next of kin of the adopting parent sought to have a decree of adoption set aside on the ground of fraud, alleging that the adopted child knew that the adopting parent was of unsound mind, but consented to such adoption in order to inherit his property, the court, while plainly holding that fraud practiced on the court would be valid ground for revoking a decree, yet held that there was no fraud in this case, and, therefore, refused to revoke the decree, saying: "The silence of the minor did not operate as a fraud upon the court. It is by no means every wrongful act of a litigant that will authorize the overthrow of a judgment. It is quite well settled that fraud will vitiate a judgment only when it is affirmatively shown that it was practiced upon the court."

Revocation of Decree on Account of Mistake.—In Ex p. Clark, 87 Cal. 638, where the parents consented to the adoption of their child by Jacob Reulein, and the agreement to adopt was signed by David Reulein, and the court rendered the decree of adoption giving the child to Jacob Reulein, in habeas corpus proceedings by the child's natural parents to recover the custody of the child from John D. Reulein and wife, the court held that there was nothing in the record of the adoption proceedings to indicate that the names Jacob Reulein, David Reulein and John D. Reulein referred to one and the same person; that this was such a mistake as would vitiate the adoption proceedings, and it was therefore ordered that the child be remanded to the custody of its natural father and mother.

2. Collateral Attack.—Brown v. Brown, 101 Ind. 340; Gray v. Gardner, 81 Me. 554.

In Sewall v. Roberts, 115 Mass. 262, where the parents of the child to be adopted were dead, upon petition of the guardian of the child the probate court decreed the adoption of the child, and the petitioner assented thereto as guardian. It was held that the fact that no guardian ad litem was appointed, even granting that such appointment should have been made, did not render the decree of adoption void, but voidable only, and that it could not be avoided by a stranger to the proceeding, to the injury of the child.

It was held in Barnard v. Barnard, 119 Ill. 92, that where an order or decree of the county court declared a child to be the adopted child and heir of another, if the court had jurisdiction to act at all, however erroneous its action might be, the decree or order must stand until reversed in some direct proceeding. See also Van Matre v. Sankey, 148 Ill. 536.

It was held in In re Johnson's Estate, 98 Cal. 531, that the failure of the judge to personally examine the child before rendering a decree of adoption, where such child is under the age of twelve years (the age at which its consent is made necessary by statute), does not render such decree void on collateral attack.

In Nugent v. Powell (Wyoming, 1893), 33 Pac. Rep. 23, the court said: "But it does not follow that because the adoption proceedings were not conclusive upon the father, they were not conclusive upon the parties to the proceedings and their privies; on the contrary, we think they are, and so hold." See also People v. Bloedel (Buffalo Super. Ct.), 16 N. Y. Supp. 837; Vanfleet's Collateral Attack, § 408. Compare Ferguson v. Jones, 17 Oregon 204, 11 Am. St. Rep. 808; Lee v. Back, 30 Ind. 148.

1. Seaweed between high and low water mark, which has not been deposited upon the shore and which during flood tide is moved by each rising and receding wave, is adrift within the Massachusetts statutes, although the bottom of the mass may touch the beach. Anthony v. Gifford, 2 Allen (Mass.) 549. See the titles ACCRETION; SEAWEED.

2. Bowen v. Willcox, etc., Sewing Mach. Co., 86 Ill. 12. And in this case it was held that an affidavit of merits appearing in the pleas of a defendant entitled "C D ads. A B" is the same as "A B v. C D," and is properly entitled.

3. Aggravated Assault. (See also the title ASSAULT AND BATTERY.)—Schenault v. State, 10 Tex. App. 411; Henkel v. State, 27 Tex. App. 512; Hall v. State, 16 Tex. App. 10, 49 Am. Rep. 824. These cases were upon the construction of the term adult as used in the definition of aggravated assault.

The burden of proof of the age is on the state. George v. State, 11 Tex. App. 95.

In Schenault v. State, 10 Tex. App. 411, the court said: "The authorities all agree, so far as we are advised, that at common law the word adult signifies a person who has attained the full age of twenty-one years. The word adult seems to have a well-defined meaning, both in law and in common acceptance. Mr. Bouvier defines the meaning of the word as used in the civil law, with which we have no present concern, and says: 'In the common law an adult is considered one of full age.' Mr. Wharton defines the word as signifying 'a person of full age.' Mr. Webster gives as one of the meanings 'one who has reached the years of manhood.' In Raven v. Waite, 1 Swanst. 553, cited by Mr. Bouvier, the term adult and the phrase 'having arrived at the age of twenty-one years' appear to be used interchangeably."

So a boy of seventeen is not an adult within the definition. Galbraith v. State (Tex. App., 1890), 13 S. W. Rep. 607.

Lunatic.—A general order provided that Order 434 should apply to cases in which an adult was interested in the estate as well as an infant, and it was held that the term adult, as there used, did not include a lunatic. Warrnack v. Prieur, 12 Ont. Pr. Rep. 271. In this case the court said: "It was passed to overcome the difficulty pointed out in Fullerton v. Keely, 9 C. L. J. N. S. 54, which followed the unreported case decided by Strong, V.C., of Lloyd v. Burke. That difficulty arose where the combined action of the registrar granting a praecipe decree against adults and of the referee in chambers making a decree against infants had to be invoked in order to procure a complete judgment. The term adult used in the order thus gets its interpretation as meaning one grown up to the age of man, as opposed to 'infant,' meaning one who is under age. There was no intention to use the term so as to include lunatics or persons of unsound mind. These form a class who stand by themselves in the statute book, general orders, and in the rules of court, and they are to be regarded as distinct from infants and adult parties. Order 645 was passed on 10th January, 1879, when a number of other orders were promulgated in which the term adult was used with the meaning of a person competent to act for himself; see Orders 638 and 640. Such is the meaning to be attributed to the term when used in General Order 645. That such is the proper construction is also manifest when the case of a sole defendant, being of unsound mind, is considered. There is no jurisdiction in such a case to award a judgment or decree in chambers."

Females Included in Term.—A statute to prevent the sale of liquor required that the law should be enforced upon the petition of a majority of the adult residents. It was held that adult females, as well as males, might join in the petition. Blackwell v. State, 36 Ark. 178.

I. DEFINITION AND SCOPE—Definition.—To adulterate is to debase by the admixture of foreign materials. Adulteration is the act of corrupting or debasing by the admixture of foreign substances. The term is commonly employed in reference to the act of mixing with articles of food or drink intended for sale other materials of an inferior quality and usually of a more or less hurtful character.¹

Treatment Confined to Adulteration as Criminal Offense.—The following article is confined to adulteration as an indictable offense against the rules or provisions of the common or statute laws, the question of civil liability for selling adulterated articles belonging properly to other titles.²

II. AT COMMON LAW.—At common law it is an indictable offense to mix unwholesome ingredients, such as alum, in bread, or to furnish for prisoners of war bread baked in an unwholesome and insufficient manner and filled with dirt or other unwholesome substances.³ Polluting the drinking water used by a

In Com. v. Hough, 1 Pa. Dist. Rep. 51, the court, by Arnold, J., said: "To adulterate is to corrupt, debase, or make impure by the admixture of baser materials."

To adulterate is to corrupt by some foreign mixture or by intermixing what is less valuable. People v. West, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 162, quoting Worcester's Dict.

Adulteration is the act of corrupting or debasing. The act of mixing something impure or spurious with something pure or genuine, or an inferior article with a superior one of the same kind. Bouv. Law Dict. i. 126.

3. The selling of unwholesome provisions is an offense against public health. 4 Bl. Com. 162.

In Treuve's case, 2 East P. C. 821, where the defendant furnished bread (for the French prisoners of war) filled with dirt, filth, and other unwholesome ingredients, it was held that the giving of any person unwholesome provisions, not fit for man to eat, lucris causa or from malice or deceit, is undoubtedly in itself an indictable offense. See Burnby v. Bollett, 16 M. & W. 644.

In Rex v. Dixon, 3 M. & S. 11, the defendant Dixon was indicted for supplying to the royal military asylum, at Chelsea, a large quantity of bread not fit for the food of man, which he well knew, etc. It appeared that many of the loaves were strongly impregnated with alum, and that large pieces of crude alum were found in them. The defendant was found guilty, and a new trial was refused, the court saying that alum being perilous to health in the form used, it was immaterial that if used in certain quantities it was not noxious, but wholesome.

It is an indictable offense at common law for a contractor who has agreed to furnish bread made of good marketable English or foreign wheat, to furnish bread not made wholly of good marketable English or foreign wheat, but containing divers noxious and unwholesome ingredients. Reg. v. Baldock, 2 Chitty's Crim. Law. 556.

family is an indictable offense; and, in brief, to mix unwholesome substances in anything intended for the food of man is an offense at common law.¹

III. BY STATUTE.—Statutes prohibiting the sale of adulterated meat, butter, milk, and liquors, are intended for the protection of the public health, and are within the police power of the state; such statutes have been enacted in England and in several of the United States.²

1. Throwing Carcass into Well.—To throw into a well the carcass of an animal which tainted and corrupted the drinking water used by a family, was held to be an indictable offense at common law. State v. Buckman, 8 N. H. 205.

Selling Meat Not Sound and Wholesome.—It is an indictable offense at common law to cause to be publicly exposed for sale, as sound and wholesome meat, meat known not to be sound and wholesome, Reg. v. Stevenson, 3 F. & F. 106; or knowingly to send such meat to market, Reg. v. Jarvis, 3 F. & F. 108. But a person is not indictable for sending to a meat salesman meat he knows to be unfit for human food if he does not know that it is to be sold as human food. Reg. v. Crawley, 3 F. & F. 109.

An indictment charging a miller with receiving good barley to be ground at his mill and delivering a mixture of oat and barley meal different from the product of the barley, and musty and unwholesome, there being no allegation that the meal was to be used for human food, does not charge an indictable offense. Rex v. Haynes, 4 M. & S. 214.

Selling Unwholesome Provisions.—Knowingly selling unwholesome provisions is a misdemeanor at common law. State v. Norton, 2 Ired. (N. Car.) 40; State v. Smith, 3 Hawks (N. Car.) 378.

Ancient Statute.—Although selling unwholesome provisions was indictable at common law, it is to be noted that there is a very ancient statute, 51 Henry III., prohibiting the sale of corrupted wine, contagious or unwholesome flesh, or flesh that is bought of a Jew. 4 Bl. Com. 162; Burnby v. Bollett, 16 M. & W. 644. But this statute seems to have been enacted merely to aggravate the punishment, for prosecutions under it were rare. State v. Smith, 3 Hawks (N. Car.) 378.

Not Necessary that Sickness Result from Using Unwholesome Meat.—Under an indictment for selling diseased beef it is not necessary to show that actual sickness was caused by eating it. Dealers in tainted provisions have no right to palm off their noxious articles until those who eat them are prostrated by actual sickness. Goodrich v. People, 19 N. Y. 577.

Knowledge or Means of Knowledge Necessary.—In Hunter v. State, 1 Head (Tenn.) 160, the court held that if the pork in question was unsound, and the defendant might have known it by ordinary care and diligence on the part of himself or those employed by him in preparing it for market, he should be convicted, whether in point of fact he knew it or not. But if the pork was unsound and the defendant did not know it, nor could have known it by ordinary and proper prudence and care, he would not be guilty.

Sale of Food and Drugs Act—Adulteration by Abstraction.—On a prosecution for a violation of the English Sale of Food and Drugs Act of 1875, providing for the punishment of any one who adulterates milk, drugs, or liquors, and also providing that "no person shall, with the intent that the same may be sold in its altered state without notice, abstract from an article of food any part of it, so as to affect injuriously its quality, substance, or nature, and no person shall sell any article so altered without making disclosure of the alteration, under a penalty in each case not exceeding twenty pounds," it is sufficient to prove that an article of food has been adulterated by the abstraction of some part of it, and sold in its adulterated state. Dyke v. Gower (1892), 1 Q. B. 220.

Adulterated Tea.—The appellant, a tea dealer, was convicted under Stat. 35 and 36 Vict., c. 74, § 2, for selling as unadulterated "green tea" which was adulterated. An analysis showed that the tea was painted and faced with gypsum and Prussian blue, put in for the purpose of coloring it. The tea was sold in the same state in which it comes from abroad. Tea which is imported from China as green tea and generally known as such in the tea trade is painted and faced in this manner, but this practice is not known to the public. Pure green tea, though not known generally in the trade as green tea, is imported from Japan. It was held that the conviction was right. Roberts v. Egerton, L. R. 9 Q. B. 494.

A Person Who Sells Mustard Mixed with Flour and Turmeric Acid, declaring at the time that he does not sell it as unadulterated mustard, is guilty of no offense against the English statute for the prevention of adulteration of food and drugs. Pope v. Tearle, L. R. 9 C. P. 499.

Alcoholic Liquors—Selling Gin under Proof, with Notice.—A publican who sold gin which was 40½ degrees under proof, but who gave notice at the time that all spirits sold by him were sold as diluted spirits and that no alcoholic strength was guaranteed, was held not to be guilty of a violation of section 6 of the English Sale of Food and Drugs Act of 1875. Gage v. Elsey, 10 Q. B. Div. 518.

Selling Watered Gin.—Where a publican sold gin containing 43.15 per cent of water, but not injurious to health, it was held that whether the mixture was what a customer buying gin would reasonably expect or not was a question for the magistrate, and that there was sufficient evidence to justify conviction. Webb v. Knight, 2 Q. B. Div. 530; Pashler v. Stevenitt, 35 L. T. N. S. 862.

English Customs Act—Mixing Strong and Weak Beer.—The mixing of two kinds of beer amounts to a dilution of the stronger beer, under section 7, subsection 2, of the English Customs and Inland Revenue Act of 1885. Crofts v. Taylor, 19 Q. B. Div. 524.

Tennessee—Oath against Adulterating Al-

Oleomargarine.—The manufacture and sale of oleomargarine is regulated by statute in a great many of our states, and in some states its manufacture or sale as a substitute for dairy butter is prohibited altogether.¹

coholic Liquors.—The laws of Tennessee (§ 4, c. 1, Acts 1859-60) require any person or persons who sell or offer to sell spirituous or alcoholic liquors to take an oath and give a bond not to adulterate them. Levi v. State, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 289. This statute is not complied with by taking an oath not to mix with such liquors any poisonous substance whatever. Hall v. State, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 574.

Druggists, etc., Allowed to Adulterate Liquors.—Under section 6 of the same act, druggists, physicians, and persons engaged in the mechanical arts are allowed to mix and adulterate liquors for medical or mechanical purposes. Under this section, a druggist may furnish mixed or adulterated spirits upon the prescription of a physician. Newman v. State, 7 Lea (Tenn.) 617.

But under a statute similar in its provisions it has been held that druggists and physicians are not exempted from taking the oath against adulteration. State v. Ferguson, 72 Mo. 297.

Pennsylvania—Any Adulteration Impairing Value of Liquors Prohibited.—Under the laws of Pennsylvania no recovery can be had upon a sale of liquors where there is any impurity, vitiation, or adulteration which impairs the value of the liquors in suit to the least extent. Clohesy v. Rosdelheim, 99 Pa. St. 56.

Nebraska—Sale or Gift of Adulterated Liquors Forbidden.—The disposing of adulterated liquors by gift or sale is forbidden by section 13 of the Nebraska Liquor Law, and where an applicant for a license to sell liquor has within a year sold adulterated liquor he is not entitled to a license. Livingston v. Corey, 33 Neb. 366.

Butter—New York.—In the case of the People v. Mahaney, 41 Hun (N. Y.) 26, the court held that the fact that the defendant sold at his grocery an article, representing it to be butter, which contained about seventy-five per cent of butter and twenty-five per cent or thereabouts of foreign matter, showed him to have been guilty of a violation of the act which prohibited the sale, not only of various kinds of manufactured butter, but of any substance not butter and represented to be butter.

Ohio.—It is within the power of the legislature to prohibit the sale of substances having a semblance of butter or cheese, but not wholly made from pure milk or cream, unless each package of such substance shall have plainly stamped upon it the name of each article used in or entering into the composition of such article, and it is no defense to the indictment for selling impure provisions to show that they were patented. Palmer v. State, 39 Ohio St. 236, 48 Am. Rep. 429.

Lard—Iowa—Compound Lard Act Constitutional.—An act requiring that all compound lard should have the words "compound" lard, together with the name and proportions of the ingredients composing the same, upon the top or outer side of the package containing the same, is valid. State v. Snow, 81 Iowa 642.

Minnesota.—The laws of Minnesota require that the seller of any article made as a substitute for or designed to take the place of lard shall disclose to the purchaser, by label or card, the nature and ingredients of the article which he offers for sale. State v. Aslesen, 50 Minn. 5.

Selling Diseased Flesh—Knowledge Essential.—In Teague v. State, 25 Tex. App. 577, it was held that in order to convict one of selling the flesh of a diseased hog, it was necessary to show not only that the hog was diseased, but that the defendant knew the fact, and the conviction was reversed because the evidence failed to show that the defendant knew the hog to be diseased.

The gist of the offence of selling diseased meat under Massachusetts Revised Statutes, c. 131, § 1, consists in the guilty knowledge or evil intent of a party in selling meat which he knows to be unfit for food. Com. v. Boynton, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 499.

1. Oleomargarine—Validity of Act Prohibiting Sale.—An act prohibiting the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine or any article in imitation of butter and cheese, is within the police power of the state. Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678; Walker v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 699; In re Brosnahan, 18 Fed. Rep. 62; Butler v. Chambers, 36 Minn. 69; State v. Addington, 77 Mo. 110, 12 Mo. App. 214; Powell v. Com., 114 Pa. St. 268; Com. v. Shirley, 152 Pa. St. 170.

Such acts are not unconstitutional as regulating interstate commerce. State v. Addington, 77 Mo. 110; Com. v. Huntley, 156 Mass. 236; In re Brosnahan, 18 Fed. Rep. 62.

Nor do these acts violate the rights of patentees. In re Brosnahan, 18 Fed. Rep. 62. See Palmer v. State, 39 Ohio St. 236, 48 Am. Rep. 429.

But in New York, on the other hand, it has been held that an act prohibiting the manufacture or sale as an article of food of any substitute for butter or cheese produced from pure, unadulterated milk or cream, is unconstitutional, inasmuch as the prohibition is not limited to unwholesome or simulated substitutes, but absolutely prohibits the manufacture or sale of any compound designed to be used as a substitute for butter or cheese, however wholesome, valuable, or cheap the compound may be, and however openly and fairly its character may be avowed and published. People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, reversing 35 Hun (N. Y.) 528; Waterbury v. Eagan (City Ct.), 23 N. Y. Supp. 115.

Validity of Acts Regulating the Sale of Oleomargarine.—The power of the legislature to pass a law regulating the sale of oleomargarine is too plain to be questioned. Com. v. Huntley, 156 Mass. 236; Pierce v. State, 63 Md. 592; McAllister v. State, 72 Md. 390; Bainbridge v. State, 30 Ohio St. 264; People v. Arensberg, 103 N. Y. 388. See Carter v. District Ct., 49 N. J. L. 600; State v. Newton, 49 N. J. L. 617.

Construction of Statutes—Placard Required on Wagons Selling Oleomargarine.—The Massachusetts statute of 1891, c. 412, § 4, providing a penalty for the sale of oleomargarine from a wagon "not having then and there on both sides of said vehicle a placard in uncondensed Gothic letters, not less than three inches in length, 'Li-

Milk.—The statutes of a great many of our states make the sale of adulterated milk, or of milk containing less than a certain per cent of milk solids, a misdemeanor; under these statutes it is immaterial what reduced the milk below the required standard, or whether the foreign matter is or is not injurious to health.¹

censed to sell oleomargarine," is not complied with by having such a placard upon the inside of a covered wagon from which oleomargarine is being sold. Com. v. Crane, 158 Mass. 218.

Restaurants Selling Oleomargarine must Give Notice.—Section 5 of the same chapter, which requires every person who furnishes to a guest in a restaurant or hotel oleomargarine or butterine instead of butter, to notify him that the substance furnished is not butter, is not complied with by having in the restaurant a sign reading "Butterine Used Only Here," and by having the words "Only Fine Butterine Used Here," printed on the bill of fare, if the guest does not read the signs or examine the bill of fare. Com. v. Stewart, 159 Mass. 113.

Selling from Broken Packages.—Where oleomargarine is exposed for sale in original packages, under a law requiring the top and bottom of the package to be plainly marked, it is not a violation of the law to sell from a package from which the cover has been temporarily removed. Com. v. Bean, 148 Mass. 172.

A Regulation Prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the oleomargarine act, for carrying it into effect, cannot be considered as a "thing required by law," in the carrying on or conducting the business of a wholesale dealer in oleomargarine, in such manner as that its violation should become a criminal offense punishable under section 18 of the act, inasmuch as it is necessary that a sufficient statutory authority should exist for declaring any act or omission a criminal offense, and the statutory authority in such a case is insufficient. U. S. v. Eaton, 144 U. S. 677.

But where the law requires dealers to pack oleomargarine in suitable packages, marked and branded as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, a defendant may be convicted for failure to comply with the regulations of the commissioner. U. S. v. Ford, 50 Fed. Rep. 467.

New York—Must Prove Intention to Sell as Butter.—In order to convict one of the violation of sections 18 and 19 of c. 183, New York Laws of 1885, it is necessary to prove not only that the defendant manufactured the article in question, by mixing animal fats or animal or vegetable oils with natural milk, cream, or butter, but also that he intended to sell the product for butter and not for just what it was, oleomargarine or butterine. People v. Dold, 63 Hun (N. Y.) 583.

Sale from Broken Package Imported into State.—A sale of oleomargarine from a broken package, imported into the state, is a violation of the Pennsylvania statute prohibiting the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine. Com. v. Paul, 148 Pa. St. 559.

1. Cream Included in the Term Milk.—Cream to which boric acid has been added is within the statute which makes it an offense to have in one's possession, with intent to sell the same, "milk to which a foreign substance has been added"; milk being used as a general term in a sense broad enough to include cream. Com. v. Gordon, 159 Mass. 8.

Milk below a Certain Standard Deemed Adulterated.—A statute providing that milk containing less than a certain per cent of milk solids or less than a certain per cent of milk fats shall be deemed adulterated is valid and constitutional. State v. Smyth, 14 R. I. 100, 51 Am. Rep. 344.

Kind of Foreign Matter Used in Adulterating Immaterial.—It is immaterial whether the foreign matter is or is not injurious to health; the addition of pure water is punishable under the statutes. Com. v. Schaffner, 146 Mass. 512; Com. v. Waite, 11 Allen (Mass.) 264.

It is immaterial, in a prosecution for selling adulterated milk, in what manner the quantity of milk solids has been reduced below thirteen per cent, if the intent is to sell the milk as pure milk, not as skimmed milk. Com. v. Bowers, 140 Mass. 483. See Com. v. Keenan, 139 Mass. 193.

But under the Massachusetts statute an indictment charging the defendant with having in his possession milk to which water has been added, is not sustained by proving that the milk is below the legal standard, without proof of the admixture of foreign articles. Com. v. Luscumb, 130 Mass. 42.

If below Standard, Wholesomeness Immaterial.—Where the law requires that all milk sold shall come up to a certain standard of richness, the court cannot take judicial notice whether milk below the standard is or is not unwholesome or dangerous to public health. If the legislature has power to fix a standard, it must judge whether or not milk below that standard is wholesome. State v. Campbell, 64 N. H. 404.

City Ordinances.—An ordinance prohibiting the adulteration of milk is authorized by a city charter, making it the duty of the council to prevent the sale of adulterated food. State v. Stone, 46 La. Ann. 147; State v. Labatut, 39 La. Ann. 514, 18 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 565; State v. Fourcade, 45 La. Ann. 718.

A city ordinance prohibiting the sale of milk containing less than twelve per cent of milk solids is a valid exercise of the police power, Kansas City v. Cook, 38 Mo. App. 660; and within the scope of sanitary regulations, Polinsky v. People, 73 N. Y. 65.

Selling Skimmed Milk to Butter and Cheese Factories.—An act providing that no person or persons shall sell, supply, or bring to be manufactured, to any butter or cheese factory, any milk diluted with water, or any unclean, impure, unhealthy, adulterated, or unwholesome milk, does not extend so far as to make it criminal for the owner of a cheese factory supplied with milk exclusively by himself, to furnish milk diluted with water. People v. West, 106 N. Y. 293.

An act to protect butter and cheese manufacturing is not intended to apply to a person making butter and cheese on his own account, but to such factories as are conducted on a joint or

Skimmed Milk.—Under some of these statutes it is an offense to sell skimmed milk unless it is sold as such, and from a can or vessel marked "skimmed milk."¹

Action for Penalty.—Some statutes, in addition to making the sale of adulterated milk a misdemeanor, also provide for the recovery by a specified officer of a penalty in a civil action against one violating the provisions of the act.²

Sampling Milk.—The statutes of several of the states provide that certain public officers may enter places where milk is sold, and take and cause to be analyzed samples of the milk sold, and that the result of such analysis shall be admissible in evidence. The decisions construing such enactments are collected in the notes.³ co-operative plan. Phillips v. Meade, 75 Ill. 334.

Posting Statute—Ohio.—The requirement of the second section of the Ohio Act of March 14, 1871 (68 Ohio L. 39), prohibiting the adulteration of milk, that each manufacturer of cheese or butter shall post a copy of the act in the receiving-room of his factory, is directory only, and a failure to do so will not exculpate one guilty of selling adulterated or skimmed milk to the factory contrary to the provisions of section 1 of said act. Bainbridge v. State, 30 Ohio St. 265.

Sanitary Code of New York City.—The keeping and offering for sale of adulterated milk is a violation of section 45 of the sanitary code of the city of New York. People v. Justices, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 214.

New York—Bringing Adulterated Milk into City.—The offense of bringing into the city impure or adulterated milk for sale may be complete without either selling or offering it for sale. Polinsky v. People, 73 N. Y. 65.

Massachusetts—Registered Milk Dealers Only.—In order to convict one of selling adulterated milk under Massachusetts General Statutes, c. 49, § 151, it is necessary to aver with certainty and precision that the name of the defendant was recorded as a dealer in milk in the books of the inspector. Com. v. O'Donnell, 1 Allen (Mass.) 593.

Experts.—Farmers' and dairymen are competent witnesses to testify whether milk has been mixed with water or not. Lane v. Wilcox, 55 Barb. (N. Y.) 615.

In an action for damages for the adulteration of milk furnished by the defendants under contract, where an expert testified as to the results of his analysis of certain samples of the milk, it was held that the defendant might, on cross-examination, ask for the results of the analysis of other samples of milk furnished by the plaintiffs. Michigan Condensed Milk Co. v. Wilcox, 78 Mich. 431.

1. Regulations as to Skimmed Milk.—In Pennsylvania the law permits the sale of skimmed milk if it is sold from cans or vessels on which the words "skimmed milk" are printed in letters not less than one inch long. Com. v. Hough, 1 Pa. Dist. Rep. 51.

In New York, by cc. 183 and 458 of the Statutes of 1885, the keeping of skimmed milk for sale in the county where it is produced is not an offense so long as the same is not sold as pure milk; and where the evidence does not show whether the milk taken for analysis was taken from a can containing skimmed milk or from a can containing pure milk, a conviction cannot be sustained. People v. Thompson (Supreme Ct.), 14 N. Y. Supp. 819.

In Massachusetts it is not an offense to sell skimmed milk which is not of the standard quality of pure milk, from cans marked "skimmed milk," and it is not necessary for the buyer to have knowledge that the milk is skimmed, provided the vessel containing it is duly marked. Com. v. Smith, 149 Mass. 9.

But it is an offense against the laws of Massachusetts to sell skimmed milk to which water has been added. Com. v. Wetherbee, 153 Mass. 159.

In Com. v. Tobias, 141 Mass. 129, the court, by Field, J., said: "The construction we give to the Pub. Stat. c. 57, §§ 5, 6, 7, and 9, is that these sections prohibit the sale, etc., of milk containing 'more than eighty-seven per cent of watery fluid,' or 'less than thirteen per cent of milk solids,' unless it is sold, not as pure milk, but as skimmed milk, and out of a vessel, can, or package marked as required by section 7; that, on such a charge, it is immaterial what is the cause of the excess of watery fluid, or of the deficiency of milk solids; that the sale, etc., of milk 'to which water or any foreign substance has been added, or milk produced from cows fed on the refuse of distilleries, or from sick or diseased cows,' is prohibited, whether it is sold as skimmed milk or pure milk, and whether it contains more or less than thirteen per cent of milk solids; and that the sale of skimmed milk as pure milk is prohibited, even if it contains more than thirteen per cent of milk solids, and is prohibited in all cases, unless it is sold as skimmed milk and out of a vessel, can, or package marked as required by section 7."

2. People v. Briggs, 114 N. Y. 56.

Preponderance of Evidence Sufficient.—In an action to recover the penalty under the statutes prohibiting the manufacture, possession, and sale of products made from animal fat or animal and vegetable oils, designed to take the place of natural butter or cheese, proof by a preponderance of evidence is sufficient, and it is not necessary to prove the act charged beyond a reasonable doubt. People v. Briggs, 114 N. Y. 56.

3. Right to Take Samples Statutory.—The right to take samples of milk without the consent of the owner can only be justified by an act of the legislature regulating the business which otherwise might become injurious to the public health. But an intention on the part of the legislature that the inspectors should have the right to delegate their powers to other persons ought not to be inferred from equivocal phrases. An agent of a milk inspector, not acting under the direction of the inspector, has no right to take samples of milk against the will of the owner. Com. v. Smith, 141 Mass. 135.

Other Articles.—The adulteration of vinegar, olive oil, honey, maple sugar, cigarettes, confectionery, and other articles, is prohibited by statutes in several of the states of the Union.¹

Mode of Proof Provided by Statute Not Exclusive.—The fact that the law provides a somewhat unusual mode of proof of adulteration by means of the record of analyses of tests made, does not exclude other appropriate modes of proof which existed before. Com. v. Spear, 143 Mass. 172.

In cases where the milk analyzed has not been taken under the provisions of the statute, the competency of evidence is to be determined by the common law, and the testimony of any person who has sufficient skill to analyze milk, and who has analyzed some of the milk shown to have been sold by the defendant, is admissible. Com. v. Holt, 146 Mass. 38.

Act Constitutional.—An act which virtually confines the testimony to an analysis of the samples which are destroyed in the process of analysis is constitutional. State v. Groves, 15 R. I. 208.

Obtaining Sample without Disclosing Official Character.—The Massachusetts statute of 1886, c. 318, § 1, gives collectors of samples of milk power to enter places where milk is kept and to take samples for analysis; and section 3 of the same act, requiring a sealed sample to be left with the owner if desired, does not apply to a case where the inspector buys a sample without disclosing that he is an inspector, and the defendant may be convicted on proof that his milk was below the legal standard. Com. v. Coleman, 157 Mass. 460.

It is not necessary, where a sample of milk in course of delivery is procured for analysis under section 3 of the English Sale of Food and Drugs Act Amendment Act 1879, for the officer procuring such sample to notify the seller or his agent of his intention to have the sample analyzed in order to deliver to the seller or his agent a portion of the sample. Rouch v. Hall, 6 Q. B. Div. 17.

Portion to be Kept and Delivered to Owner.—The Massachusetts statute of 1886 provides that a portion of a sample of milk taken for analysis shall, if the person taking the same be requested so to do, be sealed and delivered to the owner. This provision impliedly repealed the former enactment on the subject. Com. v. Kennesson, 143 Mass. 418.

The provision of the statute requiring all samples of milk to be sealed is not complied with by simply placing wax on top of the cork, not extending it over the nose of the bottle. Com. v. Lockhardt, 144 Mass. 132.

The clause of the Massachusetts statute requiring a portion of the sample of milk taken for inspection to be kept and delivered to the defendant on request is directory, and does not form a condition precedent to the use of the testimony of the inspector. Com. v. Holt, 146 Mass. 38.

Samples Taken from Lower Part of Can.—In a prosecution for selling adulterated milk to a cheese factory, evidence that the milk has not been watered or skimmed, and that the sample analyzed was drawn from the lower part of the can and was not a fair sample of the milk, is admissible. People v. Hodnett, 68 Hun (N. Y.) 341, 22 N. Y. Supp. 809.

Analysis Made after Lapse of a Year—Evidence of a test made with defendant's milk, which he is charged to have adulterated, is inadmissible as against the defendant if such test is made nearly a year after the sale of the milk. Stearns v. Ingraham, 1 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 218.

Test by Lactometer.—In support of an indictment which alleges that the defendant "did unlawfully keep, offer for sale, and sell" adulterated milk, an inspector of milk who in a great many instances has used a lactometer for the purpose of testing the quality and purity of milk, may testify to the result of an experiment made by him with the same lactometer upon the milk in question, although no evidence is offered as to the character of the instrument. Com. v. Nichols, 10 Allen (Mass.) 199.

Certificate of Analysis, when Admissible in Evidence.—A certificate of the result of an analysis of milk, by a sworn inspector appointed under the Massachusetts statute of 1864, c. 122, is admissible in evidence in a criminal prosecution under that statute, provided he also testifies at the trial to the same facts which are stated therein; and in such case the admission of the certificate in evidence before he testifies furnishes no ground for a new trial, after a verdict of guilty. Com. v. Waite, 11 Allen (Mass.) 264.

Laws 1893, c. 22, p. 125); Missouri Statutes (Laws 1891, p. 218); New Hampshire Statutes (Laws 1891, c. 39, p. 333); Pennsylvania Statutes (Laws 1891, No. 225, p. 297); Vermont Statutes (Laws 1890, No. 52, p. 62); Wisconsin Statutes (Laws 1891, c. 394, p. 325); Com. v. Chase, 125 Mass. 202.

The Possession of Adulterated Teas for the purposes of sale to the general public is a nuisance. Health Dept. v. Purdon, 99 N. Y. 237.

Ohio—Power of Dairy and Food Commissioner.—Where the Dairy and Food Commissioner is authorized to enforce all laws against the adulteration of food, he has power to point out such matters as may be necessary to inform dealers that certain vinegar was manufactured and sold in violation of the law, and that persons dealing therein will be punished according to law. Williams v. McNeal, 7 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 280.

New York—Adulteration of Food and Drugs—Proof of Poison Essential.—An indictment for a violation of the New York statute to prevent the adulteration of food and drugs, passed May 28, 1881, is not sustained by proof that the defendant sold canned peas containing copper, unless it is shown that the copper contained in the peas was poison, proof that the peas sold contained poison being essential to warrant a conviction. People v. Bischoff (Supreme Ct.), 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 581.

Intent.—Under the statutes prohibiting the sale of adulterated milk or butter or other adulterated articles, it has been held that criminal intent is not an essential element of the offense.¹ But it is necessary generally to prove an intent to sell,² and under some statutes an intent to sell as food.³

1. Guilty Intent—Milk.—Statutes providing that "whoever sells or keeps, or offers for sale, adulterated milk, or milk to which water or other foreign substance has been added," shall be punished, etc., have been held to throw the risk upon the seller of knowing that the article he offers for sale is not adulterated, and it is not necessary in an indictment under such a statute to allege or prove criminal intent or guilty knowledge. Com. v. Faren, 9 Allen (Mass.) 489; Com. v. Nichols, 10 Allen (Mass.) 199; Com. v. Waite, 11 Allen (Mass.) 264; Com. v. Smith, 103 Mass. 444; Com. v. Warren, 160 Mass. 533; Com. v. Vieth, 155 Mass. 442; People v. Schaeffer, 41 Hun (N. Y.) 23; People v. Cipperly, 101 N. Y. 634; People v. Kibler, 106 N. Y. 321; People v. Eddy (Supreme Ct.), 12 N. Y. Supp. 628; State v. Smith, 10 R. I. 258. See Com. v. Evans, 132 Mass. 11.

Oleomargarine.—The same rule that no criminal intent is necessary, has been held to apply under an act forbidding the sale of oleomargarine or other imitation of dairy products unless express notice be given to the purchaser. State v. Newton, 50 N. J. L. 549; Com. v. Gray, 150 Mass. 327.

Other Articles of Food.—In Fitzpatrick v. Kelly, L. R. 8 Q. B. 337, under a statute against selling as unadulterated any article of food or drink which is adulterated, and imposing a penalty for so doing, it was held that there need not be an express representation or statement that the article was unadulterated.

Tobacco.—In Reg. v. Woodrow, 15 M. & W. 404, a dealer in and retailer of tobacco was held liable to the penalty imposed by statute for having in his possession adulterated tobacco, although he had purchased it as genuine and had no knowledge or cause to suspect it was not so.

Tea.—One may be convicted of selling adulterated green tea, under Stat. 35 and 36 Vict., c. 74, although he did not know that the tea was adulterated. Roberts v. Egerton, L. R. 9 Q. B. 494.

Wine.—To convict one of violating the act making it a misdemeanor to sell adulterated wines, it is not necessary to prove that he knew the wine to be adulterated. Altschul v. State, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 214. See also the title INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Statute Requiring Knowledge.—Where the statute requires knowledge on the part of the seller, the case is, of course, different. Dilley v. People, 4 Ill. App. 52; Com. v. Flannelly, 15 Gray (Mass.) 195; Com. v. Smith, 103 Mass. 444; Sanchez v. State, 27 Tex. App. 14; Cantee v. State (Tex. App., 1889), 10 S. W. Rep. 757.

Evidence of Similar Transaction.—Upon the trial of an indictment for knowingly delivering skimmed milk to a factory to be manufactured into cheese, with intent to defraud, evidence of transactions of the same kind, other than that relied upon for a conviction, near the same time, is admissible for the purpose of showing guilty knowledge, on the part of the accused, that the milk, for delivering which a conviction is sought, was skimmed milk. Bainbridge v. State, 30 Ohio St. 265.

2. Intent to Sell.—In New York, to authorize a conviction under c. 467 of the Laws of 1862 it was necessary to aver and prove that the milk was adulterated with a view of offering it for sale or exchange, and a charge that the defendant had adulterated milk, without stating the object of such adulteration, was insufficient. People v. Fauerback, 5 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 311.

Evidence that the defendant was on a wagon with a license number on it and containing milk cans, from one of which was taken adulterated milk, is competent on the issue that he was in possession of the milk with intent to sell it. Com. v. Rowell, 146 Mass. 128.

The exposing of oleomargarine, unmarked, with other pure butter or groceries, upon the shelves or counter of a salesroom, is an act from which an intent to sell may be inferred in the absence of rebutting evidence. State v. Dunbar, 13 Oregon 591.

At the trial of a complaint under the Massachusetts Pub. Stat., c. 57, § 5, alleging that the defendant had in his possession adulterated milk, with intent unlawfully to sell the same, the evidence showed that a wagon with the defendant's name and a number on it was standing upon a public street in a city at an early hour of the morning; that the defendant's servant was on the wagon, and there were several eight-quart cans in the wagon; that a collector of samples in the employ of the inspector of milk for the city took a sample of milk from one of the cans, which was not marked "skimmed milk;" and that an analysis of the milk taken showed that it was below the legal standard. It was held that there was evidence of an intent on the part of the defendant to sell the milk, which was properly submitted to the jury. Com. v. Smith, 143 Mass. 169.

In Rhode Island the fact of having milk of the prohibited quality in possession without an intent to sell or exchange it is not punishable. State v. Smyth, 14 R. I. 100.

Sale in Restaurant.—Furnishing oleomargarine to a customer as a part of a meal ordered by the latter is sufficient to convict a restaurant keeper of a sale of oleomargarine under § 3, Act of May 21, 1885, P. L. 22. Com. v. Miller, 131 Pa. St. 118.

Evidence of a sale, in the defendant's café, of a glass of adulterated milk to be drunk on the premises, is sufficient to convict him under the Massachusetts Statute of 1886, c. 318, § 2. Com. v. Vieth, 155 Mass. 442; Com. v. Warren, 160 Mass. 533.

3. In order to convict a person of violating the Pennsylvania Oleomargarine Act of April 21, 1885, P. L. 22, it is necessary to show that he sold the oleomargarine as an article of food. If it was sold for some other purpose, as, for instance, for wagon grease, it would not be a violation of the law. Com. v. Schollenberger, 153 Pa. St. 625; Com. v. Callahan, 1 Pa. Dist. Rep. 437.

Master's Liability for Act of Servant.—The criminal responsibility of the master for the acts of his servant is here, as under other statutes of a like character, a question upon which the courts are not in accord.¹

1. Master's Responsibility for Act of Servant.—Where the master had sampled the can from which the adulterated milk was sold, and the servant had afterwards added water to the can, although there was no evidence of any connivance on the part of the master, it was held that the master was rightly convicted as the seller of the milk, though evidence that the adulteration was contrary to his instructions might have been admitted by the magistrate in mitigation of the penalty. Brown v. Foot, 61 L. J. Mag. Cas. 110. Compare Kearley v. Tonge, 60 L. J. Mag. Cas. 159.

A master may be held criminally liable for an inadvertent sale of adulterated or inferior milk, or of imitation butter, made by his servant or agent, in the course of his employment, in violation of the statute. Com. v. Gray, 150 Mass. 327; Com. v. Warren, 160 Mass. 533; Com. v. Vieth, 155 Mass. 442.

But in State v. Smith, 10 R. I. 258, it was held that in order to charge the master, where the milk is found in possession of a servant, there should be evidence, in addition to the proof of possession for sale or exchange by the servant, that the servant in having it so for sale or exchange was acting for and in pursuance of the will of the master; and that where there was such proof the master might be convicted, for in such a case the possession of the servant is, in law, the possession of the master. I. BY THE COMMON LAW—1. Definition.—Adultery, by the common law, is criminal conversation with a man's wife. The woman must be married; she must be another man's wife; and whoever, married or single, has illicit intercourse with her, becomes guilty of adultery.¹

Reason of Rule.—The common law concerned itself with the act of adultery only as it tended to expose an innocent husband to maintain another man's children, and having them succeed to his inheritance. Hence adultery was limited to criminal conversation with a married woman; the connection of a married man with a single woman does not, by the common law, make him guilty of the offense.²

2. Not Indictable.—Adultery was not an indictable offense at common law,³ except, indeed, when open and notorious, amounting to a public nuisance.⁴

3. A Civil Injury.—It was considered to be only a private wrong, for which the offender was answerable to the injured husband in a civil action for exemplary damages.⁵

II. BY THE CANON LAW—1. Definition.—By the canon or ecclesiastical law adultery was sexual connection between a man and a woman, of whom one at least was lawfully married to a third person. The ecclesiastical law regarded adultery as a sin arising out of the marriage relation. And, as a violation of the marriage vow, it was equally great whether the offender was male or female. Hence the offense was broader than at common law, and was committed by a married man having connection with a single woman.⁶ But the term "adulterer" was never applied by the spiritual courts to a person who was unmarried.⁷

2. An Ecclesiastical Offense.—Adultery was in England punishable in the ecclesiastical courts.⁸

3. A Cause for Divorce.—And the ecclesiastical courts recognized adultery as a ground for divorce.⁹

III. UNDER STATUTES MAKING ADULTERY A CRIME—1. In General.—In the United States, commencing at an early date, statutes have from time to time been enacted which, by prescribing a punishment for the offense, have made adultery a crime.¹⁰

"Noah Webster defines it to be the violation of the marriage bed; a crime or a civil injury which introduces or may introduce into a family a spurious offspring. Such would seem to have been the more ancient and common meaning attached to the term 'adultery.'" Rice, J., in State v. Weatherby, 43 Me. 258, 69 Am. Dec. 59.

And therefore, in the United States, except as it is made a crime by statutory enactment, adultery is not indictable. Delany v. People, 10 Mich. 241; State v. Brunson, 2 Bailey (S. So it seems that in the United States acts of adultery may be punished, under certain circumstances, as a public nuisance. See State v. Moore, 1 Swan (Tex.) 136; State v. Smith, 32 Tex. 167.

As an Offense against Public Decency.—Adultery is not made indictable as an offense against public decency by charging that the defendants lived "in open lewdness, whoredom, and adultery." As an act of adultery, the offense is but adultery, whether it is perpetrated openly or covertly. State v. Brunson, 2 Bailey (S. Car.) 149.

10. In Indiana a statute declaring that "crimes and misdemeanors shall be defined

2. What Constitutes.—As to what constitutes the crime of adultery aimed at by these statutes, the cases arising under them, in some respects, show an irreconcilable conflict.¹

a. UNDER STATUTES NOT DEFINING THE OFFENSE.—These statutory enactments against adultery have quite generally omitted to state of what the crime shall consist.

(1) The Common-law Definition Adopted.—In defining the crime of adultery under statutes of this kind, the courts of some of the states have, it seems, adopted the definition of the common law. Thus it is held that the sexual intercourse of a single man with a married woman is adultery in the man.² But it is considered that adultery can be committed only with a married woman, so that a man, though married, does not commit the crime by having intercourse with a single woman.³

(2) The Canon-law Definition Adopted.—Other authorities are more in accordance with the ecclesiastical law. They sustain the general proposition that an illicit sexual connection between two persons, either of whom is married, is adultery in the married person.⁴ Consequently a married man commits the crime by having intercourse with a single woman.⁵ But, according to the

and the punishment therefor fixed by the statutes of this state, and not otherwise," was followed by an enactment prescribing a punishment for, but not defining, adultery. On the principle that a statute which is enacted subsequently to a prior inconsistent one repeals the earlier enactment, it was held that an indictment for adultery would lie under this statute although it did not define the crime. Hood v. State, 56 Ind. 263, 26 Am. Rep. 21, 5 Cent. L. J. 35.

1. And, as Veazey, J., in State v. Searle, 56 Vt. 516, says: "So far as this difference exists in reported cases, it may have grown out of a difference in statutory provisions: not in statutory definitions of adultery, as those are rarely if ever found; but in provisions that indicate the legislative view, and control the judicial and legal view."

As to whether the definition of the common or the ecclesiastical law should be adopted in construing these statutes, Chilton, C.J., in Smitherman v. State, 27 Ala. 23, says: "It is my individual opinion that the term 'adultery,' as used in our code, should be construed with reference to the subject matter with which it stands connected. When used with reference to divorce, it is to be taken in the canonical sense of that term, and embraces the infidelity of the husband to the wife in his illicit sexual commerce with another woman, whether married or single, and so of the wife; but when considered with reference to the criminal law, it imports such sexual intercourse as violates another man's bed—as may entail a spurious issue upon the defrauded husband—'carnal knowledge of another man's wife,' as defined by the civil law. Wood's Inst. 272."

2. State v. Pearce, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 318; State v. Wallace, 9 N. H. 515; State v. Taylor, 58 N. H. 331. See Galbraith's Charge, 4 Am. L. Reg. 209.

Statutes Making the Intercourse of a Single Man with a Married Woman Adultery in the Man.—The statutes sometimes expressly provide that when the crime is committed between a married woman and a man who is unmarried, the man shall be deemed guilty of adultery. Massachusetts Rev. Stat., c. 130, § 1; Gen. Stat., c. 165, § 3; see Com. v. Ellwell, 2 Met. (Mass.) 190, 35 Am. Dec. 398; Com. v. Reardon, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 78; Wisconsin Rev. Stat., § 4721; see State v. Fellows, 50 Wis. 65, 1 Crim. L. Mag. 577; Minnesota Comp. Stat. 765, § 7; see State v. Armstrong, 4 Minn. 335. And see State v. Way, 6 Vt. 311.

Concerning a provision of this kind it has been said: "This special provision made to include an unmarried man would seem to indicate that the legislature were of the opinion that it required both parties to be married to constitute the crime of adultery, and that they only intended to change the rule in the particular case of connection between an unmarried man with a married woman." State v. Armstrong, 4 Minn. 335.

3. Hood v. State, 56 Ind. 263, 26 Am. Rep. 21, 5 Cent. L. J. 35; State v. Armstrong, 4 Minn. 335; State v. Lash, 16 N. J. L. 380, 32 Am. Dec. 397; Galbraith's Charge, 4 Am. L. Reg. 209.

Fornication.—In the jurisdictions where the rule stated in the text obtains, sexual intercourse between a man, whether married or not, and an unmarried woman, is fornication. State v. Chandler, 96 Ind. 591; State v. Pope, 109 N. Car. 849. See the title FORNICATION.

4. See Territory v. Whitcomb, 1 Mont. 359.

5. Helfrich v. Com., 33 Pa. St. 68, 75 Am. Dec. 579; Com. v. Kilwell, 1 Pittsb. (Pa.) 255. See also Morgan v. State, 11 Ala. 289.

In Massachusetts, under a statute making adultery an offense punishable in the common-law courts, but not defining the crime, it was held to include the act of a married man having sexual intercourse with an unmarried woman. Com. v. Call, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 509, 32 Am. Dec. 284. But this view was arrived at by reference to the preamble to an earlier act (Mass. Stat. 1784, c. 40), which preamble, in setting forth the object of the statute, stated it to be the enforcing "the due observance of the marriage covenants;" "thus," view adopted by this line of cases, an unmarried defendant cannot be convicted of adultery, although the other party to the act should be married.¹ Neither is an unmarried woman guilty of the crime by having intercourse with a married man.² Thus the criminal connection of a single man with a married woman is not adultery in him.³

says Dewey, J., "indicating its general application to both parties, rather than the more limited object of punishing the infidelity of the wife merely." The statute of 1785, c. 69, which authorized a divorce from the bonds of matrimony for adultery in either of the parties was also referred to, and it was argued from these instances that "whatever may have been the original meaning of the term 'adultery,' it is very obvious that we have in this commonwealth adopted the definition given to it by the ecclesiastical courts, and this not merely in relation to divorces, but also as descriptive of a public crime." And in Wisconsin, in the case of State v. Fellows, 50 Wis. 65, 1 Crim. L. Mag. 577, 11 Cent. L. J. 55, the statutory provisions upon which the case was based did not define the crime of adultery, but only prescribed the punishment for the offense. It was said that the statute, however, did not differ materially from that which was before the court in Hunter v. U. S., 1 Pin. (Wis.) 91, 39 Am. Dec. 277, and that the legislature may reasonably be supposed to have acted with reference to the definition of adultery given in that case, both when enacting laws for the punishment of the offense as well as in the statute in regard to divorce. Continuing, the court insisted upon the same definition of the crime as that given to adultery in the law of divorce.

In an early Georgia case arising under a statute punishing but not defining adultery it was held that a married man who had intercourse with a single woman was guilty of adultery. Cook v. State, 11 Ga. 53, 56 Am. Dec. 410. But it seems that under the Georgia Revised Code, section 4466, declaring that "any man and woman who shall commit adultery or fornication, or adultery and fornication, shall be severally indicted," etc., he would be guilty of the offense of adultery and fornication. Bigby v. State, 44 Ga. 344.

The early Vermont statute (Gen. Stat., c. 117), now changed in the Revised Laws of that state, contained a provision, peculiar to that enactment, which was construed to preclude the idea of adultery where the intercourse is with a single woman. But in State v. Searle, 56 Vt. 516, Veazey, J., said that if it were not for the controlling effect of this provision upon the question as to what constitutes adultery, "it would not be difficult to hold upon authority and reason that it is adultery for a married man to have sexual intercourse with an unmarried woman."

In some early Alabama cases, apparently arising under statutes punishing but not defining adultery, dicta are found which define adultery to be the illicit commerce of two persons of different sex, one of those being married to another person. State v. Hinton, 6 Ala. 864; State v. Glaze, 9 Ala. 283. But in a later Alabama case, that of Smitherman v.

State, 27 Ala. 24, Chilton, C. J., in a dictum on the subject, says that adultery within the code of that state, when considered with reference to the criminal law, means the "carnal knowledge of another man's wife." But in White v. State, 74 Ala. 31, though it is not a decision on this question, the definition of the first-mentioned cases is quoted seemingly with approval.

There are a number of other cases which define adultery to be criminal intercourse between a married person and one who is not such person's husband or wife (Miner v. People, 58 Ill. 591), or "the illicit intercourse of two persons of different sexes, where either is married" (see Hull v. Hull, 2 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 174), and hold that intercourse of a married man with a single woman is adultery. State v. Hutchinson, 36 Me. 261. But the terms of the statutes upon which these cases arose do not appear from the reports.

1. Adultery, it has been said, could, under the Pennsylvania Act of 1705, "only be committed by one who was married. The married party is guilty of adultery, the unmarried of fornication." Pearson, J., in Com. v. Kilwell, 1 Pittsb. (Pa.) 255.

Unmarried Party Principal in Second Degree.—Mr. Bishop says that if there is a state in which adultery is made a statutory felony, and at the same time no punishment is provided for fornication, the unmarried party to the act, where only one is married, will, by the unwritten law, be punishable for participating with the other as principal in the second degree, unless the statute is in terms to exclude this consequence. Bish. Stat. Cr., § 659.

2. Respublica v. Roberts, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 6, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 124; Com. v. Lafferty, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 672; Hunter v. U. S., 1 Pin. (Wis.) 91, 39 Am. Dec. 277. See Cook v. State, 11 Ga. 53, 56 Am. Dec. 410, for a statute under which the above-cited Virginia case was probably decided. See Com. v. Jones, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 557.

Referring to the case of Respublica v. Roberts, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 6, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 124, Judge Galbraith in a charge to the grand jury of Clarion county, Pennsylvania, said: "That the decision in this case stands, not upon legal principles, but upon mere usage, is most clearly and satisfactorily shown in the treatise of Chief Justice Lewis (Criminal Law of the United States) at p. 41, and must have been decided upon the principles of the strictest construction of the criminal law so as to extend it to no case not clearly brought within it." Continuing, the learned judge said that, if left on principle alone, he would say that the intercourse of an unmarried man with a married woman is adultery in the man. Galbraith's Charge, 4 Am. L. Reg. 209.

3. In an early Georgia case (Cook v. State,

(3) Points of Agreement between the Two Definitions.—Notwithstanding the radical disagreement between these two lines of authorities on the question of what constitutes the offense within the meaning of the statutes which punish, but do not define, adultery, it is apparent that they must agree in certain particulars.

(a) One of the Parties must be Married.—Thus it is evident that whether the common or the canon law definition is followed, adultery cannot be committed unless one of the parties to the carnal act is married to a person other than the participant therein.¹

Intercourse between Unmarried and Divorced Persons.—The bond of matrimony is abrogated by a valid decree of divorce. And therefore adultery is not committed by sexual commerce between a divorced person and an unmarried person.²

(b) Both Parties need Not be Married.—It is also clear that by neither of these definitions need both parties to the adulterous intercourse be married.³

(c) Unmarried Woman cannot Commit the Offense.—And it would seem that, unless there is some statutory definition establishing a different rule, a single woman cannot be guilty of adultery.⁴

b. UNDER STATUTES DEFINING THE OFFENSE.—In some of the states these questions are set at rest in a large measure, or wholly, by more or less complete statutory definitions of the crime of adultery.⁵ Thus statutes have been enacted rendering each party implicated in the act equally liable to punishment if either the man or woman be married.⁶

3. The Carnal Knowledge.—As to the carnal knowledge of the body of the woman which is necessary to constitute adultery, it has been held that the sexual intercourse need not be completed by emission; penetration is sufficient.⁷

4. The Criminal Intent—a. IN GENERAL.—As in the case of other crimes, the offense of adultery cannot be committed without a criminal intent.⁸

11 Ga. 53, 56 Am. Dec. 410), it was held that intercourse between a married man and a single woman was not adultery, but fornication, in the woman. But under the Revised Code, section 4460, providing that "any man and woman who shall commit adultery or fornication, or adultery and fornication, shall be severally indicted," etc., it was held that an unmarried woman who had intercourse with a married man was guilty of "adultery and fornication," and that an indictment charging her with fornication was not good. Bigby v. State, 44 Ga. 344.

1. Smitherman v. State, 27 Ala. 23; Buchanan v. State, 55 Ala. 154; Banks v. State, 96 Ala. 78; Miner v. People, 58 Ill. 59; State v. Thurstin, 35 Me. 205, 58 Am. Dec. 695.

Fornication.—Intercourse between two unmarried persons constitutes fornication. Banks v. State, 96 Ala. 78. See also, the title FORNICATION.

2. It is immaterial that the divorced person was the guilty cause of the divorce, and that such guilty cause of a divorce is, by statute, restrained from contracting another marriage. State v. Weatherby, 43 Me. 258, 69 Am. Dec. 59; Com. v. Putnam, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 136.

Fraudulent Divorce.—A decree of divorce void by reason of the defendant's fraud and want of jurisdiction of the court, is no defense to an indictment for adultery by means of a second marriage contracted in reliance upon the validity of the decree. State v. Whitcomb, 52 Iowa 85, 35 Am. Rep. 258.

3. The rule has been announced that the charge of adultery against a man can only be sustained by showing that both parties to the act were married. Galbraith's Charge, 4 Am. L. Reg. 209. This view is a result of a confusion of the principles of the common and ecclesiastical laws, and adopting from the former the requirement that the woman must be married and from the latter the rule that only the married person is guilty of the offense. It is clearly not the law. Cook v. State, 11 Ga. 53, 56 Am. Dec. 410; White v. State, 74 Ala. 31. See Com. v. Kilwell, 1 Pittsb. (Pa.) 255.

4. Single Woman.—A law writer of eminent authority says that probably no adjudication has affirmed that a single woman commits adultery by a connection with a married man. Bish. Stat. Cr., § 656.

5. Bish. Stat. Cr., § 658.

6. Maine Rev. Stat., c. 160, § 1. See State v. Weatherby, 43 Me. 258, 69 Am. Dec. 59. Pennsylvania Act of March 31, 1860, § 38; Purd. Dig. (9th ed.) 223. See State v. Wilson, 22 Iowa 364.

Intercourse Effected by Force.—Where the intercourse is effected by force, the woman is

b. INFERRED FROM CRIMINAL ACT.—But while it is true that the crime of adultery cannot be committed without a criminal intent, the intent may be inferred from the criminality of the act itself.¹

c. IGNORANCE OF LAW.—Hence it has been held that a defendant cannot show that there was in fact no criminal intent because he relied in good faith upon an invalid marriage, and acted in ignorance of the law.²

d. MISTAKE OR IGNORANCE OF FACT—Marriage Not Known to be Bigamous.—Where a marriage is void by reason of the fact that one of the parties thereto has a consort living, and the other is ignorant of that fact, the party who is without knowledge of the bigamous nature of the marriage does not, by sexual intercourse with the supposed husband or wife after the marriage and before such knowledge is obtained, become guilty of adultery.³

not guilty of adultery. State v. Henderson, 84 Iowa 161.

1. In an indictment for adultery the state need not allege, and is not called upon to prove, a criminal intent. State v. Cutshall, 109 N. Car. 764; State v. Cody, 111 N. Car. 725; Fox v. State, 3 Tex. App. 329, 30 Am. Rep. 144.

2. In State v. Goodenow, 65 Me. 30, it was held that where a man and woman are jointly indicted for adultery, the female defendant, having a lawful husband alive, cannot set up in defense that such husband had been married again, and that, on that account, they supposed they could lawfully marry, and that they were so advised by the magistrate who married them, they relying upon the opinion of the magistrate in good faith.

Marriage of White Person and Negro in Contravention of Statutory Inhibition.—Where the marriage of a free person of color and a white person is prohibited by statute, and is null and void, such persons cohabiting together come within the statutes against adultery and fornication. State v. Fore, 1 Ired. (N. Car.) 378.

Prosecution for either Adultery or Bigamy.—The offense of adultery is not necessarily involved in bigamy. The latter offense is completed by the second marriage without proof of subsequent cohabitation. And there may be a prosecution for living together in a state of adultery, although the parties may also be guilty of bigamy. Owens v. State, 94 Ala. 97. See the title BIGAMY.

3. A woman marrying and cohabiting with a married man, not knowing of his prior marriage, is not guilty of adultery. Vaughan v. State, 83 Ala. 55; Banks v. State, 96 Ala. 78.

But in certain Massachusetts cases it was said that the mere fact that the defendant married a married woman in ignorance of the fact that she had a husband living constituted no legal defense to an indictment for adultery. Com. v. Thompson, 6 Allen (Mass.) 591, 83 Am. Dec. 653; Com. v. Thompson, 11 Allen (Mass.) 23, 87 Am. Dec. 685.

Absence of Husband for Seven Years.—In Com. v. Thompson, 6 Allen (Mass.) 591, 83 Am. Dec. 653, it was held that if it appeared that the husband had absented himself from his wife, and remained absent for the space of seven years together, a man who should, under the existence of such circumstances, and not knowing her husband to have been living within that time, in good faith and in the belief that she had no husband, intermarry with her and cohabit with her as his wife, would not by such acts be criminally punishable for adultery, although it should subsequently appear that the former husband was then living.

But under the Massachusetts statute (Rev. Stat., c. 130) it has been held that the fact that the husband is absent and unheard of for any time less than seven years will not render innocent the marriage of the wife to another person, though she honestly believes at the time of the second marriage that her husband is dead. Com. v. Mash, 7 Met. (Mass.) 472.

Marriage of, and Cohabitation with, a Woman Who has Left Her Husband.—In Com. v. Thompson, 11 Allen (Mass.) 23, 87 Am. Dec. 685, it was held that a man may be convicted of adultery who in good faith and in the belief that she is a widow marries and cohabits with a woman who has left her husband and remained absent from him for more than seven years together without hearing of him, if, in fact, her husband is still living. But this case, in Mr. Bishop's opinion, was decided contrary to just principle (Bish. on Stat. Cr., § 663). "A woman married and lived a while with her husband, but his habits were dissipated and he did not provide for her, so she was compelled to leave him. She read in the newspapers of the killing of a man of his exact name, in a drunken row, and had no suspicion that the person killed could be any other than her husband. Thereupon she represented herself to be a widow. Eleven years after she last saw or heard from him she and another man intermarried, both acting in absolutely good faith, with no doubt of the death of the former husband. But, in fact, he was alive, and the second husband was indicted for adultery committed by cohabiting under the second marriage. He was convicted, and the court held the conviction to be correct." 1 Bish. Cr. L., § 3030, note, par. 18.

Burden of Proof of Knowledge or Ignorance.—It has been held that where it is proved that the defendant married and was living, in sexual intercourse with a person who already had a husband or wife living, the state has proven all that is incumbent on it to show the defendant's guilt, and it is for

Associated with an Unlawful Act.—On the other hand, when a man does that which is unlawful, and, in pursuing his criminal purpose, does that which constitutes another and different offense, he shall be held responsible for all the legal consequences of such criminal act.¹

Illicit Intercourse in Ignorance of Marriage.—Hence a person who has sexual intercourse with one who is married, though ignorant of the marriage, and supposing the act to be fornication, may nevertheless be guilty of adultery.²

5. Consent of the Woman Not Essential.—The consent of the woman to the carnal intercourse is not necessary to constitute the crime of adultery in the man; he is guilty of the offense, although the connection with the woman is accomplished by force and against her will,³ or, at the time the act was committed, she was in such a state of stupefaction as to be incapable of consent.⁴

IV. LIVING IN ADULTERY.—Ordinarily a single act of sexual intercourse may fall within the definition of adultery,⁵ but statutes which, while of varying phraseology, in effect punish the offense only when the adulterous intercourse extends over a more or less extended period of time, have been enacted in a number of our states.⁶

V. EVIDENCE—1. In General.—Whether the question arises in a criminal prosecution, a proceeding for divorce, or an action for the civil injury, the rules governing the proof of the offense are, with a few exceptions, practically the same.⁷

2. Of the Carnal Act.—From the nature of the offense of adultery it is not, save in exceptional cases, susceptible of direct and positive proof; it can more often only be established by evidence more or less circumstantial in its nature.

a. CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.—Hence it is considered that direct proof of the carnal act is not necessary; it is sufficient to show circumstances from which the jury may reasonably infer the guilt of the parties.⁸ So it has been the defendant to show ignorance of the prior marriage. State v. Cody, 111 N. Car. 725; State v. Cutshall, 109 N. Car. 764. See Fox v. State, 3 Tex. App. 329, 30 Am. Rep. 144.

On the other hand it has been held that in such case the burden is upon the state to prove the knowledge. Banks v. State, 96 Ala. 78. And the proof or presumption of such knowledge must be "strong enough to repel all reasonable doubt." Vaughan v. State, 83 Ala. 55. See the title REASONABLE DOUBT.

Suspicion or Jealousy of Defendant's Wife.—The suspicion or jealousy of the defendant's wife cannot be adduced as evidence against him. State v. Crowley, 13 Ala. 172. See Graham v. State, 28 Tex. App. 9, 19 Am. St. Rep. 809.

Neighborhood Rumor.—Evidence of rumor and talk in the neighborhood is admissible to prove the adultery. Belcher v. State, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 63. See also Overstreet v.

held that the act of adultery may be proved by evidence that a man and woman occupied the same bed and room, undressed, in the night time,¹ or even that they occupied a room with a bed in it most of the night.²

Conduct, Situation, and Opportunity of the Parties.—It is competent to prove the situation, circumstances, and opportunities of the parties to the offense.³

Visiting Bawdy-house.—It seems to be competent to show that the defendant visited a bawdy-house with the woman with whom he is charged with being guilty of adultery.⁴

Character or Reputation of the Woman for Chastity.—And evidence of the character or reputation for chastity of a woman with whom the adultery of the defendant is alleged to have been committed is admissible.⁵

b. CORROBORATIVE EVIDENCE.—There is a certain class of facts which, though occurring at a time different from that of the act charged, and not alone sufficient to justify a conviction,⁶ may nevertheless be adduced in corroboration of more immediate proof of the carnal act, and to establish the probability of the act having been committed.⁷

Other Like Acts.—The general rule of criminal evidence, that the commission of other, though similar, offenses by the defendant cannot be proven to show the likelihood of his having committed the offense charged, has, it is said, been somewhat relaxed in cases where the offense consists of illicit intercourse between the sexes.⁸

Before the Offense Charged.—And the rule is now quite generally accepted that when the fact of adultery is alleged to have been committed within a limited period of time it is not necessary that the evidence be confined to that period, and proof of acts anterior to the time alleged may be adduced in explanation of other acts of the like nature within that period.⁹

The Acquaintance, Conduct, and Familiarity of the Parties involved in the charge are material subjects of inquiry, and pertinent to the issue. People v. Girdler, 65 Mich. 68.

Driving, Fishing, etc., Together.—The fact that the parties to the alleged crime had several times taken buggy rides, or had gone fishing together, etc., was held admissible in evidence on the ground that, when adultery is charged, the acquaintance, conduct, and familiarity of the parties involved in such charge are material subjects of inquiry, if not too remote. People v. Girdler, 65 Mich. 68. And see State v. Stubbs, 108 N. Car. 774.

Acts Innocent in Themselves must be Connected with Acts Tending to Show a Criminal Intimacy.—But in a prosecution for adultery it was held prejudicial error to permit a witness to testify that he had seen the accused persons together near some haystacks, where there was at the same time nothing in his testimony from which it could be inferred that they were engaged in illicit intercourse. State v. Clawson, 30 Mo. App. 139.

In Blackman v. State, 36 Ala. 295, it was held that if familiarities indicating adultery are proven against a male defendant, evidence is then admissible that the alleged particeps criminis is generally reputed as unchaste. Blackman v. State, 36 Ala. 295.

But it was held that evidence that the accused was "foolishly fond of women" is inadmissible in rebuttal of evidence of good character. The phrase "fondness for women" does not, ex vi termini, convey the meaning of lustful desire and its unlawful gratification. Cauley v. State, 92 Ala. 71.

6. Showing acts of familiarity or sexual intercourse at a time different from that of the act charged, is not alone sufficient to justify a conviction. Brevaldo v. State, 21 Fla. 789.
